Law, of course, is not retroactive. A law enacted October 15, 1914, could have no application to any case pending in the courts prior to its enactment. The Clayton Act could not under any circumstances be held to apply to the Hatters' case. The Clayton law went into effect at once and is operative now and for the future.

Statements therefore intended to create the impression that the Hatters' decision demonstrates the inadequacy of the labor provision of the Clayton Act are mischievous and false, and have their origin in ignorance or deliberate intent to deceive the workers.

The courts have not yet interpreted the Clayton Act, but we have the avowed declarations of those who enacted the law as to its application.

Section 6 will prevent the institution of suits similar to that against the Danbury hatters for normal trade union activity since October 15, 1914.

Section 20 declares lawful the acts for which the Danbury hatters were declared guilty and sentenced to pay threefold damages.

If any doubt the correctness of our contention, let them read the endorsement of former Attorney-General George W. Wickersham, who opposed the enactment of Labor's contentions into law and who surely can in no way be accused of an attitude of mind favorable to the workers. In regard to the Clayton Act, he stated:

"Had the Clayton Law been then in force, it seems clear that the defendants' (hatters) acts would not have been illegal."

"But by force of the Clayton Law, whether any of the acts enumerated in the second paragraph of section 20 be done singly, or in concert, henceforth they are equally legal in the eyes of the federal law. It is therefore apparent that the labor organizations have secured a statutory reversal of the principles of the decision in the Danbury Hatters' case and the legalization of the boycott as a lawful instrument to ensure the dominance of organized labor, thus substituting the Gompers conception of liberty for that of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States and Abraham Lincoln."*

In all the history of the working people of this or any other country, no such declaration has been enacted into law as was secured by the A. F. of L. in the enactment of the labor provisions of the Clayton Antitrust Act, which went into effect October 15, 1914. That law declares that the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce. It declares lawful the exercise of the normal activities of the labor movement of the United States. It gives freedom for the toilers of our country to work out their every-day problems of life, and to continue earnestly and persistently, as well as rationally, the struggle for a better and truer life for all.

*For verification as to the above conception of the labor provisions of the Clayton Act, see the Alumni Register, December, 1914, of the University of Pennsylvania, containing legal opinion of Hon. George W. Wickersham, former U. S. Attorney-General, whom no one accuses to be a friend of organized labor.—S. G.

NATIONAL UNION OF CATERING WORKERS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

Despite the war in Europe and notwithstanding innumerable handicaps, there has been organized in Great Britain and Ireland a new Catering Industry Union with the title National Union of Catering Workers, which organization was, so to speak, erected on the ashes of the Amalgamated Union of Hotel, Club and Restaurant Workers, an organization at one time which seemed on the right road, but owing to the lax management of its executive officials was allowed to die a lingering death. The new union seems to begin with better prospects and a larger conception of the needs of the Catering Industry in Great Britain and Ireland. The new union is an Allied Craft organization somewhat similar to our International Union, for it includes all of the workers at the industry, something which its immediate predecessor made but a half-hearted attempt to accomplish.

Mr. E. L. Pratt is the general secretary, and those who know of his efforts can appreciate that the new union starts off with an official who brings to his task a world-wide experience in the catering industry and an extended knowledge of the trade union movement of Europe. Brother Pratt has written a number of splendid articles in connection with his efforts to interest the catering industry workers to organize, and has a considerable following in Great Britain and Ireland. Brother Pratt wrote us recently and we take the liberty of reproducing one paragraph of his letter, which reads as follows:

"We fully appreciate the necessity of having the Bar Workers organized along with the Waiters, Waitresses, Cooks, etc., and shall, therefore, be glad to learn that the segregation movement in America has failed entirely. You have the finest organization of Catering and Bar Workers in the world, and I trust that your members will, if they require advice, look to the men who have made the union what it is, rather than to those who pretend to know what ought to be done, and are never able to do anything themselves."

Evidently Brother Pratt has kept his weather eye on affairs in America, and has noted the growth of our International Union, as well as some of the obstacles which it has been confronted with. Something like twelve years ago we were in communication with fellow workers in London who were anxious to establish a Catering Industry Workers' Union; in one of our communications we directed attention to what we regarded as the weakest plank in their platform, and that was their seeming intention of depending on the London County Council and Parliament to eliminate some of the most flagrant abuses with which the workers in the Catering Industry had to contend. We advised then and have had no reason to change our view meanwhile, that any Catering Industry Union, no matter where it was established, would have to depend largely on its numerical strength, its militancy and its powers to meet the attack of the proprietors with the knowledge that its members would respond when called on, and strike if need be in order to win battles. That if we attempted in America to create an organization whose sole dependency was an appeal to the city, county, State or National law-making bodies, it would prove a failure from its inception; that we had succeeded in creating our International Union by following out one idea: organize first and seek improvement later; that finances were necessary and the greater the general funds of the organization the more heed the employers would pay to our reasonable request for better wages and shorter hours.

We devoted considerable of our spare time in writing and advising our fellow workers in England, but they seemed to be obsessed with the view that they could secure redress from the law makers of their country by methods which they claimed to possess but failed to explain. We urged our fellow workers across the pond to establish a trade publication, explaining that with such a vehicle they could reach the men and women engaged in the industry quicker and more effectively than by any other method known; that our experience with our publication has taught us that a publication devoted to organization matter exclusively and no attempt to cover the technical end of the industry would secure attention and convert non-members.

There have been several attempts at organization made since and, without exception, they appear to carry the idea that genuine reform can be secured for them through the authorities. The last effort, the one which Brother Pratt is the leading spirit, seems to have laid its plans along trade union lines and somewhat similar to ours; and, unless the conflict going on in Europe acts as a stumbling block, we expect to see the National Union of Catering Workers become an established and permanent organization. The war prevents our brothers in Great Britain from communicating with their co-workers in German and Austrian territory, but they are anxious that word shall be sent to those countries of the new movement in Great Britain and Ireland.

Associated with Brother Pratt as officers are Brothers Oliver Bradish as treasurer, W. T. Bacon and W. F. Watson as trustees. They have established offices at 21 High street, Bloomsbury, London, W. C., England. We tender to the new union, its officers and members a hearty welcome to the organized catering industry workers' field of the world, we hope that their measure of success will be filled to overflowing, and that in the very near future the calamity which is sapping the manhood of the countries at war will cease, thus enabling the workers to fight their real enemy: the selfish and grasping employer. WHAT'S GOING ON IN TEXAS.

The MIXER AND SERVER tries to keep in touch with every State and political unit on the North American continent; at times the task is a very difficult one, but where we occasionally fall down we are gratified to observe that our members are on the job seeing to it that nothing is "slipped over" without raising an objection and endeavoring to prevent further obstacles being placed in our path.

Many of our readers have read with pleasure and interest the articles by Brother E. D. Skinner, of Local 848, El Paso, Texas. He has shown marked attention to the political situation in that State, and while the following article written by him and printed in the El Paso City and County Advocate in its July 16, 1915, number, will be of no immediate value to our folks in Texas, it is offered for the purpose of directing attention to the points made and to warn our members in other parts of the country to be on their guard and prevent, by every legitimate means, the enactment of such legislation as will not only prove injurious to them but is a direct effort to curb the voting power of trades unionists. The following is the article by Brother Skinner:

"LEGAL JOKERS."

By E. D. SKINNER.

We may not all of us have any special reasons for being particularly proud of the fact, but still many of us, especially those with early day Western frontier experiences, may have gained a passing acquaintance with our great national game of draw poker and the value of the "joker" in the "cut and slash" variety of this entertaining pastime, may appeal to such as a pertinent illustration of the legal "jokers" that have, from time to time, been inserted in some of our fairest appearing national, State and local laws by the "powers that be" for their own special benefit.

On the twenty-fourth day of this month the tax-payers of the great State of Texas will be asked to vote for a certain amendment to their State constitution. This will be presented to them for their consideration under the title of a proposed amendment to article No. 2 of section No. 6. The ostensible object of this amendment is to give such of the legal voters as are compelled to be absent from home for any good reason on election day a chance to vote wherever they may be. Ostensibly the proposed amendment is a very praiseworthy attempt to remedy the present injustice of practically disfranchising those legal voters who are compelled, by the exigencies of their employment or the not always disinterested caprice of their employer, to be absent from their home precinct on the day of election. Up to the time that some inquisitive person discovered that there was a "joker" in this amendment, it was well advertised as being intended for this very laudable purpose and nothing was said about its concealing any other objects or purposes.

Under our present law, any adult male of alien birth may vote at our elections, providing he has conformed to the requirements demanded of our own citizens, such as one year's residence in the State, etc., and providing that he has made official declaration of his intention of becoming a citizen of the United States not less than six months previous to the election. It should be borne in mind that an alien has to make this declaration under oath and that such declaration legally abrogates his allegiance to any foreign power and makes him as amenable to our laws as any of our native born citizens. The "joker" in the proposed amendment is a short sentence forbidding residents of foreign birth from voting until they have taken out their final naturalization papers. Since this "joker" has been discovered there has been some attempt on the part of the advocates of the amendment to defend it under a plea of "purifying our ballot" and such talk but, even now, there is a noticeable disinclination on their part to discuss this feature of their pet measure any more than they have to.

The manner of the discovery of the "joker" is in itself illuminating. The proposed amendment was loudly advertised as being especially intended for the benefit of some twenty-five thousand railroad employees of the State. A certain gentleman discovered the fact that every avowed prohibitionist in the State was working "tooth and toe-nail" for the passage of the amendment. Well knowing that the prohibition organization of the State has no special love for railroad employes or, for that matter, for any class of working men—excepting when it is looking for votes or contributions—this gentleman commenced looking for the “nigger in the woodpile.”

This little “joker” in this proposed amendment would actually disfranchise some thirty-five thousand of the present legal voters of the State. These thirty-five thousand are almost universally opposed to prohibition. Prohibition was defeated, the last time it was voted upon by the State, by a majority of about seventy-five thousand. According to these figures, prohibition would have a majority of eight thousand in the State if these thirty-five thousand votes could be killed.

That is “nigger” enough for one “woodpile.”

But that is not all. These thirty-five thousand are almost universally working men. Their disfranchisement would, therefore, reduce the “labor vote” of the State by something like thirty-five thousand.

The real affection of the prohibitionists for the working man is thereby finely illustrated.

The feature of the amendment that allows legal voters to vote outside their own precincts when compelled to be away from home on election day would not actually affect more than two or three thousand voters. That it is a serious injustice to these two or three thousand to practically disfranchise them as they now are, is a fact about which there can be no argument. But the net total result of this proposed amendment (with the “joker” in it) would be a loss of something more than thirty thousand votes for the anti-prohibitionists and for the laboring class of our population.

If a majority of the legal residents of the State of Texas want prohibition and if they want the capitalists to obtain their fill of “special privileges” and if they so declare in a fair election, we will “take our medicine” and shut up. But we do not want these things stuffed down our throats, while we sleep, by the disfranchisement route.

ONLY A SKIRMISH, YET IT WAS ONE OF THE WORLD'S DECISIVE BATTLES.

Few Probably Remember About the Battle of Valmy, the Result of Which Was the Rise to Power of the French Under a Republican Form of Government.

By W. A. PHELON.

Everyone remembers Waterloo and its thrilling tragedy, but very few seem to remember the battle of Valmy. This was one of the most important battles ever fought—it is ranked among the twelve or fifteen decisive combats of history—and it was contested on the very field where the allies and Germans are now grappling—yet it is forgotten. It was not only an all-important battle, but it showed how an invasion sometimes may be checked and choked when it seems to be successful to the last detail.

In 1792, when the French republic sprang to life, Austria and Prussia hurried huge armies into France, and, at first, sent the untrained republican levies scurrying before them. Dumouriez, the French commander, finally took up a strong position at Valmy; the allies came up, inspected the spot and opened fire. The French cannon replied; there were a few movements and maneuvers, but no charges or general mix-ups. Towards nightfall the allies decided that the position was too strong; they fell back, their courage sank as they backed off, and at last they fled across the Rhine, not to invade France again for twenty-two years. At Valmy, although 300,000 men were present or nearby, only 800 were killed or wounded on each side; it was only a tiny skirmish—yet from that date can be counted the rise and power of France during the long years that followed.

Courtesy In War.

So far as actual, tangible knowledge of the war is concerned, the great struggle is extremely like Mark Twain's description of the combats between the knights of old. “Just ghosts struggling in a fog.” We know no more about the war than we do of the duels between the Knights of the Round Table. Lurid, thrilling stories come in every day, much padded and sensationalized en route—but for all we actually have learned, the war may be like the 1813 campaign between the French and English in the Pyrenees. Says Napier, in his history of the Peninsular war: “The gallant adversaries had come to mutual understandings that saved many lives. A new general, commanding a British division, was worried one morning at seeing the French drawn up along a hill directly before him. ‘That hill will cost at least 1,000 lives,’ said he, ‘and we will not need to hold it even over night, yet it is necessary for our maneuvers!’

At this juncture an old sergeant of cavalry, waving a flag of truce, trotted forward, and could be seen holding conversation with a French officer. As he rode back the French were seen packing up and beginning to go down the hill. “It's all right, general,” explained the old sergeant, “I told them that we wanted the hill for a while, and that they could have it back at three this afternoon, so it's all arranged, and nobody gets shot!”

Napoleon Tactics Again.

We learn from experience, and it is evident, even this early in the war, that some of the contenders are making good use of painful, humiliating lessons taught them long ago. The Russians, in their maneuvers and attacks upon the Austrians, are working exactly as Napoleon worked against the Czar's myriads at Austerlitz in 1805. Upon very much the same territory as the part of Austria where the fighting now goes on—a land of small lakes, rough rivers and frequent swamps—the great emperor so maneuvered that the Russians had to fight with these swamps and ponds behind them. When they were broken by his artillery and cavalry, and retreated, they were so tangled in these natural death-traps that 3,000 of them were drowned and 19,000 laid down their arms, out of a total force of 82,000. Now, so all the information indicates, the Russians are handling their campaign just as Napoleon handled his warfare in the same territory, and with much the same success.

The British, a few years ago, learned more things in South Africa than they imagined were in the book of battles. The Boers taught them everything needful—things the Englishmen have been putting into use against the Germans. How to ambush either infantry or cavalry; how to make a small artillery move so fast that it made up for lack of strength; how to hold a position with the minimum of defensive loss and the maximum of trouble for the enemy; how to attack with little loss by taking advantage of the nature of the ground—all these tricks the Boers had in their repertoire, and the English learned them at great cost in men and money. Now, as the reports show, the British outfit both the French and Germans, simply because the Germans are a stolid machine, the French have no real experience of war, and the British know everything needful. There are enough veterans of African and Indian service with the British regiments to direct the work, and to make every move an effective one.

Strange Alliances.

A tabulation of European alliances through the different wars of the past 200 years may surprise many readers, and will surely show how unstable are the friendships of nations. Here is the record:

1707-13—England, Austria, one Spanish faction, and some German States vs. France, Bavaria and a rival Spanish faction.

1745-48—England and Prussia vs. Austria, France and Russia.

1755-63—England vs. France, Spain and the rajahs of East India.

1775-83—England vs. the American colonies, France, Spain and the rajahs.

1792-1801—England, Spain, Prussia, Russia, Austria, Italy and Turkey vs. France.

1805—England, Russia and Austria vs. France, Spain, Denmark and Prussia.

1806—England, Russia and Prussia vs. France, Spain, Denmark and Rhine countries.

1809—England, Spain and Portugal vs. France, Germany, Russia, Italy, Holland and Belgium.

1812—England, Spain, Portugal and Russia vs. France, Rhine States, Prussia, Austria, Holland, Belgium, Italy and the United States.

1813-15—England, Spain, Portugal, Russia, Germany, Austria, Italy, Sweden, Holland and Belgium vs. France.

1853-1856—England, France, Italy and Turkey vs. Russia.

1859—France and Italy vs. Austria.

1866—Prussia and Italy vs. Austria and Bavaria.

THE DEEPER UNPREPAREDNESS.

Now that men's minds are naturally directed towards national preparedness for self-defense, it is most fitting to consider conditions which concern national health, vigor, and development. There come to all nations, whether suddenly or with warning, those tests which prove the spirit—the power of endurance of the people.

Tests disclose weakness or strength, wisdom or folly, understanding or careless indifference. They test policies and institutions. They disclose along what lines future welfare lies. Those things which constitute preparedness for peace, also constitute preparedness for defense.

No nation can possess endurance whose citizens bear the inevitable consequences of sweat-shop labor, long workdays, low wages, insanitary conditions. Physical health and vigor affect progress along all other lines. Those who toil with their hands constitute the rank and file of the citizenship of the nations—if they are underfed, partly clothed, physically stunted, their condition is a menace to the nation whether in peace or in war. When the citizens deteriorate physically, the nation will decline. War may reveal unsuspected weakness, but that weakness will manifest itself under conditions of peace though somewhat more slowly, or worse still, less observably.

That nation whose industries exploit human workers during times of peace will be burdened by a mass of unemployable, discarded workers, and in times of war will find its existence threatened because of inability to produce supplies and because of dearth of fit soldiers.

Those policies and those institutions which conserve human life and which afford opportunities for the development of every citizen, constitute the greatest safeguard of the nation. The citizens must be protected, but that protection must come through their own educated initiative, so that the nation shall consist of men and women conscious of their own dignity and importance, aware of their own powers and intelligently following a course of action to promote their best interests.

Individual initiative and resourcefulness are the most valuable qualities of a nation. They must not be subordinated to the outward forms of national welfare but rather must they be the ultimate ideals of all conservation policies.

To realize these ideals the children of the nation must be assured the right to be well-born, to grow and to play. Real educational opportunities must be accessible for all and must meet the needs of all.

When maturity is reached, the individual citizens must have the right to a voice in determining the conditions under which they shall live and work and they must be assured the right to organize, to express their will in these matters. This means that society and all its agencies must put an end to all tactics that obstruct the progress and welfare of the workers, instead of outlawing or ostracizing labor organizations or punishing efforts of wage-earners to participate in determining conditions of work.

In war time every nation expects loyal support for its wage-earners. It expects organized cooperation in defense on the battlefield and in making munitions of war, it expects understanding of the national interests and needs. These things are equally necessary in time of peace and must be developed in times of peace; they can not be called into existence suddenly. During times of peace, workers have long demanded that their physical well-being and their labor power should be conserved and that they should be granted real freedom to organize to make these demands effective. There is not a single nation that has generously and unreservedly granted these rights to the wage-earners. By such a policy every nation assumes responsibility for national peril and foregoes its right to full and free patriotic sacrifices from its citizens.

A nation which fails to stimulate and to develop qualities which work for voluntary associated effort for the common welfare, condemns its citizens to stultifying practices and effects of compulsion. Preparedness in national resources, whether for war or peace, is secondary to the development of national characteristics which underlie fundamental preparedness for life and growth. There must be some strong force dedicated to the cause of humanity that shall compel the incorporation of these truths in national policy—there must be industrial and humanitarian statesmanship as well as political. Even now the great industrial interests are planning to protect themselves in the convulsive shock that will come at the end of the present European war, when present currents of industry and commerce will be suddenly changed.

The citizen wage-earners of our country will be in as great need of protection as industries and commerce. Methods and policies must be devised in advance. The wage-earners are entitled to participate in determining these matters which so vitally concern them.

Will America profit from the experience of other nations and follow the highest wisdom for insuring national preparedness and welfare?

And the men and women of labor can to a great degree answer and help to solve this vital question. They must organize, unite and federate; they must learn and practice the principles of fraternity and solidarity.

A long pull—a strong pull—a pull all together. Now for the three million mark!

—American Federationist.

ALONG THE FIRING LINE

THE PERILS OF REFORM.

By DOCTOR JOHN EMERSON ROBERTS.

There is good in everything and there is bad in everything; everything that mankind uses is good or bad according to the way it is used. This applies to everything that enters into the life of men. Eating may become gluttony; drinking may become drunkenness; love may become lust; power may become oppression; government may become tyranny. The wrong use of a thing does not condemn the thing—it condemns the use of it. Gluttony is not the fault of meat, it is the fault of the meat eater; yet we do not prohibit the use of meat. Drunkenness is not the fault of drink, it is the fault of the drinker. The Prohibitionist goes at reform hind end foremost. If we should adopt his philosophy and prohibit everything that is or may be abused, there would not be anything left, for everything is abused somewhere by somebody. The professional Prohibitionist is the most dogmatic of all so-called reformers; he asserts that the drinking of any kind of beverages containing any amount of alcohol is evil, and only evil, and therefore should be prohibited by law. He does not reason or argue, he asserts and demands; he appeals to prejudice, to passion and to the unthinking mind. He knows that it is easier to arouse feeling than to awaken thought. He divides society into two classes: the "wet" and the "dry," and in all of his talks implies that the "drys" are angelic beings, almost too good for this earth; while the "wets" are a depraved sort tobogganing towards Hades. He goes to the churches and gets the odor of sanctity upon his meetings, and then encourages the inference that all who are opposed to him are opposed to the church, religion and to morals generally. A great many people are thus stampeded into the Prohibition camp, while many others who are opposed to Prohibition remain silent out of fear of being denounced by the professional Prohibitionist.

That is one reason for the present prohibition situation being what it is. Another is that there is a certain class of advocates, each of whom believes that his own scheme, no matter how exclusive and extreme it may be, is panacea for all the woes of this immortal world, and that to question the soundness and efficiency of such scheme is indicative not only of foolishness, but of depravity and irreligion.

There are other reasons why so little progress is being made in the settlement of the so-called Prohibition question, and why every so often it pops up again and is subjected again to the old-time treatment of argument and counter-argument.

One reason is that ground has not been agreed upon that is sufficiently broad to serve as a rallying place for all varieties of anti-alcoholic sentiment. There is enough sentiment of that kind in existence if it could be made co-operative instead of competitive and mutually antagonistic.

The issue, however, will not be decided by passion or prejudice or denunciation—it will be decided by reason and deliberate judgment.

From time immemorial alcoholic beverages in some form or other have been used by mankind, and are still being used by the majority of men. If alcohol were as poisonous as the professional Prohibitionists and paid reformers say it is, it would have killed off the entire human race ages since. The fact seems to be that it is hurtful to some and not hurtful to others. The same thing can be said about strawberries. Some can not eat them without becoming violently ill, but whether one does or does not eat strawberries or drink wine is a matter of personal concern to be determined by private judgment.

A man must possess an awful egotism who sets himself up as a pattern for all the rest of society. That egotism becomes the meanest and the worst of despots when it seeks to force its own manner of acting and thinking upon others, whether by legislation or any other means of compulsion.

The vital question is not—whether drinking wine or eating strawberries is harmful; or whether it produces poverty or riches, morality or immorality. It is not even a question of whether Prohibition prohibits. There is really one transcendent question: It is whether we shall confer upon the State the authority to invade our private lives, to cross the threshold of our homes, and there, by force and coercion, dictate and control our conduct.

Prohibition is an insidious attack upon the dignity of the individual. Garbed in the vestments of religion and professing its love for mankind, Prohibition is an assassin aiming a death blow at liberty. Professional Prohibitionists and paid reformers may sneer at liberty, nevertheless it is the one thing for which the race has struggled longest and suffered most.

You can not make man moral and upright or woman virtuous by legislation; and if you could, I for one, would rather struggle and fail as a free man than be upright and virtuous and compelled to say that my virtue is the product of the State Legislature.

Liberty has its perils, and life has its perils also. The only way to keep a man absolutely free from danger is to lock him up or kill him. The penitentiary and the cemetery are model communities where men are absolutely safe.

The professional Prohibitionist and paid reformer is vehement, hysterical, perfervid, lachrymose and dangerous. He is dangerous because well-meaning people are misled, the ignorant taken advantage of, the uninformed deceived, and the weak swept off their feet. The professional Prohibitionist and paid reformer is a greater menace to the peace, welfare and prosperity of society than is the open saloon. Intemperance is an evil and the professional Prohibitionist and paid reformer is a nuisance. Of course, there are many sincere Prohibitionists. A woman bearing on her face the traces of suffering, said to me: "If you had ever had intemperance in your own family you would be a Prohibitionist." I sympathize with that woman, with every one that suffers, man or woman, from any cause, their own or others—I sympathize with them all; and yet that woman's suffering constitutes no argument for Prohibition. We would not be justified in changing the fundamental laws of the land in subverting the habits of the majority of the people—in ignoring a custom that has prevailed through all ages of man, and in abridging the freedom of all people—for the sake of one unfortunate.

A little lad of seven years was one day last week struck by an automobile and seriously injured. He is lying today on a bed of pain; he must lie there for six or seven weeks. The automobile has come near me—it has brought suffering into my household, there is an element of danger connected with it.

The last reports taken by United States Census Bureau give 3,183 deaths caused by supposed alcoholism, against 3,756 deaths caused by automobiles; and the Prohibitionists preach "save the boy"—good idea. Why not? Authentic reports say automobiles killed last year 2,608 children between the ages of three and sixteen. The latest Government reports claim only fifteen died between the ages of three and nineteen through supposed alcoholism.

Bankers' associations throughout the whole country have and are now giving serious consideration to the automobile as the chief cause of poverty of the so-called middle classes. Am I justified then in asking for the prohibition of automobiles?

During the year 1914 there was one divorce in Cook County for every six marriages. That is to say, one in six found the flowers of love and blessedness withered in the fires of jealousy or hatred or frozen in the frost of indifference and neglect. The proportion of unhappy marriages is vastly more than the proportion of drunkards to those who drink. Shall we then advocate the abolition of marriage because it brings unhappiness and shipwreck to some? The habits and customs of normal people can not be prescribed and limited by the necessities or suffering of the unfortunate. The great majority of normal men and women can not have their lives prescribed by the necessities of weaklings, defectives and derelicts.

A man once said to me, "I take a drink whenever I feel like it; I don't care for it especially; if they want Prohibition, why not let them have it, it won't hurt me!" That amazing statement—amazing for its indifference and moral obliquity—was made by a college man and a lawyer. His argument was that because Prohibition would not hurt him he was willing to see it come. There are thousands whom it would not affect—I am one of them. Personally, it is nothing to me. If there was not a saloon in all the world I would not be homesick or lonesome; but look at the fallacy of that position and see how sordid, how selfish and how ignoble it is; for if they can take away one man's liberty for any specious reason, they can take away some other man's liberty for some other reason. No man's liberty is safe unless we defend the liberty and freedom of all men. I must defend the freedom of every other man in order to make my own secure. Therein is one of the fundamental fallacies of the doctrine of Prohibition. Once admit the principle that a majority can dictate in personal and private affairs to all of society, then the lives of all may be changed as majorities change. The vegetarians with a majority may prohibit meat; the Christian Scientists with a majority may prohibit drugs; the Catholics with a majority may prohibit Protestantism; the Protestants with a majority may prohibit Catholicism; the Free Thinkers with a majority may prohibit both Catholic and Protestant, while, if the country became so dry and disgusted with Prohibition, there might come a time when a majority would compel everybody to drink.

The fact is, that statutes are passed by legislatures, while laws are made by the custom and will of society. That only is a law, as Mayor Jones of Toledo said, which the people will back up. There is no short cut to the millennium; no cross-road path to Paradise.

Some professional Prohibitionists and paid reformers say there is no such thing as personal liberty. The statement is partly true and partly false and is usually intended to deceive. Society is based, not upon a sacrifice of personal liberty—it is rather a compact whereby individuals make certain concessions in order that they may secure an excess of liberty. It can be readily seen that a man has more personal liberty in a city of two or three millions of people than he could possibly have in the heart of a vast wilderness, provided of course, that professional Prohibitionists and other paid reformers are not in control.

If the nature of men could be changed by statute we could make this world over very rapidly. The Prohibitory statutes of Maine, Kansas and the States in the South have not changed the citizens of those States. They had a reform spasm in Leavenworth, Kansas, the other day and went out and found eighty-three blind tigers. The Chief of Police of Topeka reports twenty-two hundred arrests for the year 1914—more than six hundred of which were for drunkenness. Ex-Governor St. John of Kansas, in a speech in Chicago before the Kansas Society, stated that there was drunkenness in only nine Kansas counties, and that there were only 753 prisoners in the penitentiary. Governor Capper in his paper, Topeka Daily Capitol, March 11, 1915, insisted that "The Caudill Bill" be made a law. The Bill provides for records of all shipments of liquor into Kansas. Kansas has had prohibition for thirty years. The reformers claim prohibition closes jails! This fat or frenzy of making people good by legislation is nothing new—on the contrary, it is a return to the spirit and practice of the Colonies, when they made their Blue Laws.

They solemnly declared by law in the Colony of New Haven what men and women should wear, what they should eat, what instruments of music they might play upon and what they must let alone and what they should do and not do on the Sabbath day. The modern frenzy for legislation is fast driving us into the folly and fanaticism of the Blue Laws.

In the State of Texas it is unlawful to play checkers, dominoes or cards in any public place. In Portland, Oregon, the mince pies are examined lest they contain an unlawful amount of alcohol. In Alabama, no newspaper can be circulated which carries a liquor advertisement. In the entire State of Oklahoma, as well as in six counties in Missouri and forty-one counties in Texas, no billiard table or bowling alley is allowed. It is easy enough to find someone that is opposed to some particular thing and just as easy to find some legislator who will introduce the Bill prohibiting it.

Prohibition has made bootlegging a regular business. Men in that trade have regular routes, just as rural mail carriers have; they are protected and shielded by their customers simply because their customers want the thing and believe they have the right to buy it. Private stills and moonshiners have increased in the Southern States, and everywhere, there has been bred and fostered a defiance of and contempt for law. Cities have been deprived of large portions of their revenues and live towns have been reduced to the condition of morgues and cemeteries, but worse than all this—if anything can be worse—is this: The hue and cry about Prohibition has diverted the attention of people away from really needed reforms. The professional Prohibitionist and paid reformer pretends to yearn with compassion for the laboring classes. If he were sincere in his regard for the laborer, he would lend his aid in taking away special privileges from the few and giving equal justice to all.

There is reason to believe that the privileged few, who are the beneficiaries of our present system, are encouraging the hue and cry of the prohibition movement in order that the attention of the people may be diverted and the day of reckoning be delayed as long as possible.

Drunkenness does not produce poverty—poverty produces drunkenness. Make the conditions of the laboring classes modestly comfortable and the temptation to intemperance will disappear.

Men and women must be fairly happy before they can be fairly good. The words of that sweet angel of prohibition who has gone to her reward, Frances E. Willard, whose sweet and sympathetic voice pleaded that we first make it easier for mankind to get bread and butter, and then mayhap, our teachings might fall in more fertile soil. "To my mind this is the solution of the whole question: Give mankind happy homes, let them be well clad, well sheltered, and well fed, and the problem of the drink question will disappear as dew before the rising sun."

The Hobson, Sheppard, and Works nationwide prohibition bill does not ask for the prohibiting of the manufacturing of liquor—to the contrary, it encourages every man to be his own distiller and brewer. Their bills only ask to stop the "sale."

It should be steadily kept in mind that the Prohibition movement, while aimed primarily at the destruction of the saloon, is in fact of far greater moment. I wish to repeat and to be clearly understood in this, that personally, I have no interest in the saloon or in any phase of the liquor business. I oppose Prohibition, not in the interest of the saloon but in the interest of every man's individual right to choose for himself and determine his own conduct. I am jealous of my rights to think and act as I choose, so long as I interfere with no one else—the same right belongs to every other man. If one right is destroyed, every other right is put in jeopardy.

There is an alarming tendency to attempt to settle everything by statute. Theorists and doctrinaires rush to the legislature to secure the enactment of laws as though society was merely created for them to experiment with. Nothing will be left secure, nothing will be left sacred or private, if this mania for lawmaking continues. It will require but a few short steps to bring us to the time, when our creeds and beliefs may be regulated by law, if our conduct can be so regulated.

The attempt to advance morality by statute is a distinct violation of ethical principles. If we can not inspire men to high and noble living by moral appeals we certainly cannot do it by coercion. As a matter of fact, temperance and sobriety are conditions absolutely necessary to any man's success. If the liquor dealers understood their own interests they would unite with us to prevent drunkenness; they would be jealous of the reputation of their business and would aid in keeping it out of the hands of disreputable and disorderly men.

The average reformer is a man without a vision, without breadth of view; his horizon is near to him; he sees a part and thinks it all; his imagination is limited, his power of comparison is paralyzed.

Prohibition is a Pontius Pilate that condemns liberty to the cross—do you want it at that price? Let us concede for the moment that Prohibition would do all it is claimed it will do—even at that price do you still want it? Let me change the Scripture a little: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own liberty?" Or, "What shall a man give in exchange of his liberty?" I would rather be a free man in rags than to be a slave and be decked with the costliest robes that ever came from the storied looms of the languorous and luxurious East. Nay, more, I would rather be a free man and struggle and fail and fall and commit sin and have no one to blame except myself, than to be possessed of virtue and purity and be compelled to say that my virtue was the product of the Legislature of the State. Think of going through the world with no better recommendation for your uprightness, your honor, your honesty, than a certificate issued at your State Capitol! Do you want prohibition at that price?

Now we have democracy—a boasted republic—a land of the free—a land discovered—a government founded by fugitives—every man a sovereign—every man a king; and now the reaction is setting in; we are going back; we are going back. Democracy is losing its democratic features. Already there is arising a strong minority, swiftly growing towards a majority, for they are going to say to us, "Thou shalt do this and thou shalt not do that." We are turning back to the old-time tyrannies and the old-time oppression. So I say to you that it is not a question of the influence of alcohol; it is not a question of poverty or crime; it is not a question of whether the law is efficient or not efficient; it is a question of whether or not we can afford to give up the highest, sacredest, noblest, the transcendent jewel of all life—human liberty.

Can a nation or a people endure if wicked? No. Can the government make the people good, by laws or otherwise? No. Then what can the government do? Just what it is doing, namely, the establishment and maintenance of schools. It can teach the people; it can teach the children; it can give them education.

More than a year ago the State of Wisconsin passed a law of eugenics specifying certain restrictions as to marriage contracts. One year has gone by under the exercise of that Eugenic law—this is the result: the number of recorded marriages in the State of Wisconsin for the year 1914 fell off 4,000. Why? Because the statutes had no force or efficiency in changing the natures or moulding the lives of people and the 4,000 marriages that did not take place and were not recorded, took place under the common law form.

The legislature of Kansas has before it at this movement, a bill which makes it a misdemeanor for any woman within the State to use rouge or face powder, or false hair, or have her ears pierced or wear earrings at balls or in any public place.

The Prohibitionists have developed unnumbered private stills and increased the number of moonshiners. From government reports, 10,761 were destroyed in the last ten years in the Prohibition States of the South alone. Cable press reports say 18,000 private stills have been seized by Russian Government since so-called prohibition was declared three months ago. Anyone can make a gallon of whisky for 15 cents—a fire, piece of rubber hose, tea kettle, bucket, and cereal—very simple. The Prohibitionists have driven the weak and lower classes, who have little means or opportunity for importing their liquors, have driven them to the use of vicious and deadly drugs.

They go to the churches, providing the church will allow them to take up a collection. Why don't they go to the churches where they cannot take up a collection?

Suppose three thousand men and women go into a drug store and each of them buys morphine or cocaine; the probability is that every one of them will become a drug fiend. Let three thousand men and women go into a restaurant or cafe and buy beer or wine and the probability is that not more than one will become addicted to the habit. We can, by law, abolish the things that society agrees are wrong in themselves, but society is by no means in agreement upon the contention that drinking in itself is wrong; it is the abuse of it; not the decent intelligent use of it.

The trouble with the Prohibitionist is this: Intemperance is wrong—not temperance. What they should do is to ally themselves, if they are sincere, with brewers, distillers and liquor sellers and together, they can abolish every disorderly saloon in every town or city in the United States; but they won't work together, because the Prohibitionists class them all as criminals and their business as criminal. If you believe in Prohibition—that is the confiscation of property, the turning of two or more millions of people out of employment, the loss of rents and the depreciation of property—are you willing to compensate them for it or do you wish to confiscate the whole thing?

Let me remind them that the founder of religion or at least the man that gave it a status and insured its legal standing, was the son of the daughter of a saloonkeeper. The Emperor was Constantine the Great.

The great majority of normal men and women can not have their customs and habits prescribed by the necessities of weaklings, derelicts and defectives.

If they can take away one man's liberty for any specious reason, they can take away some other man's liberty for some other reason; that no man's liberty is safe unless we defend the liberty and freedom of all men; that I must defend the freedom of the other men in order to make my own secure. When it is a problem that concerns 100,000,000 people, propagandism ought to be conducted on broad-gauge lines, so as to guarantee the support of all who are sincerely interested in and devoted to the best possible condition of the public from an excise point of view.

Legislators can not make law. Understand that! They can make statutes—society makes its laws. Society is an organization—a development. A growth—no matter what legislators say, paid or otherwise. No statute becomes effective until it is backed by the will and the customs of the people. Some of us do not believe that prohibition is enforceable. Because it is said to be achievable in Russia does not render it so in the United States. It is an extreme of sumptuary legislation that is distinctly un-American. It may be possible to get it written on the statute books, and there are a great many so inexperienced in matters of this kind as to think that when a law is passed the whole thing is accomplished. Plenty of laws now, but public sentiment prevents enforcement. Law is not made potent by a legislature, but by the strength of public sentiment. Almost every community has statutes in abundance. But they are only imperfectly enforced. The statutes are strong enough, but public sentiment is not strong enough.

Everybody is more or less familiar with the Blue Laws. Let me read only one or two: "No one shall be a free man or have a vote unless he is converted and a member of one of the churches allowed in the Dominion."

"No food or lodgings shall be offered to a heretic."

"No one shall cross a river on the Sabbath but an authorized clergyman."

"No one shall personally cook meals, make beds, sweep house, cut hair or shave on the Sabbath Day."

"No one shall kiss his or her children on the Sabbath or Feasting Days."

"Whoever wears clothes trimmed with gold, silver or bone, lace, above one shilling a yard, shall be presented to the Grand Jurors and the selectmen shall tax the estate three hundred pounds."

"No one shall eat mince pie, dance, play cards, or play any instrument of music except the drum, the trumpet or Jew's harp."

The wise and beneficent laws from the Dominion of New Haven—a British colony—in this country a few years ago! But look! Nobody shall introduce into the New Haven Province, dice or cards. That is a sample of "Blue Laws." Do you want to get back to those laws? So-called prohibition will bring them to you.

The Prohibitionists have developed unnumbered private stills and increased the number of moonshiners. The Prohibitionists have driven the weak and lower classes, who have little means or opportunity for importing their liquors—have driven them to the use of vicious and deadly drugs.

And another thing that might be done is the abolition, once and forever, of the iniquity of child labor. And in Mississippi, a prohibition State where they plume themselves on the virtue of having abolished open saloons, they have girls down to the age of eight years working along the wharves and levees, with the longshoremen and the beach-combers and the roustabouts—the most sordid, abandoned class. And in the other prohibition States of the South, where they plume themselves on the virtue of having abolished the open saloon, they have children toiling ten hours and twelve hours a day at factories—their childhood gone, their education made impossible, their health ruined—the babes robbed at the cradle. Most of the men who have voted for nation-wide prohibition voted for Child Labor. Why? The answer is simple: There is money in child labor and there is advertising in so-called prohibition. The saloon is a valuable advertiser for the reformer.

The saloons do not produce prostitution—poor wages produce that. No woman is in that life from choice—she is there because the struggle of life was more than she could endure and when she had borne and borne as long as she could and could endure no longer. When she stumbled and fell, do you blame her? I don't. And the responsibility is upon you and me and on the better class of society, and we are moral reprobates and spiritual cowards if we seek to shift the responsibility upon a saloonkeeper or the liquor seller.

But this is true—the world has never been lifted up by men who do it by so much per lift, and the better age of mankind will never be brought in by mercenary missionaries or commercialized religion. The saviors of the world are not subsidized. The only one of the disciples of long ago that got any money out of it was Judas, the betrayer, and he had the goodness to give the money back and then go out and hang himself. I can, by a stretch of the imagination, fancy a paid reformer and professional Prohibitionist, hanging himself, but I can not, by any stretch of fancy, imagine him giving the money back. He will keep that; you would find it in his pocket, when you cut down the corpse. We will have no quarrel, therefore, with anyone who in this matter of prohibition is working sincerely for the betterment of society; but that is no reason for our being under moral obligations to endorse their method of arriving at that result, and no reason for their treating contemptuously or attempting to ostracize anyone who does not sympathize with their policy, or who even ventures to put forward a policy of his own.

It is unfortunate that in this controversy, selfish interests come to the front. On the one hand, there is the liquor dealer who pleads for the saloon because it is a means of profit; on the other hand, there is the professional Prohibitionist and paid reformer who makes money by his policy of agitation. Besides these, there are the legislators who are threatened and variously influenced, first by one side and then by the other. It is safely within the limits of reason to say that the Prohibition movement has been directly and indirectly the cause of more dishonesty and corruption, in legislatures and out of them, than any other one influence of modern times. Until we can take this question out of personal and selfish considerations—until we can view it calmly and clearly in its higher significance we shall not be able to reach a conclusion worthy of our traditions as a progressive and liberty-loving people.

I simply decline, without a struggle, without a protest, to yield this divine, blood-bought thing, that the race has struggled all the ages for—"Liberty." It is the one word, without which all other words are vain.

"MAN'S BEST FRIENDS."

A good dog invariably regards it as a special duty of his to protect children.

In stopping a dog fight, a large pailful of cold water thrown over the dogs' heads will almost always prove effective.

Do not feed a dog anything, any time, just any way; have regular feeding hours and feed him wholesome food, as you would any other animal.

Some folks get the idea that every dog that barks at them is a ferocious beast. They should remember the old saying, "The bark is worse than the bite."

It's mighty convenient to have a dog to announce the arrival of company by barking; even though you be in a back field, you will know when anybody comes.—Farm Journal.

EARLY RISING.

The difference between rising every morning at six and at eight, in the course of 40 years, amounts to 29,200 hours, or three years, 121 days and 16 hours, which are equal to eight hours a day for exactly 10 years. So that rising at six will be the same as if 10 years of life were added, in which a man may give eight hours every day to the cultivation of his mind.—Ex.

THE SOUL.

To make the soul great God gives us great dangers to meet, great obstacles to conquer. . . . One of the very first and most necessary conditions of a right moral government in souls is vigor. It is better for us even to be shocked sometimes than never to be impressed. Mere safe-keeping is not rugged enough to answer the moral uses of our life.—Horace Bushnell.

CHAT OF THE CRAFT

LABOR DAY CLOSE AT HAND.

Despite and notwithstanding rather poor trade conditions prevailing in many sections of America, the outlook for splendid demonstrations on September 6th, loom up promising; in fact if we are to accept promises made, more of our members and local unions will take active part in this year's Labor Day demonstration than ever before.

Local unions make one serious error when they reach the conclusion that it is impossible to participate in the parades unless they are accoutered in classy uniforms and can employ music to lead them in the procession. We know of any number of our locals who paraded without so much as a two-dollar flag, and they proved to be the possessors of the right spirit when they lined up with their fellow-workers in all trades and callings. Labor Day is not solely for the purpose of putting on exhibition parade paraphernalia or displaying costly banners or flags; it has indeed a deeper and broader significance and those who participate, irrespective of whether they have the "fixin's" which they would like, come closer to aiding organized labor than those who absent themselves because they can't put on "dog" and show up their less fortunate fellow-workers.

The only regalia necessary for any body of union men who wish to take part in a Labor Day procession, is neat and tidy dress and a working knowledge of how to keep step and march with becoming dignity. Many a body of marchers in Labor Day parades kill the effect of fine uniforms by conduct which they would be ashamed of committing on any other occasion. By all means get into the Labor Day parades, but keep one thing in mind, our crafts can ill afford to invite criticism unless it be favorable; for whether we admit the fact or not, we are a class of workers from whom something different is expected.

DETROIT NO MECCA FOR UNEMPLOYED.

The Detroit Federation of Labor is out with an announcement to the effect that the Employers' Association of that city has been and still are engaged in putting advertisements in newspapers all over the country which would seem to indicate that there is plenty of work for those seeking employment, but as a matter of fact there are thousands of men walking the streets of that city minus work and minus places to sleep or eat.

Detroit is surely up against the real thing in oppression, for we know from the experience of several men whom we directed into that city for the purpose of trying to interest the culinary workers, found those engaged in that line of effort scared to death to be seen on the same side of the street with an organizer, for, as they stated, if they were seen conversing or making any sign of recognition with a labor representative it would mean that they would lose their jobs instantly. Detroit must have had something done to it, for we recall something like fifteen years ago, when there were real waiters and cooks working in that town, and they had something besides a circular column of gelatine as a backbone too. But pshaw, what's the use of kicking "dead ones." Any time you see a fellow moseying along the street with a scared look in his eye and his frame lacking enough meat to fill out his hand-me-downs, you will come pretty near hitting the mark if you conclude that he got in that condition from slaving in one of the so-called hotels and restaurants of the city on the Saint Clair. If any real cook or waiter makes the mistake of hitting Detroit, he won't stay long. The Detroit Federation won't have to worry over our crafts making their city a point for future residence; though in justice to the Detroit Federation of Labor, it is not their fault that such miserable low wages and trade conditions prevail in the culinary end of the catering industry in their city.

Any time you see a city the size of Detroit without either a cooks' or a waiters' union you can pretty near bet it is a closed town to real money making so far as the workers are concerned, and it is equally a safe conclusion to reach that the Employers' Association waxes fat and sassy.

THE WAR TEST[®] OF THE SUBMARINE.

The part which the submarine has taken in the war hitherto and the losses which it has inflicted upon the belligerent navies shows that the seamen are learning from the experience they obtain with the new weapon. In all the navies skill, enterprise and activity are to be expected from those charged with their handling, and it would be unwise to minimize either the significance or the importance of reverses brought about by them.

It was always assumed that the submarine would prove invaluable as a defensive weapon in its own waters. Yet this is exactly where the operations of the present war have not yet demonstrated its value. It has not been able to prevent hostile vessels from appearing off its own coasts and operating in those waters. Not yet, so far as we know, has any vessel been torpedoed by a defending submarine in the vicinity of her own ports where the enemy ship was maneuvering for the purpose of a reconnaissance or a raid. High speed has always in such cases been the answer to the submarine.

It is in the waters away from its own coasts that the submarine has scored its greatest successes. It has shown that it can travel long distances and can find its quarry in the waters of the enemy. This it has been able to do, apparently, quite independently of parent craft, and in spite of many obstacles. It has been sometimes assumed that a nearby base was necessary for the replenishment of ammunition, fuel or food, or that from outside source it must obtain these supplies. The later achievements of the submarines seem to show, however, that they can remain away from their base for very long periods, certainly for three weeks and perhaps for a month at a time. It is not only that the range of action runs to something like 3,000 miles, but by remaining at the bottom of the sea during daytime the experienced officer can husband his resources and lengthen the period over which the mobility of the submarine lasts. By coming up at night he can obtain air, water can be condensed and, as the records of Arctic exploration prove, food for a month for 20 men can be carried in a very small compass. He can remain under water for something like 24 hours. Thus, the submarine, having arrived in hostile waters, can watch for a convenient opportunity to perform its work.—London Times.

TIMELY TIPS.

When frying chickens or fish, to avoid the greases spattering sift in a tiny bit of flour just before putting them in.

When cooking oatmeal or any other article of food without a double boiler and food should scorch set it immediately in a vessel of cold water about five or ten minutes and the scorched taste and odor will disappear.

Ferns which are kept indoors naturally begin to look faded. Try every two weeks putting them in a washtub and sponge with soft water and lots of soap, and after every second washing work into the soil a piece of raw beef. Take care and do not injure the roots. A tablespoonful of castor oil poured at the roots of the ferns is also a good remedy.

Coal oil will clean badly discolored enamelled sinks or bathtubs, and also will remove fresh paint stains.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

AWAY BACK YONDER.

There were three locals represented at the San Francisco convention in June which had a larger membership than the International Union boasted of in the year 1894. That is to say, that any one of the three referred to unions had a larger total membership in 1915 than the entire International Union in 1894. In connection with the foregoing it may be said that the Committee on Law of the Eighteenth General Convention had as many delegates as the total number of delegates from all locals to the Fourth General Convention of our International Union. If the members of the Committees on Resolutions and Law were lined up alongside of the delegates to Eighth General Convention at Cleveland, Ohio, they could match man for man and still have one left. The two committees numbered 32 delegates, whereas the Eighth General Convention only had 31 delegates.

AN UNPRACTICAL THEORIST.

A navy surgeon wants to abolish the wide trouser leg of United States sailors "because they serve no useful purpose." Has the doctor ever tried rolling up his ordinary trousers to wade ashore from a boat?—Philadelphia North American.

Five minutes a day used in boosting your local union will show remarkable results. Surely you can spare that much time.

IS POVERTY CAUSED BY DRINK?

Some of our Prohibition friends are desirous of persuading the public that Poverty is Caused by Drink—then they claim the remedy for it is Total Prohibition. A simple solution if facts bore out their argument. But IS Poverty Caused by Drink? We say emphatically, No. Our fanatical and misguided friends believe it does, so we will see.

Let us experiment. A walk down any part of our city where the poor live. By poor people we mean POOR people—the underpaid worker with his wife and family, the men who do hard and possibly unskilled laboring work in our factories, wharves and elsewhere; where the poor seamstress of the sweatshop lives and the underpaid laundry workers in the scab establishments eke out an existence on their paltry pittances. What do we find? Do they Drink? Oh, no; they have their hardest struggle to get enough to EAT—not drink. "Admitted," say our friends, "but they are RESPECTABLE POOR PEOPLE." "Are there many respectable poor people then?" we ask. "Oh, yes; hundreds of thousands of them," asserts our crank friends. "You say there are hundreds of thousands of poor people who are respectable and don't drink?" we again question. "Oh, sure thing," is the unguarded answer. Now we ask, "Then what causes THEIR POVERTY?" Our friends are nonplussed.

And so many of their arguments are just as illogical as the case cited. Fortunately for all of us, the Prohibitionists and the Antis, the public are beginning to realize the fact that the time has come when we don't HAVE TO THINK WITH OUR EARS.

Drink is not the cause of Poverty and Prohibition offered as a remedy is simply ridiculous. Prohibition would ADD TO not lessen the evil.—BERT TAYLOR in the Toledo (O.) Union Leader.

ANNIVERSARIES.

It is pleasing to note that quite a few of our local unions have gotten the "Anniversary Habit" and allow no event that can be utilized to pass unnoticed. We are firm believers in such events, for they bring to the attention of the membership the fact that their local has withstood the storms of opposition and indifference and are still in the ring ready for the next tussle worth the name.

If your local has passed the five-year period of its existence without holding an anniversary, you simply lost an opportunity, and should get ready to call all hands to get busy for the Sixth Anniversary; even if you don't have any more than a ham sandwich and a glass of beer to offer to those who attend, hold one and allow some of the members to uncork some of their stored-up oratory and others of the members to prove to you what excellent entertainers they are.

Don't wait until your union grows rusty, lubricate the parts by the friction of use and it will benefit the union and members much.

Two hundred pages of convention record appeared in the July number of the MIXER AND SERVER. If you haven't perused every page of that record you are missing a great deal of information which may be of value to you during the next year. Save your July number, it is a valuable record to have handy for reference.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD'S VIEWS ON PROHIBITION.

During a discussion in a New York Hotel of the question of prohibition and of present day projects to restrict the liquor traffic, an old Ohioan said: "James A. Garfield may not have been a great President, but while he occupied the White House he delivered an utterance on the topic of internal revenue taxation which ought to be generally circulated in these days of hysterical agitation. However, Garfield measured up in comparison with other presidents, this one utterance was a great state paper. It compares with many of the classics of Lincoln."

There was, naturally, some curiosity to know more about this paper of Garfield's and the result was that each member of the party received, a few days later, a copy. The old Ohioan had considered it worth while to delve into some old newspaper file for the Garfield paper or to have some agent dig it up for him in the archives of the Garfield administration. And this is what Garfield said: "The taxes on whisky, beer and cigars and such things are taxes that come upon the consumer alone. It is a curious fact that these are taxes that may be called strictly voluntary taxes. The United States goes, by its officers, all over the country with a contribution box, as it were, and says to every man, woman and child: 'We offer you the opportunity to contribute something to the expenses of the Government on the score of whisky, beer, tobacco and cigars; but you are not obliged to contribute.' * * * It is an absolutely voluntary contribution. All that a man needs to do if he does not wish to pay any dollar of the $52,000,000 that comes from the tax on whisky, any man who wishes to take his shoulders from under the load of paying any part of the $115,000,000 that comes from the taxes on these various luxuries, is to decline to drink, smoke or chew. * * * There is no coercion and no compulsion. It is a tax that in its last analysis comes absolutely and only upon the consumer and by the consumer's consent."

To this quotation the old Ohioan had added: "Why abolish these voluntary taxes at this time, when there is so much complaint against oppressive taxation? This is a free Government. If dissension can not accomplish the result that the agitators against liquor desire, legislation will merely cut off a tax which no one complains of and which now amounts to one-third of the revenues of the national Government."—J. M. Allison in Cincinnati Times-Star.

SOME CONVENTION.

The Eighteenth General Convention of our International Union was composed of 213 delegates from 124 locals and a total vote on the floor of the convention of 505 votes. The 124 locals which sent delegates to the convention represented thirty-three thousand and fifty-seven members (33,057), more than half the paid-up membership of our International Union. It cannot be said of this convention that it was a minority aggregation, or rather that it represented a minority of the general membership.

EGGING THEM ON.

Earrings will probably be popular in Kansas since the bill introduced in the Legislature there prohibiting their wearing. Freak laws can induce people to do things—insist on doing things they never thought of doing—simply by rousing the suggestion of opposition by forbidding those things.—Baltimore American.

A PROHIBITION PAGEANT.

Below is a suggested plan of parade or march of triumph on the occasion of a State, any State, going "dry." It is necessarily incomplete, lacking many of the details which a local management will readily supply, but in the main, we think, it will meet with favor. At any rate, we hope so. Here they come:

PLATOON OF POLICE

Wearing White Ribbon Uniforms.

BRASS BAND,

Playing, "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipsyary."

GRAND MARSHAL,

In Auto run by Dry Batteries exclusively.

ORNAMENTAL FLOATS:

Carrie Nation and Her Little Hatchet.
(Wax group).

With escort of live bartenders in chains.

THE FIRST WATER WAGON TO CROSS THE PLAINS IN '49.

With escort of Reformed Alkali Ikes and Deadwood Dicks.

BRASS BAND,

Playing, "A Stein Under the Table."

ALLEGORICAL FLOAT,

Representing, "The Demise of the Free Lunch."

Characters represented: Pickled Onion, Bologna, Potato Salad, Pickled Beet, Olives,
Cheese and Crackers.

RICHMOND PEARSON HOBSON,

Wearing Wreath of Water Lilies and surrounded by circle of elderly maidens singing,
"Lips That Touch Grape Juice May Always Touch Ours."

BRASS BAND,

Playing, "Simon the (Reformed) Cellarer."

CIVIC BODIES:

Delegation, Ancient and Honorable Order of Buttermilk; Loyal Legion of Milk and Seltzer;
Grand Commandery, Sons of Fermilac; Past
Grand Buns, Order of the Ex-Tanks, Raspberry Council, Nobles of the Mystic Sundae.

ANIMALS IN CAGES.

(Delerius Tremus Americanus.)

Cage I—Pink Giraffes.

Cage II—Purple Zebras.

Cage III—Magenta rats.

Cage IV—Crimson elephants.

Cage V—Pea-green tigers.

Cage VI—Rabbits with polka dots.

Platoon of Keepers armed with rapid-fire seltzer bottles, ready for instant use.

BRASS BAND,

Playing, "Let Every Good Fellow Now Give Up His Glass."

HORRIBLE EXAMPLES:

Champagne Souse in Taxicab.

High-ball Pickle in Hansom.

Rickey Jag in Livery Hack.

Beer Sozzle in Wheel-barrow.

LOOKING FOR SUBSTITUTE.

The following item appeared in a Chicago paper:

CITY CAFE PROPOSED TO REPLACE SALOON.

Tacoma, Wash., July 17.—Five hundred citizens will be asked to join an association that will finance and conduct a city cafe to take the place of saloons after next January. The plan has been outlined by the Rev. E. C. Bloomquist, chairman of the saloon substitute committee of the social service board.

The organization will be known as the City Cafe Association, and the 500 persons making up its initial membership will be asked to subscribe $1 each annually.

Something like twenty years ago a Chicago churchman, whose name escapes our memory at the moment, tried out a "drinkless" or non-intoxicating drink emporium on the Chicago public and it proved a seven-day wonder according to the newswriters of that period—but—and also alas—the scheme wouldn't work, despite the usual "fixins" which made the resort resemble a saloon.

The "City Cafe" proposal at Tacoma may enlist some easy money, but we predict that if the "City Cafe" ever becomes a fact that it will overload itself with "goodness" and swamp itself in a sea of Sunday-school tracts. One thing the proposal may do, that is if it ever comes close enough to realization and has an "opening," it will give Tacomaites a pretty good general idea of what a minister knows about catering to the public taste.

Kansas has never, so far as we know attempted any substitutes probably for a good and sufficient reason.

We enjoyed a visit from Brother John J. Graney of Local 212, Youngstown, Ohio, who chaperoned Brother Joseph M. Murphy, secretary of the Youngstown Central Labor Union, and Mr. Charles G. Mohrle, agent at Youngstown for the Pabst Brewing Company. Needless to say that the wet and dry campaign in which all of us are deeply interested, received consideration. Our members in Ohio are showing increased interest in the coming contest and unless they slacken their speed later on, they will aid materially in giving to the antis another good-sized wallop such as was passed over to them in the November elections last year. Brother Graney and his two friends agree with us, that the one thing to fear in Ohio, is the overconfidence of the WETS; they appreciate that in the last election an overwhelming majority was returned against fanaticism, and perhaps they may conclude that similar returns are due in the coming contest. All should appreciate the fact, however, that the antis of Ohio began right after the last election to try and overcome the immense vote referred to, that they have worked without let up since, and right now are busier than ever and have at their command greater financial resources than ever.

The contest will not be won in Ohio by the "wet" voters unless they display as much, if not more, interest than they did in the previous campaign. We look to our members in Ohio to get on the job and remain actively engaged in the task of keeping Ohio right and force the antis to swallow enough chagrin to last them for the remainder of their lives.

HOW ABOUT THE ATTENDANCE AT YOUR MEETINGS?

On page 23 of the July MIXER AND SERVER (Convention Record) you will find an interesting proposition under the sub-title of: "Is It Insurmountable—Can It Be Overcome?" Perhaps you read it a bit hurriedly last month; it is suggested that you re-read it and see what you think of the suggestion presented. It frequently occurs that the most serious problems which confront us are solved by the simplest of methods, and nothing is more simple than the proposed plan to make meetings more interesting and secure the attendance of the membership. What is the matter with making preparation to give the idea a try out? By the time this number of the MIXER AND SERVER reaches you, the base ball season will be on its closing stretch and yourself and fellow members may have a few moments to spare which could be utilized to excellent advantage in planning for the Fall and Winter campaign. We repeat what has been presented on the subject, that any of our locals who give the proposal a real try out will be kind enough to recite in a letter or letters to the MIXER AND SERVER their success. If you have a better suggestion sit down right now or later on and write us about it. Proper credit will be given you. Come on, boys and girls, don't be backward.

BIG WAR FLEETS OF FORMER DAYS.

There is no certainty as to the total number of the allied fleet gathered at the Dardanelles, but whatever the number it is a mistake to say that it is the largest number of any naval fleet ever assembled. The most formidable, no doubt, in tonnage, weight of metal and other elements of offense, but not the largest numerically.

At La Hougue, May 19, 1692, the French had 76 vessels and the English and Dutch allies 56-60. Blake had 46 vessels at Dungeness November 28, 1652, against Van Tromp's 98, and the Dutch under Van Tromp off Goodwin Sands, October 20, 1639, had 110 vessels to 67 in the Spanish fleet. September 1, 1591, occurred what Rawson, in his "Twenty Famous Battles" calls "the most conspicuously gallant fight in all the annals of naval warfare," when 53 Spanish vessels were fought single handed at Flores, in the Azores, by the English man-of-war Revenge, commanded by Sir Richard Grenville, who scorned to follow the other five British line of battleships of Howard's fleet when they ran from what they regarded with reason as a hopeless fight.

The Spanish had 120 ships in the Armada they launched against England July 29, 1586, and the English a scratch fleet of 197 vessels, mostly small ones, no match for the formidable Armada, which evidently expected to tow the British islands home with them. At Lepanto, October 7, 1571, the Spaniards had 300 sail and the Venetians 316.

If we go still further back we find at Actium, B. C. 31, 500 ships under Mark Antony and 250 under Octavius Caesar. The young Octavius won the battle by his possession of more mobile vessels. The pirates at Illyria had devised a light and powerful craft, long and narrow, sharp at either end, with a powerful ram, a mast in the center and two banks of oars. They were of light draught, easily handled, and possessed one of the great indispensable factors of naval success—speed, a factor which can never be disregarded with impunity in the construction of ships. This sort of vessel contributed largely to the effective force of Octavius.

The largest fleets in numbers were at Salamis,

481 B. C., when the Persians had 700 vessels of the class considered formidable in that day and the Greeks 380. These vessels were mostly triremes, boats with three benches for the rowers, and a mast that could be raised or lowered by means of stays. This mast carried square sails.

There was some chivalry in a naval fight in the good old days of Blake and Van Tromp, when sneaking submarines and barbarous torpedoes were unknown, and naval commanders "courted war like a mistress."

When the Spanish admiral Oguendo declined to come out of the shallow waters of Goodwin Sands to fight because he had no powder Van Tromp said: "I have powder enough for both. I will give him half of mine."

"It is not only powder I need, but masts for my ships," replied Oguendo. To which Van Tromp replied: "I have plenty of masts, a whole shipload of them, and you can have them if you will only come out and meet me."

The result justified the caution of Oguendo, for when the two fleets did meet the Spaniards were so terribly beaten by the Dutch that of 67 ships only 18 reached Dunkirk in safety.—Army and Navy Journal.

A HIGHER POWER IN EASTLAND DISASTER.

Can it be a mere coincidence that the Eastland horror came at a time when the forces of private greed have just completed a powerful alignment to bring pressure to bear on Congress at the next session to repeal the seaman's law? Did some higher power have a hand in this horror?

The seaman's act, passed after a twenty-year battle with greed, will go into effect on November 1. Had its provisions been in effect already, the steamer Eastland would not have gone down. Even though the act only requires the carrying of lifeboats and life-rafts for 50 per cent of the passengers and crew, under this requirement the Eastland would have had on board only 1,552 people, instead of the 2,570 she was actually carrying.

And what kind of a case will the Lake Carriers' Association have now when it comes to Congress and asks the repeal of this act which would have prevented the disaster?

This is not the first time that profit-making ship owners have been checkmated by what the law calls "an act of God." For years the Seaman's Union had been contending that the employment of foreign-speaking crews, who did not understand the language of the officers, was dangerous. Their claims were scoffed at. But on February 22, 1901, the steamship Rio de Janeiro, returning from Hongkong to her home port at San Francisco, struck a reef near the Golden Gate and within twenty minutes sank, carrying down with her most of the passengers. The crew consisted of eighty-four Chinamen, officered by white men, none of whom could speak Chinese. The only two interpreters on board saved themselves, and no orders could be given to the crew.

For years the Seaman's Union had been contending that the manning of ships with an insufficient number of able seamen would some time result in a horrible disaster. Then came the Titanic disaster, with its enormous loss of life, and the proof of the fact that, although the sea was as calm as a lake, the lifeboats were handled inefficiently and half manned. There were too few able seamen.

The burning of the Volturno came at a time when the seaman's legislation was just about to fail in Congress, and emphasized the need for able seamen and more lifeboat equipment. The bill languished again, and just as it was about to die in committee the steamship Monroe went down in a collision off the Chesapeake Capes, and the evidence showed that just two men were on deck on watch besides the watch officer.

Finally the act passed, against the bitter opposition of the ship owners, among whom none were more active than these same owners of the Eastland. And these men, with the other lake owners, were just preparing a nation-wide campaign, with a press agent and all the usual accessories, to secure the repeal of the seaman's act.—The Post, Cincinnati, O.

Not many months ahead of you before old General Blizzard will make his annual visits. You know the old challenge: "What have you done with your summer's wages?" Make up your mind now, while the coin is coming in, to lay aside a few of those hard iron dollars and be prepared for what may come. Overcoats are a mighty fine article to have hanging on the hook in your own room; if it snows and blows you will, at least, have such a protection from the chilly blasts of winter. And, by the way, see that the union label is in that coat. No real trade unionists wear non-union garments.

EVERY MAN

Should Get Two Hours' Outdoor Exercise, Says Expert.

Washington, D. C.—One way to keep healthy and live long is to play golf, says a bulletin issued by the United States Public Health Service. If you cannot be on the golf links two hours a day then you must wheel a baby carriage or make a garden to keep your physique from degenerating. The bulletin says:

"The death rate after the age of 40 is increasing in spite of the more sanitary modes of living and greater protection against communicable disease. The expectation of life after 40 is less than it was 30 years ago. This is due largely to increased prevalence of the diseases of degeneration. The muscles, arteries and other organs of those who, as a result of sedentary occupation or idleness take too little exercise, degenerate. Heart disease, kidney disease and other ills follow.

"Take exercise. Take daily exercise. Have a hobby that gets you out of doors. Walk to your business, walk for the sake of walking. Join a walking club and keep your weekly score of miles. Keep chickens, make a garden, wheel the baby or play golf or any other games, but take two hours' outdoor exercise every day. Gymnasium work is good for those who like it and can afford it, but avoid heavy athletics. Don't try to be a 'strong man,' the champion athlete often dies young. Be a moderate, persistent, daily exponent of exercise. You may not burn the family carriage, as Benjamin Franklin suggested, but at least, as he advised, walk, walk, walk."

If you procure, get, obtain, gain, secure or grab hold of one new applicant this month, you will help keep our International on the Get There Pike. Kick in with one anyway.

THE MINISTERS' PAY-ROLL.

According to reliable authority there are 223,735 churches in the United States, that means an average of one minister to each church. While we do not possess accurate information relative to the compensation paid these pulpit pounders, we assume that they receive about twenty-five dollars a week, possibly more. At any rate we will calculate that the average will run about that much.

Two hundred and twenty-three thousand seven hundred and thirty-five ministers at twenty-five dollars a week wages, or salary, which ever sounds nicest in the ears of the fastidious, means that the people who support these preachers cough up the tidy sum of two hundred and ninety million eight hundred and fifty-five thousand five hundred dollars annually—and yet—we are advised that salvation is free. Most, if not all, of that immense quantity of money is turned into the churches by wage-earners, and the amount of solace and comfort returned can best be understood by the activity of the preachers in endeavoring to curb every class of amusement on the Sabbath, the one and only day when the wage-earner has time to seek and enjoy such amusement as appeals to him and his family.

One must give the ministers credit, however, with being fairly consistent; they are a unit in trying to boycott everything but their "own show." They claim the Sabbath as their property and propose to put down and out any other attraction which competes with them on that day. Yes, there are some exceptions, but then you will find the exceptions are churches and ministers who possess drawing powers of a real Christian character.

ONE DAY OFF IN SEVEN.

According to biblical lore, God made the world in six days and rested on the seventh. Many employing catering establishments seem to imagine that the creature which the Almighty made can stand longer hours and require less rest than the Creator of Man. The workers in the catering industry will never secure a shorter day or week without organization, and they better wake up to that fact soon.

The readers of the MIXER AND SERVER will not be surprised to hear that several prominent police officials of Chicago have been accused of getting their "little bit of change" for permitting unlawful institutions to continue doing business. Our members will recall the review offered to them through our columns by Vice-President Sister Maloney. They will also recall several other items printed about the brutality and contemptible tactics of some of Chicago's coppers toward our girls of Local 484, when they were picketing the unfair restaurants of that city. According to Barney Bertsche the police officials have been drawing down "one hundred bucks" per week from the "Clairvoyant Trust." Possibly one or several of the "finest" will be able to understand what it means to go "down the road" by the time this number of the MIXER AND SERVER reaches our members. They made innumerable threats to send some of our folks "down the road" because they insisted on their rights of free speech. If they get a taste of what awaits them "down the road" few, if any, of our girls will be sorry for them, for they belong in institutions where they can not display their brutality except to themselves.

FRUIT JUICES.

United States Department of Agriculture Experiments.

That the juice of currants, blackberries, black raspberries, sour cherries and peaches may be prepared and kept as successfully as grape juice and by the same methods has now been demonstrated in the course of a series of investigations which the United States Department of Agriculture is conducting into the whole complicated question of fruit juices. The juices of the fruits mentioned, it has been found, retain their characteristic color and flavor after being sterilized and stored away and can, therefore, be made available for use throughout the year in households and at soda fountains, etc. In this way it is thought much fruit that has hitherto been allowed to go to waste may be utilized.

For reasons, however, which are not as yet very thoroughly understood, the various fruits differ greatly in the effects of sterilization upon them. Thus, strawberry juice and red raspberry juice lose their distinctive colors and flavors very readily and, therefore, can not be put up on a commercial scale and marketed as grape juice is. Lemon and orange juices also undergo peculiar changes in flavor after sterilization, and no satisfactory method of overcoming this obstacle has yet been developed. Lemon juice is the more promising, but this, too, cannot yet be manufactured commercially with success. With certain precautions, on the other hand, pineapples can be made to yield a sterilized juice of a very attractive flavor which should have distinct commercial possibilities. The juice, however, should be kept in cold storage at from 32 to 35 degrees Fahrenheit after sterilization, and most of the suspended material should be removed by means of a milk separator or by filtration. Moreover, where atmospheric oxygen is not excluded in the process of bottling the juice darkens gradually.

These studies have already resulted in the discovery of a method producing concentrated apple juice by freezing, which is not only easier to ship than ordinary cider, but which will keep much better. In the concentrated juice, however, the presence of sugar and acid retards the growth of micro-organisms and fermentation is very slow.

Similar methods are now being tried out with other fruits. In the case of grapefruit juice, for example, concentration to a syrup by freezing is easily accomplished and it appears at the present time that there are great commercial possibilities in this method, although further experimentation is considered necessary. In the case of fruits whose juices do not suffer any change of flavor or color in the process of sterilization, this method is not likely to prove necessary.

Details of the experiments, with a discussion of the effects upon the various fruits of sterilization, exposure to atmospheric oxygen after sterilization, storage at low temperatures, etc., are contained in a new bulletin issued by the United States Department of Agriculture.—Exchange.

DEFINING A STOCKHOLDER.

Fifty men pay into a fund for a given purpose the sum of ten dollars each and for that amount they receive a certificate which shows such payment. They are called and are stockholders; they meet and elect a board of directors to whom they grant such executive powers as they deem wise. The board of directors conduct the business for the purpose for which the company was formed. If they succeed in making money for the company each stockholder benefits proportionately. If after expenses have been cared for there is no profit the stockholders are so advised. A local union is conducted along similar lines, the membership of that union are its stockholders. If the union is successful, the membership benefit. If it is unsuccessful the membership must grin and bear the results.

INSOMNIA.

Sufferers from insomnia are usually extremely sorry for themselves, yet, as a well-known physician recently remarked, there are many worse things than lying awake in a comfortable room alone with one's thoughts. Insomnia itself, even in the neurotic age, is rarely dangerous, but is usually a symptom of some disorder which should be seen to at once. If you can not sleep, night after night, the cause may be over-exertion, mental or physical, immediately before going to bed, or it may be going to bed hungry. A glass of hot milk and a biscuit taken quietly after getting into bed may help matters. The pillow is also an important matter to the helpless woman. She may have it too low or, more probably, too high. A small pillow of hops acts as a sleep charm for some. The old method of counting sleep does not find much favor nowadays. A better way of tiring one's self out physically is to stare hard at the brightest thing you can see, but the best method of all is to make a light and read an interesting (yet not sensational) book for a while. Even a very few minutes of reading in bed helps to induce calm sleep, because it drives away the worries of the day and gives one that sense of detachment necessary to healthy repose.

Drugs should be avoided, except in the most extreme cases, but there are certain articles of food which act as mild opiates on certain constitutions. Each has to find out what food soothes her nerves.—Cincinnati Times-Star.

Mr. Edward M. Tierney, ex-president of the H. M. M. B. A., and who made the splendid address from which we quoted and printed in the July number of the MIXER AND SERVER, is not a new comer in the hotel business as some of our inquiring members seem to imagine. Mr. Tierney began his career as a hotel man many years ago and the first executive position which he ever held was as manager of the Seaside Hotel, Rockaway Beach, in 1886. He later built the Arlington at Binghamton, N. Y. In 1898 he leased and managed the Rathburn Hotel at Elmira, N. Y. Still later he became a member of the firm of Sweeney-Tierney Co., which company managed and controlled the Marlborough in New York City. From 1893 to 1897 he was president of the New York State Hotel Association and one of the moving spirits in the New York City Hotel Association.

Mr. Tierney's record as a hotel man gives him the right to speak with convincing finality on the conditions which surround the industry, especially from the viewpoint of the man with an immense fortune made and invested in that business.

WHAT ENGLAND PAYS FOR SHOOTING.

This is a war of artillery. Shells and shrapnel are being used on a scale far in excess of the calculations of the most far-seeing military experts of Europe. That is why Kitchener and French are asking for more shells, and still more shells; for a great proportion of the £24 a minute which this war is costing is being blown away by our big guns.

To fire a single shot from our biggest guns costs £1,000, and some idea of the expenditure of naval firing can be gathered from the fact that one famous battleship could use up roughly £20,000 worth of ammunition per minute if she worked all her guns at full blast, as she would do if necessary. And to this huge outlay must be added the cost of the gun, remembering that the largest weapon has a very short life, and is soon worn out. The most expensive gun we use is the 15-inch, though other big guns run up heavy ammunition bills. For instance £75 vanishes in flame and smoke every time a 13.5 weapon is fired.

The guns which expend £1,000 worth of ammunition every time they are fired are really wonderful pieces of artillery. They can heave a ton weight of explosive shell over a distance of thirty miles with the certainty of hitting any spot they aim at. The power and velocity of the shot is such that on leaving the gun it has force enough to go straight through 57½ inches of wrought iron.

The 12-inch gun can eat up well over £100 worth of ammunition per minute. For a 9.2-inch it is approximately under £30; for a 7.5-inch under £20, and for a 6-inch about £12.—Tid Bits.

IF

If we could have clean, decent dance halls where liquor is not forced upon everyone who enters; if we could have decent public meeting-places where again liquor is not inflicted upon everyone who enters; if we could have, above all, open-air playgrounds and restaurants—and this is not an impossibility—where those who want it could get a drink with self-respect unimpaired, we should have less intemperance and less theorizing about its cure.—Puck.

APPEARANCES.

Many of our boys and girls unconsciously take on the habit of leaning in one direction and seldom straightening up. The habit is not only a bad one from a health stand-point, but makes one look out of whack with neatness and good appearance. The best remedy which we know of and one which should be practised is to hold chest high and the head erect, not just for a moment, but habitually. The moment man or woman allows the back to bend and retain that shape, they can bid good-bye to youthfulness of figure; they really become unattractive and in a larger sense than some imagine handicap themselves. CORRESPONDENCE

This Journal will not be Held Responsible for Views Expressed by Correspondents.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—One of the most fatuous, unnecessary and altogether ridiculous proposals ever put forward by a public body, has been carried into effect by the solons who make up the personnel of that august body known locally as the Board of License Commissioners, to-wit, the licensing of all waiters who are employed, or who may be seeking employment in premises under the jurisdiction of the aforesaid licensing board, which, as we have no longer any restaurants licensed to sell liquor in this city, refers specifically to hotel dining rooms. Why John Smith, who serves liquor to the guests in the hotel cafe, where he is employed, should be compelled to carry a license, while Bill Jones, employed in a non-licensed cafe, and, with the exception of the handling of liquor, is doing exactly the same kind of work, need not do so, is the least of the inconsistencies of this crazy manifestation of freakish legislation. If this new regulation was intended to prohibit the serving of liquor by anyone not a duly licensed waiter or bartender, one might perceive a glimmer of reason in the move. But does it? Take, for instance, any one of half a dozen hotels in this city where the dining rooms are staffed by waitresses and where the guests are just as likely to order liquor with their meals as they would be in houses where the dining room service is performed by men, and this is about what takes place: When the guest orders his or her meal, if it includes wine or liquor, the girl takes the "wet" part of the order—not to the bar, oh, dear, no—she, being a female of the species, is not allowed at the bar, but to a little sliding panel conveniently placed in some partition in close proximity to the bar, and after giving her order to the bartender, that functionary makes it and hands it through to the waitress who takes it back to the dining room and serves it directly to the guest. Apart altogether from the fact that, according to the liquor license law of this city, a woman is absolutely prohibited from handling liquor under any circumstances, the gross inconsistency of allowing a waitress to do exactly what a waiter is prohibited from doing unless he first applies for and obtains a license, is either a mere detail with the powers that be or else it has not yet bored itself through the solid adamant of their understanding. Again, take the case of the guest in his or her room desirous of partaking of a little liquid refreshment: a bellboy is summoned (the bellboy in this part of the Lord's vineyard is always a Jap), that Eastern potentate has the order made up at the bar, carries it back to the bedroom, and serves it to the guest. Yet, up to the present moment of writing there is no suggestion that the Jap bellboy is required to hie himself to the chief of police, have his record looked up or his want of a record established, have his credentials from at least two former employers vised and then receive a curt recommendation to the liquor license inspector advising that a license may be granted, as is the case with the poor, unfortunate waiter, who seems to be the butt of this most stupid and amazing regulation.

In any case, I can foresee some very interesting developments along this line in the near future, of which more anon.

The many pleasant recollections cherished by the members of Local 28 have been added to by the recent visit to this city of Bro. G. Hibbard of Local 197, Hamilton, Canada. Brother Hibbard has been filling the important role of international organizer, and on the occasion of his visit to Vancouver, was on his way home after participating in the deliberations of the eighteenth biennial convention of this International Union. Brother Hibbard gives one the impression of being a sensible, level-headed, thoroughly practical union man, possessing withal a genial and altogether likeable disposition, qualities which should secure for him a sincere welcome wherever he decides to hang up his hat. Furthermore, a man with the mental endowment and the personal charm which is Brother Hibbard's by nature can not fail to make a successful organizer. At our meeting, held on Friday evening, July 2, Organizer Hibbard gave a detailed account of the proceedings at the late convention. At the close of his able and lucid address, Brother Hibbard voiced the suggestion which I think is deserving of more than passing mention and which I hope will receive the serious consideration of every loyal member of this organization who is domiciled in Canada. The brother had been referring to the representation, or rather the lack of representation, accorded by Canadian locals at the convention. Out of twenty-nine locals in Canada only two had a delegate at the convention just closed, a deplorable state of affairs, which is not altogether accounted for by the hard times or the financial stringency: and in passing, threw out the suggestion that if every local in Canada were to assess its members, say fifteen cents per month for the next two years, that assessment would provide a fund or at least the nucleus of a fund which would enable every local in this country to send at least one delegate to the next convention.

To many of our members who are not given to indulging in much deep thinking along trade union lines, this question of non-attendance at conventions and, incidentally, at local union meetings, because the two are so closely associated, that deliberate non-participation in the latter almost nullifies the usefulness of the former, may seem a matter of very little moment. Yet to anyone who has the good and welfare of this International Union at heart, who believes that we are moving towards the ultimate attainment of the aims and objects which gave this International Union birth and the pursuit of which more than justifies its existence, this question of non-attendance, the besetting sin of our local unions, is undoubtedly the most dangerous enemy with which we, as an organization, have to contend because the enemy within our gates is a thousandfold more to be feared than the enemy without. Therefore, any suggestion, any idea or scheme which adds to the efficiency of our local unions or to the usefulness and importance of our biennial convention, adds to the betterment of our International as a whole and is a step forward in the economic and industrial struggle in which our great organization is already such a potent factor. Consequently, I trust that every Canadian and, may I add, every American local, will extend to Brother Hibbard's suggestion the serious consideration which I think its importance warrants.

Due and sufficient cause having arisen since my last report, it became necessary to hold a by-election, when the following brothers and sister were duly elected and installed to the under-noted offices: President, John Cumming, vice W. T. Lines; vice-president, Archie Campbell, vice John Cumming; executive board, Bert Jameison and Sophie McWatters, vice Herb Forsee and W. T. Lines; local joint board, Chas. Davis, vice W. G. Johnston; trades and labor council, John Cumming and Bert Jameison, vice Ed Cosgrove and Blanche Cosgrove.

Apropos to the foregoing paragraph I feel that I can not resist the temptation to unburden myself of a few remarks which have occurred to me in connection with this question of officership in a local union. To begin with it has always been a mystery to me, a deep, profound and unfathomable mystery, why certain members of a local union (any local union—my own for instance), should persist in refusing to accept an executive office. We have members in this local, both men and women, who have the ability and possess the qualifications which go to make up a successful local officer. Yet, when nomination day comes around, or some special occasion arises when an office has to be filled, this perfectly good material hides itself behind a barrier of apathetic silence and deliberately permits some incompetent to be elected in spite of all that this implies, or else as deliberately sits by and allows some already overworked brother or sister to assume an extra office, which he or she usually cheerfully does, rather than see the local suffer. The inevitable result is that less than half a dozen members find themselves carrying the entire work of the local, a state of affairs which I contend is neither just or equitable, nor is it playing the game to my way of thinking. I trust that my fellow members of Local 28 will not run away with the idea that this little homily is written in any spirit of carping criticism, rather I would that they accept my remarks more by way of a little gentle admonition, intended, as it were, to show them the error of their ways and to arouse them, if possible, to a realization of the fact that a little more equitable distribution of the labor of running the local would materially lighten the burden all around.

Referring back to my remarks in a previous article dealing with the proposed referendum ballot of the unions in this city for the purpose of picking out the best men to represent organized labor at the forthcoming election, the result, which I append herewith, will no doubt be of interest to many former members of Local 28, who may know all or most of the men selected. For Vancouver City—W. R. Trotter (Typos); J. H. McVety (Machinists); H. C. Benson (Typos); J. W. Wilkinson (Carpenters); C. H. Hardy (Carpenters); F. A. Hoover (Street Railway Men). For South Vancouver: H. Neelands (Typos). For Richmond Riding—J. E. Wilton (Typos).

Greetings from Local 28 and with best wishes to yourself and the general membership, I am,

Fraternally yours,

JOHN CUMMING,

President Local 28.

EDMONTON, ALTA., CAN.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—You will, without doubt, be surprised to receive a contribution to your columns from Local 55. Up to time of writing, I wish to state we had such a rousing good time at our semi-annual banquet, which was held Friday evening, July 2, and feeling as I do, a newly elected press secretary, should make mention of the event in our official journal.

Prior to partaking of the many good things which the committee had prepared for our brothers and sisters, we installed our newly elected officers for the current term as follows: President, Jerry Lawson; vice-president, Robert Winsar; business agent and financial secretary, Elmer E. Owen; recording secretary, Sister B. Deven-dorf (first sister to hold an elective office in our local); press secretary, T. A. Lawless; chaplain, R. McGivern; inspector, W. H. Peebles; inside guard, G. M. Kurney; trades counsel delegates, W. H. Peebles, N. J. Fritz, E. E. Owen; trustees, J. Lawson, R. Winsar, W. Connors.

After the above officers had been installed, our young and frivolous brother, W. H. Peebles, outlined in a few well chosen words what he expected of the brothers and sisters of Local 55 during the coming term and hoped that they would work in conjunction with the newly elected officers to make our local one of the most prosperous in Canada.

In selecting Bro. E. E. Owen for business agent for the second term, Local 55 selected the right man in the right place for such a position, as he is respected by all the members and no doubt will through the assistance of the members, do good work along the lines of increasing the membership and keeping those who are already members in good financial standing.

Now we will go back to the good time at the banquet. Brother Connors acted as toast master and presided gracefully over the social session. The hall was beautifully decorated with bunting, flowers and palms, etc., and all kinds of good things were served in the way of food and drink. The attendance was all that could be desired, with a bright and interesting program of songs, recitations and speeches from the different brothers and sisters. The banquet dispersed at 1 a. m., and the event will be one to be remembered as one of the most interesting functions in the history of Local 55.

In winding up, I wish to mention that we have now with us Bro. G. Hibberd, international organizer, who has just returned from the convention recently held at San Francisco, and wish to state that he honored us with a very fine speech at our regular meeting of the 9th inst., outlining his trip to and from the coast and finally ending by saying that he was pleased to state that Local 55 to him seemed to be the brightest and most prosperous local he had yet visited and wished us success on our onward move.

Fraternally yours,

T. A. LAWLESS,
Press Secretary Local 55.

WINNIPEG, MAN., CANADA.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Just a few lines to the MIXER AND SERVER, to let our brothers and sisters of the International know that, although Canada is at war, the culinary locals are not yet snowed under.

Local 592, like all other locals, has had its ups and downs, and its members, like all others, think that we are up against it harder than any of the others. We were told by the skeptics when we organized that we had done so at the wrong time. "Times are too tough, you'll never be able to make it stick," is what they all said. Times remained tough, and are still tough, but our little local is still here. We have seen 42 of our active members leave for the war, besides a number of the suspended ones; we have had to lose a lot of good members owing to their nationality being against them securing work here, but still we plod along. I have sent over 30 good members to jobs out of town, and not one of them has ever sent in a cent of dues to help us along, but never mind, they'll come back next winter as they always do, and we'll still be here to do business with them.

Isn't it fine, brothers and sisters, to have one of your members, whom you are sending to a good job out of town, take you by the hand and say, "Good-by, Bert, old boy, I wish you all kinds of luck with the union, and you can bet your life I won't forget what you have done for me; I'll send you my dues along every month to help to keep the ball rolling."

I could quote 50 such cases as this, and with but two exceptions they all fell down on their promises, and I have seen these same fellows coming back, after working a few months and after spending the little bit they have made, come blowing into the office some fine day, with all kinds of rosy excuses for having failed to keep the promises they made, such as the following: Forgot the address, thought I was out there for good; wasn't any union out there; never had a chance to get to the postoffice, and so on. And then we take them in again, hoping that it was just a slip for once, but invariably they slip us the same package again the first time opportunity permits.

I have made the above comments in the hope that through the magazine it may possibly find its way into the hands of some of these false friends, and that it may be the means of showing them what a small grain of manhood there is left in them if they do not brace up and come to the front and do their little bit by at least keeping their promises like men.

There is an old saying which reads that "it takes all kinds of people to make a world," and it's a good job too, for if all of us were made of the same material as the ones I refer to above, I fail to see what chance the working class would ever have of getting ahead.

I am pleased to be able to report that all our members are working, and that we are adding a few new ones to the list daily. So far we have been unable to get the girls in this town to take any interest in the union, and I can assure you that it is not for the want of trying; but I am beginning to figure that before long they will see that we are trying to help them, and that we belong to the same good old world as they do, even if we can't get people to make a fuss about us and leave big tips and that they will come in with us and help to bear their share of the work. Their biggest kick so far with us is that when we accept their little one dollar entrance fee, we do not immediately call a strike and get them $25 a month instead of $12, as they are receiving at present, and they are not even game enough to give us a two months' trial. It's possible that there may be an anti-tipping bill passed through the Provincial house at the next session, as I have already seen a copy of the proposed one, and should it be passed, I fail to see where our high minded sisters are going to have very much on us.

Local 592 extends a hearty welcome to traveling members, and will be glad to see any that may be passing through the city. We can boast of quarters equal to any on the continent now, and we want the members to have the use of them.

Our new address is 501 Builders' Exchange.
With best wishes, I am,

Fraternally yours,

A. W. SMITH,
Secretary Local 592.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The waitresses' union of Toledo are still fighting for better conditions. In the past two months two new houses have been added to our list of union houses. The Navarre Hotel opened its dining room June 1; after repeated visits and conferences with the manager a full union crew was placed in the establishment. The Kaiserhof again reopened, with the house employing union help, though this time employing waitresses in the dining room.

These two houses were secured by Sister Coonrod, temporary business agent, and great credit is due her for the efficient and diplomatic way in which the business was handled.

The annual election of Local 335 was held on Tuesday afternoon, July 6, 1915. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Sister G. Coonrod; vice-president, Sister Elsie Sweitzer; recording secretary, Sister Zoa Eicher; financial secretary, Sister Nida R. Pangle; guard, Sister Florence Smith; inspector, Sister Hulda Richardson; trustee, Sister Edna Pieterbaugh.

We have no new difficulties with the managers, the only trouble being with the St. Clair Hotel. By perseverance and patience, we expect to convince the manager of this place that he is wrong, and the only way to run a good, first-class hotel, one which will pay, is to have a strictly union house.

The members of Local 335 are deeply interested in the coming fight against prohibition and will do all in their power to help in the fight for the bread and butter for those who would be affected by such a move. We sincerely hope that our brothers who can vote won't go fishing election day and forget they have a vote to cast.

With greetings to all members of our International.

Fraternally,
NIDA R. PANGLE,
Secretary Local 335.

TORONTO, CANADA.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Local 300 just at present is feeling the stress of the European war. Many of our members are going to the front, and we have been compelled to retrench, but we have no fears for the future. We have a real live business agent in Bro. Len Smith, while Bro. Thos. Harding is filling the chair with great credit to himself and Local 300.

Business is not brisk, so strongly advise all brothers to keep away from Toronto for the present. We are hoping to be able to line up at least one of the best hotels very shortly and the caterers and restaurant keepers are finding the advisability of phoning us when they want good, reliable help.

Our brother, Len Smith, among other of his numerous duties, is lining up a company of home guards for this city among our crafts.

This local was pleased to hear that the old officers had been returned to office at the convention, and they extend their hearty congratulations.

We had the pleasure of a visit from Brother Durnin, International organizer, on July 12th, and hope to profit by the advice that he gave us.

Yours fraternally,

F. H. BENMORE,
Vice-President, Local 300.

DENVER, COLO.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—At the annual election of Local 14, held June 28, the following officers were elected: President, S. P. Opplinger; vice-president, May McCord; recording secretary, Edna Parker; secretary-treasurer and business agent, Clarence Cox; inspector, Lois Smith; sentinel, Cecil Glascock; press secretary, James Hicks; board of trustees, Leon Hirsch, E. J. Vance and Al Sommers; local joint board, Harold Edmans, Josie Costello and B. K. Stewart.

We think we have as fine a set of officers as there is in the country, and in Clarence Cox we know we have the best worker and business manager in the International. We combined the offices of business agent and secretary-treasurer on account of the state going dry in January. We can feel the effects already; some places have closed up and the rest are working with as few men as they can possibly get along with, and I advise all waiters to stay away from Denver, as this is absolutely a girls' town. Even the parks have proved a failure: one has closed up altogether and the other one is using one steady man; of course they use extra men on Saturday and Sunday, but are not doing one-quarter as much as they did one year ago. In fact, the conditions here in Denver are something fierce, and they are getting worse every day. As far as the girls are concerned, there is plenty of work for them, but that is on account of a lot of girls going out to the summer resorts.

Our delegates to the convention, Cecil Givens and Runt Stewart, sure gave a nice talk about the happenings in Frisco, and Local 14 wants to congratulate you on the way the convention records were handled.

With best regards and wishing good luck to the International in all its undertakings, I am,

Fraternally yours,

JAMES HICKS.
Press Secretary, Local 14.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Just a few lines from Local 150.

Our business agent has been quite successful in organizing two new cafes that opened up in the last two weeks, and believe me, he is on the job all the time; he has had quite a time getting them, but through the good support of Local 76 and their business agent, Charles Yates, he succeeded.

Old Si Miller, as all the boys call him, and who has held top jobs in Rochester, is still with us. Brother Miller has taken over the club, and believe me, he is some steward; he is well liked by all the boys and is making the club a good thing.

Charley Emmett, steward of the Getman Hotel, who is one of our good, strong members, is back on duty, having been on the sick list for two weeks.

Our outside guard, Thomas Casey is still with us, and he is the same old Tom, and as good-natured as ever.

Members of the International traveling this way are invited to drop in around to our club rooms and see the boys of Local 150.

We have quite a few members on the out-of-work list, but things are getting better.

Fraternally yours,

JOE BAKER,
Recording and Press Sec'y., Local 150.

SAN PEDRO, CAL.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Heretofore, seven days has constituted a week's work for the cooks, waiters and other employes of the local eating houses of San Pedro.

Beginning July 1st, the new agreement of Culinary Alliance, Local 754, went into effect. The new agreement provides a wage scale and schedule of hours and regulations of work days affecting employes; six days shall constitute a week's work, a relief man working the seventh day.

The Central Labor Council of San Pedro endorsed the agreement, and no trouble was experienced in convincing the employers of the justice and reasonableness of the change, and resulted in all employers of the local eating houses signing the agreement, which makes the local a 100 per cent organization.

Local 754 has proven to the members what co-operation and organization can accomplish, as it is only a year ago this month that the local was organized by Bro. Geo. W. McDonald, ably assisted by officers and members of Local 17, Los Angeles, and Bro. Harry Pothoff, secretary of the Marine Cooks and Stewards' Association. Brother Pothoff was appointed financial secretary and business agent at the time of organization, and performed the duties of that office till last December, when, by request of his organization, he resigned, but still took an active part in the affairs of the local, and attended all meetings as presiding chairman. President Pothoff declined to accept office at the recent election, stating that he thought that the members of the organization were now capable of conducting the affairs of the local themselves, but promised to render such assistance as would be requested of him at any time in the future. Brother Pothoff was given a vote of thanks for past work performed for the good of the local, and granted a withdrawal card.

Brother Geo. W. McDonald has been acting as financial secretary since resignation of Brother Pothoff and great credit is due George for past work performed, as he has worked hard and faithful to bring about the conditions now enjoyed by members of this organization. Brother McDonald was honored by the Central Labor Council at their last meeting by being elected president of that organization. Brother George makes a good presiding officer, and is at all times "just" in his decisions. More power to you, Brother George.

At the last meeting of the Culinary Alliance, Local 754, an election of officers for the ensuing six months was held. Following are the new officers: President, Sister Signa Everson; vice-president, Paul Zirkel; financial secretary and business agent, John H. Jackson; inspector, W. Walthers; inside guard, W. King; board of trustees, Omar Samson, Signa Evanson and Fred Thancher; delegates to Central Labor Council, John H. Jackson, G. W. McDonald and P. O. Meacham.

I am pleased to state that business is good, as all members are working, and occasionally we have to send to the locals of Los Angeles for additional help. Several new candidates have been recently initiated, and several traveling cards deposited.

Since our last meeting the Navy Restaurant has opened its doors to the public, and is being ably conducted by our worthy brother, P. O. Meacham. Brother Meacham has been a resident of San Pedro a number of years, and is very popular: we predict that Brother Meacham will be successful in his new venture, and assure him that he has the good wishes of all members of Local 754. Another new restaurant is under way of construction, on the corner of Beacon and Sixth streets, and will soon have its doors open to the public.

Regular meetings of Culinary Alliance, Local 754, are held in the Central Labor Council room, Eagles Building, on second and fourth Mondays at 8 p. m. Visiting brothers and sisters are cordially invited to attend.

Fraternally yours,
JOHN H. JACKSON,
Press Secretary, Local 754.

BALTIMORE, MD.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Just a few lines from Local 532. We are awfully sorry that we were unable to send delegates to the convention, but hope that Local 532 will be represented in the future.

Our business agent, Chenoweth, is certainly working hard to organize every house possible, and so far, with much success; in the last month he has organized some of the most prominent houses in town. Business here is steadily improving.

Fraternally yours,
BERNARD STERN,
Press Agent, Local 532.

NEWPORT, KY.

GENTLEMEN—In reading many articles of interest to our business in our valuable journal, it struck me that I should say something about our pretty little city, the most northern point of the Bluegrass region in Kentucky, as well as our organization. Newport has never before been organized along our lines, and it was with some hard labor that we are now in a flourishing condition. Our employers are lending a helping hand and we now have a membership of sixty hustlers and each one an artist in his line. We are affiliated with the Trades and Labor Assembly of Kenton and Campbell Counties and have had many valuable suggestions towards making a more perfect organization. Newport is a thoroughly union town and with each union helping one another the town is on a big boom from both business and union standpoint.

Trusting you can give this letter space in our valuable publication and at some future time I shall give a more detailed statement concerning our city, its citizens and unionism in general.

Very truly,
FRED WEBER,
Business Agent, Local 149.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Kindly publish in the next issue of the MIXER AND SERVER, the information given below:

At the regular meeting of bartenders' union, Local 437, held July 7, 1915, Geo. P. Harley was expelled from Local 437, of Indianapolis, Ind., for conduct unbecoming a member of this International Union.

Fraternally yours,

BUFFALO, N. Y.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Knowing that the doings of the convention would take up the major portion of the July MIXER AND SERVER, I ask the opportunity to insert our piece in the August issue.

Delegates Charles Beyers and Thomas Tarrant, of Local 196, to the convention, read their reports at one of our July meetings. A large crowd greeted these two delegates who had traveled more than seven thousand miles on a combined business and pleasure trip.

Close attention was paid to every detail of their reports, and when President Bulcher put the motion to receive and accept their reports, there was a beam of satisfaction on every man's face as a result of the outcome of the convention.

Since our last writing Brother Geo. Schneider passed to the great beyond.

Jimmy Lauer has returned from Elmira, where he spent the winter; he is making the mazuma at Carnival Court.

Frank Dahmen and Fritz Nold are the champion pinochle players of Local 196. They challenge anyone in the International.

Local 196 and its club, have moved again. This time to 48 East Eagle Street, next door to the Red Front. They expect to remain here for at least three years.

Yours fraternally,

Wm. SMITH,
Press Secretary Local 196.

FRESNO, CAL.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Our local optimist asserts that they are handcuffing the angels in Paradise to their thrones to prevent them from coming to California. The sentiment is a pretty one, and if you want a fruit ranch at $1,000.00 an acre, a "coffee and" at ten cents, or a flop in our local's new premises gratis, even angels are welcome, providing that they bring a job along with them.

Local 62 has many things to be thankful for even in these hard times, one of which is the cordial relationship between the proprietors and the culinary workers. A couple of houses are paying some of our members above the scale and it certainly surprises a man to get two-fifty when he was engaged at two bucks. Such an incident puts a man in good humor with everybody and though Local 62 has those faults common to every local we occasionally presume to think that we are getting a little bit more than we are entitled to. Work, however, is scarce, and labor plentiful, so that Fresno is far from a desirable place, especially in these hot days.

Another reason for satisfaction is our new headquarters; cool and cozy, with every convenience, secretary's office, pool room, card room, baths, toilets, the nucleus of a library, and six magnificent engravings, that will soon adorn our walls, tend to make our headquarters a real home, that for comfort, can not be beat.

A change has come over Local 62, and we have no hesitation in saying that we are pretty sure to have a perfect local in the near future. Gone are the days of carelessness and indifference, and if the lay members persist in giving the officials the whole-hearted support that they have accorded them during the past few months, Local 62 will be second to none in our International; not necessarily in point of membership, but in earnestness, for ten good members can do more effective work than one hundred indifferent ones.

Good old Pomery—Burley Pomery—is still our president, and is as handy with the gavel as he is in avoirdupois. The very incarnative of Roberts' rules, woe betide the member who tries to slip anything past him. Our executive board is an earnest bunch of workers, watch dogs of the treasury and of applications, neither afraid of criticism nor afraid to criticize; who have the nerve to assume that they are "it," and when you have a board of such a calibre one can rest well assured that Local 62's future is in good hands.

The one day off in seven is no longer a myth in the "Raisin City" and is enforced willy-nilly. Being a bit anxious for the coin we will not hesitate to impose the necessary fine on those of our members who display a tendency to keep another brother out of a job.

The following is a list of our recently elected officers:

President, L. M. Pomery; vice-president, M. Kelly; secretary-treasurer, B. L. Williams; recording secretary, Ruth Russel; inspector, B. McGowan; delegates to Labor Council, L. M. Pomery, Harry Russel, B. L. Williams, Geo. O'Hara; executive board, M. Kelly, J. Brizzell, Geo. O'Hara, Ed. Enos, C. C. Lewis; local joint executive board, H. Russel, L. M. Pomery.

Fraternally yours,
I. BECKER,
Local 62.

PORPSMOUTH, N. H.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The twelfth annual picnic of Local 309 of Portsmouth was held on Monday, July 5th, at Sagamore Grove. Despite the heavy downpour of rain on that day there was a large attendance and the affair was greatly enjoyed by those present. An interesting program was provided by the energetic committee in charge and about $70 will be realized from their efforts.

The millionaire bartenders of the city were conspicuous by their absence and rumor has it that they held a banquet at one of the prominent hotels, where they could watch the rain-drops fall without soiling their white coats and aprons.

Yours truly,

WILLIAM J. GALLAGHER,
Local 309.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—At our last meeting, held July 16th, we had the report of our delegates to the convention, Brothers McGowan, Ehrman and Long, who had a fine report. Brother Flore was present, also Brother Fulcher, president of Local 196. Brother Flore thanked the delegates of Local 175 and 196 for their loyal support. There was plenty of handshakes, as the members of Local 175 are proud of our general president, and that he is a member of our local union.

Some of our brothers are located at the following establishments: Jean Furnier, at Finch & Degens, Allen street; A. Gaffaney, at Mayers' Cafe, Grand Island Ferry; Ed Lutz, Killroy's Buffet; Fred McGreevey is back home at the Golden Rule; Tom Packenham is at Flore's Cafe in place of Bert Merlink, who is on his vacation; H. L. Sayers, of the Hotel Majestic, is on the sick list; J. Finn, at the Silver Dollar; Chas. Lydel, at Smith & Maharg's in place of Chas. Girard, who is on his vacation; W. Brooks and T. Swartz, at Murphy's Cafe, Eagle and Ellicott streets.

Fraternally yours,

FRANK BROWN,
Press Agent and President, Local 175.

AN ARGUMENT FOR ORGANIZATION

The foregoing roster of secretaries and local unions is an up-to-the-minute accurate tabulation; in a broad sense it represents an aggregation of local unions who are banded together for their moral, social and financial betterment. There are no "ifs" or "ands" about the beneficial results secured by labor unions, and if you please, the roster presented is that of labor unions attached to the Hotel and Restaurant Employees' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League of America, a part of that great Trade Union organization, the American Federation of Labor, which, as you may probably know, is a federation of skilled and unskilled workers of every craft and calling which comes under the classification of wageworkers.

Our International Union, as we love to call our organization, is not a "GET RICH QUICK" scheme; it is a sane and sensible combination of Catering Industry Employees who are co-operating, one with the other, in all parts of North America to improve their working conditions, secure a fair rate of wages and to establish a working standard of craft skill and excellence which will enhance the value of the workers and command respect and favorable consideration from those who employ them. Our activities comprehend working for our interests in such a manner as to make investment in the catering industry safe and sound, thus protecting ourselves and the employer at one and the same time.

If the foregoing brief presentation enlists the attention of the non-members, a perusal of the contents of this and other numbers of this magazine may convince them of the necessity of affiliation. We invite careful investigation of our methods and aims; after such search we believe catering industry workers will have absorbed an attractive and convincing argument for organization.

SELF-APPRAISEMENT

WHAT do you weigh from a sticktoitiveness point of view?

Perhaps that is not as plainly expressed as a more erudite wielder of pen and builder of phrase would "put it," but we are somewhat plain people and given to the use of expressions no whit more elaborate.

Perhaps setting the primary interrogation down in different language may entice you to give the idea some of your spare time and serious thought.

What do you weigh? is not intended as asking what the scales will tell you, but is injected designedly to seek to ask you what is your mental conclusion with reference to your own heft when you are engaged in trying to push forward any given proposition—for instance your local union's advancement. Is your push real or fancied? Does it carry with it just ordinary endeavor, or is it truly push of the persevering kind—that character of push which, while it recognizes obstacles, yet bears steadily in the direction in which your real desires lie?

Sticktoitiveness, so far as we are aware, will not be found in the dictionaries; just who originated the combination of words is immaterial, it has a meaning and a big meaning, one which you have undoubtedly absorbed and fully understand, therefore further definition seems unnecessary, but at that perhaps it may be well to make it good and plain. It means as we understand it, "Sticking until the cows come home." Get that? All right, now once more, what is your personal STICKING POWER? If you have failed to give that question thought, take a moment off right now and THINK IT OVER.

What figure do you "cut" in the game as a sure-enough pusher of your own interests via the one and only vehicle which working-men and workingwomen turn to for solace and comfort from the ills of industrial life—the American Trade Union—your own craft local union? Do you "cut into" the game with a wobbly backbone and an impotent mental equipment, or are you one of those who have FAITH in themselves, who believe they can achieve, who know no such word as QUIT, who decline to even tote momentarily the thought of LAYING DOWN? Too hot, you say, to do any SELF-APPRAISING. Get away from that; like meets like in this case. The query is a HOT ONE and HOT weather is an appropriate time to THINK IT OVER.

Every member of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League being interested in its welfare, inasmuch as the proceeds are part of the International funds, it therefore follows that, being the "servers" of condiments, liquors, etc., their good will would be of marked advantage to purveyors of articles of consumption either in Hotels, Clubs, Cafes, Buffets or Bars. The membership of the International Union consists of the very highest class of bartenders, cooks, waiters and hotel employees generally.

Unconventional as it may seem, yet with a definite purpose in view, the attention of all our boys and girls is here and now—a few months at least in advance of the time when a unanimous chorus urges "do your shopping early"—called to the immense possibilities which can be taken advantage of and prepare to make "the old folks" at home believe that you do really think of them, even if it is only once a year. Christmas editorials are appropriate for the month of December; enough of such word pictures will no doubt appear the last month of the present year to satisfy any reasonable desire, but we are more concerned in trying to divert the attention of our boys and girls from the current attraction and events, to the limited time left in which to lay aside a few dollars with which to purchase a token or to remit in any negotiable form to those whom we left behind, as a reminder that we are on top the earth and wish them Yuletide happiness and cheer. A dollar or more a week, if you can spare it—less if things are not "breaking right"—but something; and if you ever tried saving for yourself, surely the task suggested should be easy if you have any of that good old red blood running in your veins.

Supposing you put aside ten cents a day from September 15 to December 15. Count the days, and you will discover that a pair of "jitneys" salted each day during the specified time will not make you poorer, but will make you rich in pleasurable anticipation of how grateful and thankful the recipients will be. Of course you would enjoy making a trip home; to arrive unexpected as it were; to stalk into the old home and give mother a great big loving bear hug and kisses, and then wrap your arms around father and do likewise. In fact, bear hug and kiss brothers and sisters, if there are any left to help and cheer the declining days of ma and dad. But if that is what your heart desires, you won't be able to go very far on a double jitney per day. No indeed, and you know it. Not less than one great big iron wheel if you are a long distance from, and "four bits" a day if you can make it in a day's jump. Yes, that is putting the limit clean down to zero. But it's our aim to get you thinking first. After that it's up to you to elaborate and decorate to suit your income and present money reserve conditions.

Sure you would like to be able to drop off at the old home town and put on a lot of "dog," just to show the home guards that you are a live one. But whisper, boys, and you, too, girls, this little trip is not for display purposes, so put the tinware on the idea. This little trip to the old town for Christmas is a HOME trip. It must be inspired by LOVE and carried out to the very last little detail with that honest sentiment dominating. We wouldn't give two whoops in sheol for a boy or girl who was ashamed to show love for and to those entitled to its bestowal.

How are you going to begin, double jit, four bits, or are you going back anyway?

BETWEEN OURSELVES.

"By the failures of the past" wise men learn lessons. That is far from being a platitude; it is so closely wedded to solemn conviction born of experience, that it properly takes its place in wisdom's wonderful storehouse.

It is not a far cry to November, 1913, when the editor of THE MIXER AND SERVER dropped off at Portland, Ore., to pay his respects to the members of our locals in that city. After a handshake and salutation, as well as a few social calls, we began to collect scattered data, which showed some astonishing things which truly caused alarm. We saw one of the great cities of the Pacific Coast on the eve of a tremendous social battle, and almost criminal indifference toward those who were working day and night to commercially ham-string a thriving and prosperous municipality, and thus retard a commonwealth which had few superiors. Portland and Oregon are synonymous; what injures one affects the other. Portland, the Rose City, with fanatical harness impeding its progress, meant Oregon bound and gagged.

At every opportunity offered during that brief visit our members and their employers were cautioned and urged to get on the firing line. Their attention was directed to the ceaseless drip, drip from the ever widening hole made by the fanatical horde. They listened attentively to the appeals, but ten minutes later had returned to the well trod path marked "Plenty of Time." They knew their city and State better than some would-be wise guy from the Buckeye State, and they would show that Ohioan how badly he was mistaken. Oregon dry; Portland dry, never.

At an evening meeting, none too well attended, and despite the discouraging reception which my warnings received during the day, the situation was reviewed and unquestioned facts and figures offered to convince our own members that if they desired to continue at their chosen vocation, it would be necessary for them to amend their daily custom and habit, and instead of devoting all of their spare moments in the pursuit of pleasure, at least half of that time would have to be given up to a campaign for protection to their bread and butter. Again that tolerant smile of the men who knew their State and their Rose City was the reward bestowed for effort and study.

At that meeting a leading attorney of the city was present. He was asked to say a few words, which he readily consented to do, and in language which could not be misunderstood, not only emphasized what the undersigned had offered, but drew a word picture prophetic, which no doubt many of our members recall now when actually confronted with the conditions predicted. The splendid State will soon enter into the path which leads on to commercial and industrial stagnation. No State which has ever trod that path has ever fully recovered from the blight. Oregon may be the exception, and while we are hoping for her complete recovery from the effects of fanaticism, we have, as the Scotchman says, our doubts. What of the Rose City, the heart of Oregon; how will she weather the gale of fanaticism. Already her popular cafes are retrenching, men are being laid off, and among them many culinary workers who laughed and joked about prohibition ever reaching them. They could not see our local unions with a field-glass; their club and association was all the protection which they needed. The hotels and cafes would never be prevented from serving wines and liquors. Why should they worry their heads about the coming election? Their employers were not concerned as to whether they were citizens and voters. No one connected with their jobs had inquired as to whether they were registered or not. Their employers were not worrying about the fight on the saloon. They paid scant attention to the activity of the Anti-Saloon and similar fanatical aggregations. The Antis might close the saloons and similar resorts, but pshaw, the voters would not stand for closing cafes, grill rooms and cabarets connected with the legitimate hotel industry.

If our employers see no danger in the campaign and decline to worry over the prospects for the future, why should we take over any load of worry? Our proprietors took care of us in the past; they will look after us in the future. You union agitators may shout all you wish to about probable calamity if the State goes dry, but you will be surprised to see how nicely we will get along. How confident they were ordinary words fail to adequately express. Hadn't they been warned to steer clear of union attachments and entanglements; were they not cautioned about strikes and the woeful subsequent results? When they happened to meet members of our unions they tried to sidestep, and were extremely worried lest some of their pals or bosses would see them talking to union members; they might lose their jobs. Unionism which tried to teach them that there was something in life besides toil and sleep, that taught the workers there was such a thing as civic duties which they should perform, was abhorred, and they fought shy of it and its advocates as if a pestilence threatened them. These Club and Association members absorbed their lessons well. They herded together in their bosses' subsidized club rooms, and passed their time playing Old Maid, checkers, dominoes, and other such exciting (?) games. None of their miserably small wages and tips found their way into the fund of the Oregon Liberal League, which had been traveling up and down the State endeavoring to save the catering industry from the attack of organized fanaticism: trying to save the very institutions, above all others, which counted its profits by the hundreds of dollars from the beverage end of the game, yet declined to be classed as liquor men, which they, in truth, were. As little as the employes of such establishments contributed to the support of the Liberal League, their employers gave less. They knew that the Liberal League had been organized and promoted by trades unionists; that its main support came from such workers. They could not afford to soil their kid gloves or muss their apparel in the fight alongside of such people. All of this and much more which could be recited, occurred, and the Antis worked on unceasingly and Oregon voted DRY, and by a majority of less than 40,000 votes out of a total vote cast of 242,987. This, mind you, in a State which gave Chafin, Prohibitionist, 4,360 votes in the presidential contest of 1912. Does any practical man believe than an active and aggressive campaign, supported by the hotel industry and conducted simultaneously with the campaign of the DRY'S, which began several years ago, would not have saved Oregon? Organized labor put its shoulder to the wheel in ample time, but it could not accomplish the impossible. Most of its energy was expended in trying to wake up those whose future employment was at stake. But they were cock sure of the future; turned over on the other side, and continued their nap. Now the Association and Club members are getting what's coming to 'em. They are discovering that their good, kind bosses are not such a generous bunch as to retain help when that help is "eating its head off" and a burden to the payroll. Every day the stereotyped "We are sorry, but you understand business is not as brisk as usual; we shall have to lay you off for a few weeks until trade picks up" is being used. Crews have been decreased so as to reconcile with the decreased income and future outlook. The stock of beverages on hand means loss unless it can be gotten rid of before January 1, 1916. Banquet reservations for the coming winter have fallen to bed rock. Convention dates have been pruned. To hold conventions in a State where nothing more exhilarating than Adam's ale is legally served would be inviting disaster to any live organization. Excursionists pass up a dry town or State quickly. There is no clamor for "stop overs" in Kansas, for travelers know only too well that prohibition is a sister to gloom, and they are not over anxious to make the dame's acquaintance. For the past few months these catering industry workers, the ones who prized their membership in the Club and Association, find time hanging heavily on their hands at the "rooms". The tinkle of the "phone" bell no longer jars the air. There are no orders for "extras, party or steady men." The few weeks' lay-off has increased to months, and yet trade has not picked up. Their faith in the kindness and generosity of their employers is being badly bent. They begin to realize that the pat on the back and "you're a good fellow" greeting is a mighty poor substitute for a meal ticket and the price of room rent. They no longer content themselves with waiting at the "rooms" for a job to be phoned in; they cluster about the back entrance waiting to have a word with the "main screw," or waylay him when taking his daily constitutional in order to remind him that they were faithful employees and scorned to join the union as he and the hotel owner had suggested. "Ain't there a few days or a week's work you can give me? I am down to hard pan, broke and bent."

"Can't do anything for you, me boy. We are full to overflowing. In fact, we are considering laying off several more in the dining-rooms and kitchen." That is the usual reward for loyalty to selfish, cheap-wage-paying hotel men. And it is not confined to Oregon by a long shot. Those retained at work are fearful of the future. They have lost that cocky-self-satisfied-lordly-air. They begin to understand the "soul of a dollar," and that sympathy is a word, not a feeling, which hotel owners seldom possess. The gradual lengthening of hours and squeezing of wages is yet in store for them. It will come soon enough, and then they will hunt for the union and see what it is going to do about it. And the wise men of the union will turn to them and inform them that they had better seek their Association and Club to whom they have been contributing and supporting and get protection, for union men have been barred from working in such houses, therefore the union is not likely to expend its energies in behalf of those who exclusively enjoyed employment in such places.

"By the failures of the past" wise men learn lessons. Will the Club and Association members profit by sad experience?

PUTS BRAND OF INDECENCY ON SUNDAY TALK.

San Francisco, Aug. 6.—Classing Billy Sunday's indecency of speech" with the "indecency of action on the Barbary Coast," Rev. Chas. F. Aked today fought the second round of his controversy with the evangelist.

The controversy started when Dr. Aked resigned from the Committee of One Hundred in protest against the employment of Sunday at the Van Ness Tabernacle here.

"I do not know of any reason which would induce me to become a party to the buffoonery and blasphemy of a 'Billy' Sunday mission," said Dr. Aked.

Quotes Sunday Slang.

"I will not join in the attempt to suppress indecency of action on the Barbary Coast and countenance indecency of speech at the Van Ness Tabernacle.

"Parents may very well ponder this quotation:

"Pilate was a lick-spittle, low-down, free-lunch, hog-pouched, pliable, plastic, ward-heeling, whiskey-soaked graft politician of his day."

"If their boys bring this language into the home, they—fathers and mothers—will understand that the youngsters have not been to a prize fight, nor a saloon, nor to a house of infamous resort. Parents will understand that the boys have been to a religious service and have listened to a preacher who, by the grace of an American college, is a doctor of divinity and who is supported by the leading clergy of San Francisco.

Bad Outweighs Good.

"I declare, in carefully chosen words, that even if every 'result' claimed by the 'official press agent' is as recorded—a colossal 'if'—and even if every one who professes 'conversion' is a penitent and a believer in Dr. Sunday's 'gospel,' then the injury done by the presentation of such a loathsome gospel with a frightful God, such a grotesque Christ, such a fantastic heaven, such an impossible hell, must outweigh and outweigh beyond all calculation the good obtained by those 'results.'

Would Turn Elsewhere.

"If the pulpit and the pew substitute, for the religion of Jesus Christ, the gospel, according to 'Billy' Sunday, then Protestant Christianity is doomed and man's indignant heart will turn away to find the symbol of its faith elsewhere."—Seattle (Wash.) Star.

A RYANESQUE WALLOP.

Rev. Jones, who stole $500 of the church money, has been located in St. Louis, but no effort has been made to bring him back. If it had been for selling a bottle of beer that Jones was wanted, and if the Rev. was not attached as a forerunner to his name, he would have been followed to hell and brought back by some fanatic member of the Good Government League.—Decatur (Ill.) Labor World, August 13, 1915.

Section 141. All official announcements printed on the Official Pages of the Mixer and Server shall be read at the first meeting after the journal has been received by the Secretary and a copy posted at the local union headquarters for the benefit of all those who may have been absent from meetings.

Local union officials are cautioned to be more careful in the acceptance of traveling cards. We compile and print each month a complete list of our local unions and the last month for which they have paid per capita tax to headquarters; that list is as accurate as continued and careful work can make it; very few errors occur, as our local union officials can testify. Therefore, the list printed is authoritative and should be a guide for secretaries. If in this issue you find a local union credited with payment of its May per capita tax, it is a foregone conclusion that such a local is OVER TWO CALENDAR MONTHS IN ARREARS, therefore a SUSPENDED UNION and NOT entitled to consideration, nor are traveling cards issued by such unions acceptable.

The Long List showing the standing of local unions in this number of THE MIXER AND SERVER was compiled after the close of business for the preceding month, therefore it is fair to assume that it has given accurate rating or credit to every local union for payments of tax up to the first of the month in which the MIXER AND SERVER hearing date mark, appears. If officers have any doubts as to the standing of any local at any time, it only requires a few lines of interrogation by mail to the general office to secure prompt reply giving positive information.

Traveling cards which show erasures or presumed corrections are worthy of your careful investigation. An instance of recent occurrence proved that the possessor of a traveling card had made erasures which caused charges to be brought against him, and the issuing secretary in order that the truth could be secured. The holder claimed he had obtained the changed card by paying to the secretary his back dues, but could not explain the absence of due stamps from his book.

A little more care will prevent many abuses which worry our local union officers.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Wanted, information with reference to the present whereabouts of Joe Dougherty, who has worked as cook and waiter, was last heard from while with the Miller Shows and is supposed to have been connected with the West Minstrel Show. His wife and family are at present located at St. Paul, Minn., and would appreciate any information which would aid them in locating him. An estate of some proportions awaits his appearance before final settlement is possible.

Communications addressed to general headquarters will be cared for and members thanked for aiding in the search for Dougherty.

INFORMATION WANTED.

Wanted, the address or information as to the present whereabouts of Bert DeValt, a bartender, formerly of Fort Dodge, Iowa, transferred to Local 302, Butte, Montana, January, 1914. Any information will be gratefully received by his sister, Mrs. C. J. Thornton, 311 South Wyoming street, Butte, Montana.

"RE-MISSING JOHN BUTLER."

In the year 1905 John Butler was working as a waiter at the Union Club, corner of Fifth avenue and 21st street, New York City. He wrote to his family, who lived and still live at 160 Colbourne street, Montreal, that he had left the Union Club on account of illness and was employed at different places from time to time. He also told them that he was sick at a hospital and had undergone an operation on one side of his body, and he asked them if they were keeping up payments in the C. M. B. A., to which he belonged. He also said he was insured in a funeral society in New York.

Since 1905 his family, who were not, and are not now, in good circumstances, have continued paying his fraternal assessments, but have never heard from him during that time, i. e., the past ten years. They are very anxious to know if he be alive or dead, and, if alive, to obtain his present address. Any information as to his sickness, death, or present whereabouts would be very gladly received by his wife and children, and they would reward, as far as their limited means would permit, any one who would convey such information, or any information that would assist them in their search. If alive today would be 59 years old. He came from Tipperary; son of Jas. Butler and Mary Kennedy Butler; married Catherine McCormick; parents were farmers; height 5 feet 6 inches, weight 150 lbs.; complexion medium, eyes blue; last known occupation, waiter.

"AN OLD-TIME MEMBER PASSES AWAY—OFFICERS OF LOCAL 240 USE THE INTERNATIONAL FUNERAL CEREMONY.

Sister Kate Barkman, for many years an energetic member of Waitresses' Local 240, of Seattle, Wash., passed away Wednesday, August 18th, at her sister's home, at Everett, Wash. She had been ailing for several months, and was visited continually by members and officers of Local 240 during all the time.

"Kate," as she was familiarly known by members of Local 240, was loved and respected by all who knew her.

The funeral services, which were held at Jerrard's undertaking parlors, Sunday, August 22nd, were conducted under the auspices of Local 240, of Seattle, Wash. All the officers were present, and many members, as well as many members of Locals 451 and 454, of Everett, Wash. Banks of flowers, furnished by the local unions and friends of the deceased sister, surrounded the casket. The beautiful International services were gone through by officers of Local 240, Sister Alice M. Lord being in charge and First Vice-President Hesketh delivering the lecture. Besides our own crafts people, many members of other organizations were present.

Sister Barkman was a good, earnest and loyal member. May she rest in peace.

SEEING AMERICA.

In one respect the conflict in Europe has caused thousands of those who can well afford to travel to confine their touring to this side of the Atlantic Ocean, which country they have neglected to become acquainted with and to their own disadvantage. Many of our boys and girls enjoyed for the first time in their lives a trip across the continent when they journeyed to San Francisco for our Eighteenth General Convention, and unless we are poor judges of appreciation, every one of them enjoyed their trip and returned to their homes with enough pleasing experiences to warrant them keeping their family and friends busy listening for months to come. The magnificent exposition at San Francisco, as well as the exposition at San Diego, Cal., proved as they should, splendid attractions, but alongside the wonderful cities on the Pacific Coast, they must necessarily take a back seat. Without trying to enumerate the immense number of beautiful cities all along the Western coast, and many on the way out and in the Middle West, it can be stated, without any undue exaggeration, that no part of the world offers so many attractions or such splendid municipal models. To the easterners the West is a wonderland, for no matter how much one may have read and heard describing the grandeur of the Rockies, it is impossible to even begin to conceive their innumerable and astonishing beauties, and as for grasping their immensity by reading or storytelling, that is equally impossible. One must see and absorb their magnificence, must see and grasp the untold attractions of the Middle West and Pacific to enjoy them properly. As to cost of travel to and from the Pacific Coast, to use an expression by one of our delegates, "It's dirt cheap in comparison to any trip on earth," and it is all things considered. The two expositions will be open for the remainder of the year, though it has been announced that the one at San Francisco will close Saturday, December 4, 1915. The writer has been to both of the exposition grounds, and assumes a pleasing task when he says they are well worth a visit. In fact, several visits. There are fully three months of fine weather left of this year to travel in, and if you have failed to take your usual outing, it would be well for you to consider a trip to the coast and take in some of the wonders which are so plentifully distributed in that section of America

If perchance you are unable to make the trip this year, why not begin to lay aside a few dollars each month and take advantage of the reduced railway rates which operate from May until November of each year. You may imagine that such advice is unnecessary, for you have probably concluded it is too costly. But when you figure the great amount of country covered and the points of interest which can be visited on a round-trip ticket, we would almost challenge you to show as fine returns for each dollar expended elsewhere for an outing which will prove a life-long pleasure and experience; one which you can enjoy over and over as you recall it.

Not many of our members have enough of this world's goods to make across-the-ocean trips to see Europe, and take it from us, and we know from experience, if you made both trips, the one on American soil would beat any other to a frazzle. America looks good to me; so good, in fact, that I would like to see you make the trip suggested, for you will never regret it.

PRESIDENT'S PAGE

BUFFALO, N. Y., August 25, 1915.

Mr. Jere L. Sullivan, General Secretary-Treasurer, Commercial Tribune Building, Cincinnati, O.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The officers and members of our local unions are requested to get copies of the new constitution (which can be had from the general office), which went into effect on the 19th day of August. There are a number of changes in our present laws which the officers and members should be conversant with, in order that the business of their local union may be properly conducted. I desire to call their special attention to the following sections that have been added:

"Section 64 (a). It shall be mandatory for a treasurer of a local union to deposit in a bank, designated by the local union, all moneys in excess of $25. The same shall be deposited in the name of the local union, and can not be withdrawn except by check signed by at least the signature of the president and treasurer of the local union."

"Section 64 (b) It is compulsory for all local unions to make an audit of their books quarterly (quarters ending March 31, June 30, September 30 and December 31), and to file a copy of the said audit with the General President within thirty days after the expiration of each quarter."

The purpose of the adoption of these laws by the San Francisco convention was to minimize the danger of any financial losses to our local unions. While the old law made the bonding of the financial officers of a local union compulsory, yet I found in a number of incidents where the provisions of the bond were not complied with. I have also found cases where the local union, whose officers were bonded, had failed to comply with the conditions under which the bond was issued—by auditing their books quarterly—thereby causing a forfeiture of the bond, and to avoid that as much as possible in the future, the above laws were enacted. And it becomes the duty of the local union to see that these provisions are lived up to and the quarterly audits made regularly, and a copy filed with this office within thirty days after the expiration of each quarter; and that the treasurer of the local union complies with the provisions of the above section and does not retain in his possession, funds of the local union in excess of $25, and that all over that amount is deposited in some bank in the name of the local union and designated by the local union for said depository; that the same can not be withdrawn from the said bank except by the signatures of at least the president and treasurer of the local union.

During the month I visited the following cities: July 28th, I left for Wilmington, Del., to take up matters in the interests of Local 466.

July 30th, to Philadelphia, where I called upon several of our members and visited the headquarters of Locals 115 and 279. Local 115 has established itself in new and elaborate headquarters at 926 N. Broad street, and they are making a special effort to strengthen their organization by bringing into their fold the yet unorganized men following their craft in their jurisdiction. I also desire to thank the business agent of Local 115, Bro. John McDevitt, for his visit to Wilmington.

July 31st, to Trenton, N. J., to take up matters in reference to some trouble that the musicians' union was having in that city.

August 1st, to Atlantic City, where I called on the officers of Local 491.

August 2d, to New York, and took up matters in the interest of our local unions in that city, as well as attending a meeting of the local joint executive board.

The convention of the New York Federation of Labor is now in session in this city, an account of which I will give in my next report.

The following correction should be made in Decision No. 612, as printed: the third line, second column, page ten, which reads as follows: "Mr. William J. Guest, secretary"—should be eliminated.

The following are my expenses:

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 619.

July 26, 1915.

MR. CHARLES MCCLUNG, Secretary, Local 485, Box 298, Spokane, Wash.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of the 22d, wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"We have a few members here who are acting as proprietors in brewery-owned saloons and working a shift as bartender themselves; they ask for withdrawal cards and I refused to grant them the same, as they would be taking the place of a bartender in good standing. Did I do right?"

If these proprietors are not the bona fide owners of the saloons in question—that is, if they do not assume any of the financial responsibilities and are working either for a straight salary or on a commission basis, they would not be entitled to a withdrawal card. If, on the other hand, the license is in their name and they assume full responsibility for all indebtedness incurred for stock, etc., and to all sense and purpose are the bona fide proprietors, excepting that the brewery may control the lease of the store or hold a chattel mortgage on the furniture or fixtures, they would be entitled to a withdrawal card. However, in order that they may retain our bar label in the event that they take out a withdrawal card, it will be necessary for them to employ at least one member of our local union. With greetings,

Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 620.

AUGUST 4, 1915.

MR. W. K. YOUNG, Secretary, Local 812, 174 N. Main street, Port Chester, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of the 27th ult., wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"Is a local union subject to suspension and fine if it does not pay its dues for the month of May until the 9th day of July? Does the month that you are supposed to pay tax for count as one of the two months that you are allowed under law?"

A local union that fails to pay its tax for the month of May by the first day of July, becomes suspended from the International Union, and in order to become reinstated they must comply with Section 61, which says: "The General Executive Board shall have power to reinstate a local suspended for non-payment upon a settlement in full by such local, with one dollar additional."

The month for which the tax is due counts as the first month, which, in the case cited above, would be May; the second month would be June, and if the tax was not paid on the first day of July the local union would automatically become suspended.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 621.

AUGUST 5, 1915.

MR. L. G. HUNSAKER, Secretary Local 153, 300 S. Fifth street, Quincy, Ill.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of the 1st, wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"The wage scale of Local 153 calls for $14 per week, and that includes Sundays. One proprietor in our city does not open his store on Sundays, his bartender working six days, and he insists upon deducting $2 on account of the bartender not working Sundays, and paying him $12 for the six days' work. We contend that the bartender is working under the scale, and that the card should be removed from the said establishment. Has Local 153 taken the proper steps, or not?"

"Bartenders employed steady, per week, not less than $14." There is nothing there that says Sundays are included, nor does it say that a week is to be composed of seven days. A reference to our dictionary tells us that a week is a cycle of time consisting of seven days; the six working days. Therefore, in the absence of any special clause certifying that the week is to be composed of seven working days, we must assume that there are only six working days to any one week; hence the scale of Local 253, which calls for $14 per week, can not be reduced to $12 because the establishment that a member happens to be working in is closed on the seventh day. The contention held by the local union is proper and in keeping with our law.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 622.

AUGUST 6, 1915.

MR. JAMES SCULLY, Secretary Local 20, 705½ Pine street, St. Louis, Mo.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me the protest filed against the enforcement of Section 24 by Local 20, on the grounds that the result of the vote cast on June 29, 1915, on the question of the enforcement of the said section or not, as announced by the inspectors of said election at the close of the polls, was not accurate and in accordance with the ballots cast. The matter was referred to the L. J. E. B. of St. Louis, and a recount of the said ballots was held in the presence of the entire board, and they report their findings as follows:

Against the enforcement of Section 24	191
In favor of the enforcement of Section 24	186
Ballots not marked	10
Ballots marked "Yes" and "No"	7
Ballots missing	9
Ballots destroyed	2

Total vote cast 405

Therefore, in accordance with the above findings by the L. J. E. B., I do hereby set aside the result of the vote as announced by the inspectors of the election held by Local 20 on June 29, 1915, so far as it applies to the question of the enforcement of Section 24 and all subsequent motions and resolutions bearing on the said question, and I do further declare and proclaim the vote as announced by the L. J. E. B. to be the official count of the ballots of the said referred to election on the question of the enforcement of the aforesaid section of the International Constitution.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 623.

AUGUST 7, 1915.

MR. T. V. DAILEY, Secretary, Local 71, Care Central Hotel, Dunbar, Pa.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me your request for a decision on the death claim of the late Brother James L. Doyle, who died March 5, 1915.

I find, in accordance with the statement that you submit to this office, that the said late brother became automatically suspended from membership on the 1st day of December, 1914, and that he did not reinstate himself to membership until the 6th day of December, 1914, at which time he paid for the months of October, November and December, 1914.

Section 159 of the International Union constitution says in part as follows:

"The International Union shall pay upon the death of a member who has been in continuous good standing for a period of six months preceding his or her death, the sum of fifty ($50) dollars," etc.

Section 60 of the International constitution says:

"Any local or member being two calendar months in arrears, stands suspended forthwith."

Therefore, in accordance with the law quoted above, the aforesaid member, not having been in continuous good standing for a period of six months preceding his death, is not entitled to the death benefit provided for in Section 159 of the International Union constitution.

It is with deep regret that I find myself compelled to render a decision of this character; I appreciate what a comfort the payment of this claim would be to the widow of the deceased member and my sympathy is with her, yet my duty and that of your general secretary-treasurer compels us to adhere strictly to the laws, as written in our constitution, and were we to vary from those laws in the payment of any claim, we would be personally held responsible for the same. I sincerely regret that this claim can not be allowed.

Tendering condolences to the family of the deceased member, I am,

Fraternally yours,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 624.

AUGUST 10, 1915.

MR. FRED G. MADILL, Secretary Local 320, 326 Hulett street, Schenectady, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me the correspondence aenent your appeal for a decision on the following question:

"At our regular meeting, held August 1, a delegate was elected to attend the convention of the New York State Federation of Labor, to be held at Buffalo, N. Y. After the election a motion was made and seconded that the delegate be allowed $50 for the trip, which is to include all his expenses. The said motion was carried without a dissenting vote. Now the president contends that that was not a legal vote, as we did not call for a three-fourths standing vote. The by-laws state that any appropriation over $25 can only be made by a three-fourths vote. Was the action of the local in making the appropriation of $50 legal and in accordance with our by-laws?"

Article V, Section 5, of the by-laws reads as follows:

"At no time can an appropriation of over $25 be made unless it is by a three-fourths vote of the membership of the local."

"Three-fourths vote of the membership of the local." What does that infer? The entire membership of a local union, or just those that attend the meeting? It is my judgment that the members in attendance at a meeting represent the entire membership of a local union, and any action that they may take would be equally binding on all of the members of the said local. Therefore, when a by-laws of a local calls for a three-fourths vote of the membership of a local, that, in my judgment, means the members present in a meeting, as all parliamentary laws and usages recognize the right of those in attendance at a meeting to legislate for the entire organization. Hence the number of members present at the meeting does not nullify the action of the local, assuming that it was less than three-fourths of the entire membership, nor does it affect the legal phrase of the question.

The legality of the appropriation rests on this point: Did the motion creating the appropriation receive a three-fourths vote of the members present at the meeting? If it did, then the action was legal.

"The said motion was carried without a dissenting vote." Parliamentary laws and usages again tell us that a member present when a vote is being taken, unless he votes in the negative or receives permission to refrain from voting, shall be recorded in the affirmative. Therefore, if there was no dissenting vote, the motion received the necessary three-fourths vote provided for in the by-laws and was legally adopted.

Therefore my decision is that Bro. Fred G. Madill is legally entitled to the amount set forth in the said motion.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 625.

AUGUST 13, 1915.

MISS ELIZABETH MALONEY, Secretary, Local 484, 35 South Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill.:

DEAR MISS AND SISTER—I have before me the appeal of Local 484 from the decision of the Local Joint Executive Board of Chicago in the case of the appeal of the members of the Illinois Waitresses' League.

I have endeavored on two occasions to get a statement from the said board aenent this appeal but received no response thereto.

The appeal of Local 484 is sustained and the action of the Local Joint Executive Board is reversed.

Fraternally yours,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 626.

AUGUST 17, 1915.

MR. LARRY CHASE, Secretary, Local 403, 11 N. Eldorado street, Stockton, Cal.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of the 12th, wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"Brother William Draper was penalized the sum of $5 for a violation of Section 47 of the local by-laws. This was on July 14, 1915. On July 30, 1915, he was reported sick, his dues were paid for the month of June, 1915. However, when his claim for sick benefits was presented, our president ruled that he was not entitled to benefits as the fine had not been paid. An appeal was taken from that ruling and I was instructed to write for a decision."

After a careful review of that portion of the by-laws of Local 403, under the captions of "Fines and Penalties" and "Sick Benefits," I failed to find any clause therein which would deny to a member with his dues paid within the sixty-day period—other conditions having been complied with—and a fine assessed against him, his rights to the benefits of the local. In other words, there is nothing set forth therein which says that a member penalized by a fine shall stand suspended until said fine is paid and in the absence of any specific clause governing that, it must be assumed that the said member is allowed a reasonable time—in the judgment of the local—in which he can pay the said fine and remain in good standing; however, the local union when placing the penalty could add in connection therewith, that the said member stands suspended until the said fine is paid, in which case the member would become suspended forthwith and remain so until the fine was paid, this irregardless as to the status of his membership at the time the penalty was imposed.

Decision No. 521, covering the payment of fines, says in part as follows:

"The constitution gives a local union the right to discipline its members, either by fine, suspension or expulsion, and it allows them to specify the manner in which the said penalty should be paid; and if a local union decides that a member penalized with a fine shall first pay that fine before his monthly dues are accepted, they are acting within their rights, and any member refusing to pay the said fine and allowing himself to become two calendar months in arrears, becomes a suspended member forthwith."

In consideration of the above facts, my conclusions are reached on the following assumptions: That there is no clause in the by-laws of Local 403 which says that a member fined stands suspended until the said fine is paid, and further, when the penalty was imposed upon the aforesaid member there was nothing said which would place him under suspension until the said fine was paid, and that so far as the status of his membership was concerned, he was within the sixty-day period when he was reported sick.

Therefore, my decision is that the aforesaid member was at the time that he was reported sick, a good standing member of Local 403 and entitled to all the rights and benefits of the said local union. With greetings,

Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 627.

August 17, 1915.

MR. EDW. O'DONNELL, Secretary, Local 739, Barr Hotel, S. Brownsville, Pa.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me your request for a decision on the following:

"Brother M. J. Dwyer took a traveling card and went to work in Finleyville, which is under the jurisdiction of Local 684, in a house that was never signed up by Local 684; he presented his traveling card to the business agent of Local 684, but because the business agent was unable to sign up the house and get the men working with Brother Dwyer to join the union, they refused to accept his traveling card and the said brother is back in our jurisdiction and desires to become reinstated. Can we reinstate him?"

Under date of July 29, 1915, Local 684 advised Local 739 as follows:

"In reference to Mr. Dwyer, our committee made two trips to Finleyville to see him in regards to working there in an unfair house, also working with a man who did not belong to the union; not getting any satisfaction from him, we did not accept his traveling card; therefore it is up to your local to handle his case as you see fit."

Under date of August 16, Local 684 submits in part as follows:

"On May 1, 1915, Mrs. M. Hayden was granted a license; a committee waited on her manager. Mr. Hayden, on May 4th and asked him to employ union men, and he asked to be given until the 11th to consider the matter. We called on him on the 14th and he said he had the two men that he wanted and that he would not let the non-union men go. Our business agent then stated the case of Brother Dwyer and he refused to consider our demand not to work with a non-union man and said he would work in spite of Local 684. Therefore, our business agent refused to accept his traveling card."

The business agent of Local 684 erred in not accepting the traveling card of Brother Dwyer and in that manner placing him under the jurisdiction of Local 684 and subject to its laws and directions. Charges could have been preferred against him and the local could have penalized him in accordance with the will of the majority, but having refused to accept his card, left him a member of Local 739, where his membership rests at the present time and where he must apply for reinstatement if he allowed himself to become suspended. If Local 684 have any grievance against him, they can prefer charges against him with this office and the same will be given customary consideration; but without any charges having been filed against Brother Dwyer, the question of his reinstatement rest with Local 739, and if he has complied with their laws, they are justified in accepting his reinstatement. However, this does not vindicate him from his actions while in the jurisdiction of Local 684 and should charges be filed against him by Local 684, he will be subject to such punishment as the judgment of this office may deem warranted. With greetings

Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 628.

AUGUST 17, 1915.

MR. THOMAS GARRITY, Local 81, 787 Dwight St., Holyoke, Mass.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me your request for a decision on the following:

"At a meeting of Local 81, held March 21, 1915, James Kelley, a member of Local 619, was transferred to Local 81. At the meeting of June 8th, the president declared the action of the local in accepting the said transfer, illegal, on the grounds that the regular traveling card form provided for by the International Union was not used in making the transfer, an application blank being used in its stead. Was the said transfer legal?"

Local unions that issue or accept transfer of members from one local union to another, on or in any other manner than that provided and prescribed for by the laws of the International Union, lay themselves open to punishment for the said violation, and the issuing of a transfer certificate on any other blank than the regular traveling card provided for by the International Union is a violation of the International Union laws.

However, the question involved here is, whether a member should be made to suffer for the act of two local unions in violating the law and I am frank to confess that I do not think he should, and to declare his transfer illegal would be placing upon the member's shoulder the penalty which should justly be charged against the local unions. I am therefore holding that the transfer of the membership of Brother James Kelley from Local 619 to Local 81 to be legal, but in so doing, I also desire to admonish both Locals 619 and 81 that a repetition of this offense will warrant this office in disciplining both local unions. With greetings.

Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 629.

August 17, 1915.

MR. JERE L. SULLIVAN, Commercial Tribune Building, Cincinnati, Ohio:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of August 16th, wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"Sections 102 and 172 appear to seriously conflict, which of the two sections are operative?"

"Section 16 'A' provides a minimum of 75 cents which we interpret to apply to female members. Section 163 seems to conflict and, in fact, so does Section 156 appear to do likewise. How shall we reconcile these seemingly conflicting sections?"

Relative to the confliction of Sections 102 and 172, the last convention amended Section 102 to read as shown in the new constitution. I assume that inasmuch as that is later legislation than Section 172, that Section 172 insofar as it conflicts with Section 102 is inoperative.

With reference to the alleged confliction of Sections 16 "A" and 156 with Section 163, it is my understanding that the intent of the last convention was to exact a minimum of $1.00 per month dues from male members and 75 cents per month from female members; and the use of the word "minimum" in Section 16 "A" and "least" in Section 156 is the minimum that can be charged and applies according to sex. With greetings, I am,

Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

FREEDOM REIGNS SUPREME IN THE STATE OF MONTANA.

Less Drunkenness There Than in Prohibition Maine.

"Out here in Montana," says the National Forum, "a man can take a drink when he feels like it. He goes in at the front door. He does not have to be a hypocrite and sneak around the back way. He does not have to patronize the boot-legger and the speak-easy. Montana is the most prosperous State in the Union. The wages of workingmen are the highest. Montana is liberal in every way. Everybody believes in liberty and freedom. The people of Montana are big-hearted, whole-souled and generous. There is less poverty, less pauperism, less prostitution and less prohibition than there is in any of the hide-bound, boot-legging anti-saloon States where hypocrites thrive. The honor of women is cherished and their virtue protected to a degree beyond that in any prohibition State. There is less drunkenness in wet Montana than there is in prohibition Maine."

That the foregoing is substantially true no one who pretends to keep in touch with what is taking place in that State will deny, and yet there is much to be said and a whole lot to be considered in connection with the situation in Montana as it exists at this writing. Of the 146,201 square miles within the commonwealth, 36,549 are no license, and out of a total population of 376,053, it is estimated that 15,000 live under no license. The unexampled prosperity of the catering industry in Montana has no doubt caused many employers and employees to carry the conviction that the drys will never be able to make any headway, but they are making a serious error, for any number of excellent reasons which could be offered. Oregon, ten or twelve years ago, enjoyed almost identically the ideal conditions which the citizens of Montana now boast. They, too, carried the impression that the no license agitation would never become strong enough to eliminate the licensed beverage establishments, yet in the year 1910 they had almost half of their State taken from them, and the entire State voted dry last November.

In the year 1902, when Local 339 was organized, there was not in all of the State of Oregon a dry spot. In 1905 similar conditions prevailed, and it was not until the following year that the Antis jumped into the campaign and began to show their strength. The voters in Montana are not greatly different from the voters of Oregon. Too many of them seem to think that because they have enjoyed immunity heretofore that they are going to have things as they wish them. The Anti aggregation is bending every effort toward winning portions of Montana. They have several irons in the fire, and we know the leaders of the Antis well enough to say that none of those irons will be permitted to cool off. The Antis are determined to put a circle of dry States on the map of the United States. If you have any doubts as to their intentions, take down a map of the United States and see for yourself. As an aid to getting an accurate view of the situation, read the table on page 26 of the convention memorandum in the July, 1915, MIXER AND SERVER. They are out working ceaselessly to secure added territory. Even while this is being written the battle is on at a terrific pace in Minnesota. Our members in the State of Montana have an immense task to handle; we have full confidence in them, but we have reasonable doubts about the "go-as-you-please voters" who are difficult to convince of the seriousness of the situation.

When one sizes up the situation he is forced to admit that it was not anti voters who won the elections in Colorado, Arizona, Oregon and Washington. It was the indifferent, hard-to-convince stay-aways who made victory sure for the drys. Get busy on the camp of the indifferents; wake them up, is the bit of advice we offer to the workers in Montana.

DID YOU EVER THINK?

Did you ever think as a hearse passed by
 That it would not be long until you or I
 Would be taking a ride in that black plumed hack
 And never remember the coming back?

Did you ever think as you strive for gold
 That a dead man's hand can't a dollar hold?
 No matter how much you earn or save
 You must leave it all when you go to the grave.

It is better to buy a cheap bouquet
 For a living soul this very day
 Than a bushel of roses, white and red,
 To place on his casket when he's dead.—Exchange.

WHAT OUR ORGANIZERS ARE DOING

HOLYOKE, MASS., August 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the past month:

As per instructions regarding re-organization of former Local 726. After considerable energy and time being devoted along these lines, it was evident the men working at that branch of the trade did not wish to belong to the trade union movement. I collected the old charter and outfit, bar labels, etc. It would be well for our locals throughout the country to note former members coming from Local 726, Ottawa, Canada, and refer them to the general office. Everything possible was done to interest the culinary workers in establishing a local, but they could not see their way clear. The depression of business in this line of work is responsible.

I attended the following meetings while in Canada: Locals 315, 440, 753, 506. Assisted Business Agent Beulion of Local 506, on several important matters.

To Sherbrooke; assisted the officers of Local 753 in straightening out existing trouble there.

To Quebec in the interests of our crafts, but, after looking over the ground, I decided the time was not opportune. I attended a meeting of Local 619 and assisted the officers in straightening out existing trouble that they were having with several houses in the city. As per instructions, considerable time was devoted in auditing the books and accounts of Local 81.

The following is my expense account:

July 28, to Montreal, $3.40; July 30, to Sherbrooke, $3.75; July 31, to Montreal, $3.75; August 2, to Quebec, 6.55; August 6, to Holyoke, $18.20; baggage, car fare and 'phone, $3.75; postage, and typewriting, $2.50; stamps and stationery, $2.25; exchange on checks, 25 cents. Total, $44.40.

Yours fraternally,

THOS. J. DURNIN,
International Organizer.

LOS VAGES, N. M., August 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month:

My last report left me in Phoenix. On July 27 visited Central Council. Put in the remainder of the month and up to August 4, in Phoenix, assisting in getting contracts signed for another year. We were successful in getting all the houses signed that we had cards in and one other house that was just opened.

On August 4 attended meeting of Local 631.

Arrived in Tucson on August 6. Attended Central Body on August 8. Decided, after interviewing some of the members-at-large of our International there, and all the culinary workers I could find in town, that there are not enough culinary workers in the town to maintain a local.

Went to Bisbee on August 9, and on the 10th attended the Central Body.

On August 11 attended a meeting of Local 380 and took part in assisting the officers in preventing a walkout for eight hours, that they were not prepared to win and did not have the sanction of either the Central Body or the International.

On the 12th to Douglas.

On the 13th, attended a special meeting of Local 295. Out of 43 members in town, there were 38 present. They are making progress and are deserving of a great deal of credit as their's is the only charter in Douglas.

On the 14th, to Deming.

On the 15th, to Silver City.

On the 18th, to Albuquerque.

On the 20th, to Sante Fe.

On the 22nd, to Los Vages, and did not find a sufficient number of craftsmen in any one of the above-named cities to maintain a local, so did not organize any.

The population of the State of New Mexico is about 71 per cent Mexicans and in the above-named towns it is from about 70 to 90 per cent, and in most of the towns the Chinamen have a good part of the catering business, and Greeks and Italians a big per cent of the saloon business.

The following are my expenses for the month:

Aug. 6—Phoenix to Tucson.....	$ 4 85
Aug. 9—Tucson to Bisbee.....	4 45
Aug. 12—Bisbee to Douglas.....	1 00
Aug. 14—Douglas to Deming.....	6 60
Aug. 15—Deming to Silver City.....	1 90
Aug. 18—Silver City to Albuquerque.....	14 60
Aug. 20—Albuquerque to Sante Fe.....	9 75
Aug. 22—Sante Fe to Los Vages.....	3 45
Transfer for the month.....	2 00
Sleepers for the month.....	4 50
Total	$53 10

OMAHA, NEB., August 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Enclosed find my expense for the month of August.

Since my last report I have secured a charter for the culinary workers of Omaha. We have started out fairly well; of course the same old opposition that the culinary workers have had for years and the nasty work has started, but I believe we are going to win. We are going to have Willie Sunday with us in September and he has started a new line of work, and that is, he has had spys here for the last few months trying to get evidence of violation of the laws by the saloonkeepers, and at the present time has filed charges against a few places and is making quite a noise, and I am sorry to say, that our friends are not as active as they should be.

Enclosed find my expense account for the month of August.

Hall rent and notices for three meetings of Local 143, $4.00; local car fare and phone for month, $2.00; postage, 80 cents; repair on typewriter and supplies, $2.00; extra expense on account of special work, $25.00. Total, $33.80.

With best wishes, I remain,

Yours fraternally,

BEN. GORTON,
International Organizer.

CHICAGO, ILL., August 28, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—My report for the month follows:

August 1st, attended meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

On the 5th, Cooks' Union, Local 865.

On the 6th, Lathers' Union.

On the 9th, Steamfitters' Union.

On the 10th, Carpenters' Union.

On the 11th, Tool Makers, Gardeners, Upholsterers and Stone Planers' Unions.

On the 13th, District Council of Machinists, and Grievance Committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

On the 16th, Boot and Shoe Workers and Machinists' Unions.

On the 17th, Teamsters and Painters' Unions.

On the 18th, Brickmakers and Iron Workers' Unions.

On the 19th, Coopers and Machinists' Unions.

On the 20th, Grievance Committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

On the 23rd, to Roseland, to attend a called meeting of defunct Local 702, by Vice-President Foster.

On the 24th, Calumet Joint Labor Council, Roseland.

The meetings I visited were well attended. I requested in my remarks, their moral support and assistance in organizing our crafts.

The rest of the month I was engaged in canvassing for applicants for membership.

My expenses for month follows:

Exchange on checks.....	$0 20
Local carfare	3 20
Telephone	50
Stationery and Postage.....	75

Total $4 65

With best wishes, I remain,

Fraternally yours,

CHICAGO, ILL., August 28, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—From the date of my last report until August 13th, the major portion of my time was taken up working on the bartenders' proposition in the loop, as per instructions, after which I was again instructed to take up the waiter proposition.

I met the Grievance Committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor several times to try and bring about a meeting of delegates from Local 35 and the Chicago Waiters' Association. This we were successful in doing. At the last meeting of the joint committee of delegates, a proposition was accepted by all concerned that was gratifying indeed and it bids fair to bring about the desired results in the near future. At least we have, to my mind, made a start in the right direction.

A great deal of credit should be given to the Grievance Committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor for their earnest efforts in trying to assist in thoroughly organizing the waiters of Chicago.

I made three trips to Roseland; first, to arrange for a meeting of members of defunct Local 702; second, to attend said meeting, which was held Monday, August 23rd. Meeting poorly attended. Third, to attend meeting of the Calumet Joint Labor Council to get their assistance in another effort to bring the ex-members of Local 702 together. I was promised their hearty support and August 31st was the date set for the next meeting.

In conjunction therewith I also attended the following meetings during the month:

Two meetings of the Chicago Federation of Labor. One meeting of the Local Joint Executive Board. Two meetings of Local 456. One meeting of Local 865. Meetings of Lathers, Steamfitters, Carpenters, Carriage and Auto Workers, Cigar-makers, Machinists, Sign Painters, Teamsters, Carpenters No. 1, Upholsterers, Gasfitters, Stereotypers, Carpenters No. 1693, Hoisting Engineers, Stone Planermen, Tool and Die Makers, Metal Polishers, Horseshoers and Bridge and Structural Iron Workers. Also attended meeting and assisted my colleagues in trying to get Local 401 in line.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Four trips to Roseland and return on the 5th, 16th, 23rd and 25th, $2.08; stationery supplies, $1.60; local carfare for month, $3.00; telephone, $2.50; postage, $1.77; exchange on checks, 20 cts. Total, $11.15.

Fraternally submitted,

BUFFALO, N. Y., August 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Following is my report for the month of August:

August 1st, attended a meeting of Local 320 at Schenectady, in order to make my report as delegate to the 18th general convention.

August 2nd, to Newburg, as suggested by the general office. In looking over the situation there I deemed it unwise to waste any time on the matter, as only a few waiters are employed in the city. Met the officers of the bartenders' local, and advised with them.

August 5th, to Utica, to take up the work of organizing the culinary workers, and a charter list has been started.

August 10th, attended a meeting of the Utica Trades Assembly, and will have the support of that body in organizing the culinary workers.

August 13th, received word from the general office to go to Buffalo, where an organizing campaign has been started with the local joint executive board.

August 15th, attended a meeting of the convention arrangement committee, and took up some matters with them regarding headquarters' hotel.

August 16th, attended a meeting of the organization and legislative committees of the Trades and Labor Council, and took up several matters with them.

August 18th, took up some grievances with the arbitration committee.

August 19th, attended the meeting of Niagara Falls Trades and Labor Council—the bartenders, I was told, wanted to organize—so with District

Organizer Murphy, I started out to secure a charter list, and by the time this report reaches the membership, the bartenders of Niagara Falls will be back "in the fold."

August 23rd, attended meeting of the Cigarmakers' Blue Label League, and they promised to support our local unions throughout the State.

August 24th, helped to organize a local of retail clerks at Niagara Falls. The New York State Federation of Labor is holding its 52nd annual convention in Buffalo, August 24-27. A number of our local unions are represented, but every local should have a delegate present. We are in hopes of getting some good resolutions through the State Federation.

August 27th, attended meeting of Local 196, and took up work of organization with them. The result of the organizing campaign here is beginning to show results, and I feel sure that a large number of members will be added to both locals.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Aug. 2—Schenectady to Newburg.....	$2 23
Aug. 5—Newburg to Utica.....	3 79
Aug. 14—Utica to Buffalo.....	4 04
Chair	1 00
Aug. 14—Buffalo to Niagara Falls—3 round trips	1 80
Telegram	36
Printing Emergency Blanks.....	1 50
Postage	24
Total	$14 96

Respectfully submitted,

JERSEY CITY, N. J., August 26, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the past month:

July 27th, attended meeting of Local 448, Jersey City.

July 28th. American Federation of Labor Organizer Duffy and Miss Scully, of Federation, called upon me to assist them in getting from Public Safety Commissioner F. Hague, of Jersey City, proper protection for girls on picket line in big strike here at Reigel Sacks paper bag factory; the claim being made that police were exceeding their authority. Commissioner assured us of getting a square deal and to report any official going beyond the limit.

July 29th. Jersey City, in conference with joint committee of Building Trades Council and Central body, having in charge arrangements for coming State Federation of Labor Convention.

July 30th. Afternoon at meeting of culinary workers in Jersey City. In the evening to Essex Trades Council at Newark.

July 31st. To downtown New York City, to meet with Business Agent Early of Bartenders' Local 118, and arrange for a meeting, as well as to have this local make preparations for complying with orders from general office.

August 2nd. In company with General President E. Flore, attended meeting of Local Joint Board of New York City.

August 3rd. To Passaic, N. J., to pay my respects to the remains of our late brother, Harry Stryker, formerly secretary of Passaic bartenders' union, but was disappointed on my arrival there to learn that his body was removed to the home of his mother in the city of Newark, N. J., and previous engagements made kept me from being able to attend his funeral. Brother Stryker was a true trades unionist and the bar boys of Paterson and Passaic, N. J., have lost a true friend indeed, as well as the labor movement in general. May his soul rest in peace. Amen.

August 4th and 5th. As per instructions from general office, working in New York City in the interest of Local 244.

August 6th. At meeting of Essex Trades Council, Newark, N. J.

August 7th. At 12 St. Marks Place, New York City, to attend meeting of Bartenders' District Council.

August 8th. At headquarters of Local 488, of Jersey City, going over books of former officials.

August 9th. At joint board meeting of locals in New York City.

August 10th. Presided at meeting of bartenders in Jersey City. This local at present, needs attention, and I am doing my utmost to keep the boys in line until I get a live and capable business manager, as Brother J. Muldoon, of Waiters' Local 575, of same city, is also business agent for the bar boys at present and acting in the same capacity for the culinary workers, makes it certain that he has to keep going to make good, and he is showing results.

August 11th. At meeting of Local 244, of New York City. I called for the purpose of nominating and electing a new set of officers, as I understand it has been many a month since this local held a meeting, but the boys responded cheerfully to my invitation to get together, and I look for a bigger and better local in that section of the city.

August 12th. Addressed the delegates at meeting of the Central Labor Union of Hudson County.

August 13th. At meeting of Local 1, New York City.

August 15th. At Executive Board Meeting of State Federation of Labor in Jersey City, to complete arrangements for visiting delegates.

August 16th, 17th and 18th. At convention of State Federation of Labor of New Jersey, and secured the passage of resolutions favoring our allied crafts.

August 20th. With Business Agent Early, of Local 118, down town bartenders of New York City, and in the evening to city of Paterson, N. J., to assist in the organizing of a personal liberty league, and this body at the start got right down to business, and is going to show the Anti-Saloon League and candidate for the Assembly, Mr. Blauvelt, that there is no time like the present to start an early campaign against the common enemy. Culinary workers and bartenders, as well as brewery workers, were well represented at this gathering, which was held at Bergen Hall, 107 Market Street. These meetings will be held every Friday evening until after election, and I hope our boys will attend regularly.

August 22nd. At Carnival of Plattdeutsche Union Hill Schuetzen Park, Union Hill, N. J., to adjust matters of interest to our surrounding locals, as several locals had members working on this occasion.

August 23rd. At meeting of local joint board New York City. A low initiation fee, at my suggestion, was endorsed and if all locals here will adopt same, an increase in membership will result in the big city.

August 24th. To Passaic, N. J., and attended meeting of bartenders' local, to adjust matters left unsettled by death of their late secretary-treasurer, Brother H. Stryker.

August 25th. Installed officers of Local 244, New York City; in the evening to meeting of Local 118, downtown, called by me for the purpose of getting this local back in the running, as it has been many months since this local has transacted any business. Pleased to see the large turnout and in my next report I hope to be able to inform our general membership that Local 118 is among the leaders in the big city.

The following is my expense account for the month:

July 30—Jersey City to Newark and return.	$0 30
Aug. 3—Jersey City to Passaic, N. J. and return	55
Aug. 6—Jersey City to Newark and return.	30
Aug. 20—Jersey City to Paterson, N. J., and return	70
Aug. 24—Jersey City to Passaic and return	55
Postage	61
Phone use	55

CHICAGO, ILL., August 28, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—My report for the month of August is as follows:

On July 28 we tried to secure an audience with the manager of a certain chain of restaurants, but after three unsuccessful attempts were made we gave it up for that date.

From August 2nd until the 14th, the days were spent in canvassing the loop district of Chicago in quest of new members, but the method we employed proved unsuccessful, and since that time we have been working on them from another angle.

August 1st, attended the meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor.

The afternoon of August 6th, attended the meeting of Waiters' Union, Local 484. Seven new members were initiated.

The evening of August 6, we all attended the meetings of the Lathers and Metal Polishers.

August 9th, attended the meetings of the Steamfitters and Sign Painters.

August 10th, visited the Carpenters and Cigarmakers' meetings.

August 11th, visited the meetings of the Toolmakers, Florists and Upholsterers.

August 12th, visited the Carpenters and Electrical Workers' meetings.

August 13th, visited the Machinists' District Council, in search of information in regard to a man by the name of Cuneen, an employe of the Anti-Saloon League, who poses as a machinist.

August 16th, visited the meetings of the Boot and Shoe Workers and Machinists.

August 17th, visited the meetings of the Teamsters and Painters.

August 18th, visited the Brickmakers and Iron Workers' meetings.

August 19th, visited the Carpenters and Machine's meetings.

We gave short talks at all these meetings, and were well received and assured the moral support of these organizations in our work in Chicago.

August 20th, we held a conference with the Grievance Committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor, and the matter that they are handling.

August 23rd, we held another conference with the Grievance Committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor in the afternoon, and in the evening of same date we attended a meeting of the former members of Local 702, of Kensington. Brother Foster sent out sixty-five letters, calling this meeting and only four showed up.

August 24th, we attended the meeting of the Calumet Joint Labor Council of Roseland, and this honorable body pledged their moral support to us in our work in that district.

August 26th, we held another conference with the Grievance Committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor, and this committee is certainly working hard on the matter which is in their hands and can always be found in their office at the time arranged for call of meeting, and their ardent efforts in behalf of our International should be rewarded with success.

The evening of August 26th, we visited the meeting of the Structural Iron Workers.

August 27th, we picked up all bar cards being displayed in Roseland.

My expense account for the past month is as follows:

Local carfare for month.....	$4 80
Stationery and postage.....	1 30
Telephone service	80

Total $6 90

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., August 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of August:

July 27th. Attended meeting of the Minnesota Trades Union League, to prevent unemployment and to promote the principle of Home Rule. This league was instituted by such labor unions that are directly and indirectly identified with the liquor traffic, to combat any adverse legislation. At this meeting a committee of two were elected to go to Koochiching County, namely Mulholland of the plumbers and steamfitters and Weigel of the cigarmakers' unions, to accompany George W. Lawson, secretary of the Minnesota State Federation of Labor, and the writer. Same day, in company with Organizer Anderson, took up a matter of long standing with the "Twin City Waiters' Association," by instruction of Vice-President Hoffman. Can report progress to that extent that these waiters may see the light clear to affiliate with our International Union in the near future.

July 28th. Arrived at International Falls, Minn., and with Secretary Lawson at once got in touch with the various organizations of that city in the County Option fight that was scheduled to take place Monday, August 2, in Koochiching County, to lay out a plan of action.

The following day went to Ranier, Minn.

August 1st. Attended meeting of Bartenders' Union, Local 310, of International Falls, and after an address given by the representatives that accompanied me to this city, the undersigned gave our members a talk. The members of this local were instructed by their president to be at the polls at 6:00 a. m. and remain there until the vote was taken and recorded. That afternoon, C. A. Windle of Chicago, addressed a packed meeting at the Grand Opera House on the evil of Prohibition, County Option, etc. At the same place a mass meeting was held by the Trades and Labor Assembly of International Falls, Secretary Lawson and the undersigned were the speakers. International Falls and Ranier gave a majority vote of 300 over the Drys. Sorry to mention that when the outlying districts were heard from Koochiching County went dry by 13 votes. This will be contested by the Wets.

August 3rd. Left International Falls, by way of Fort Frances, Canada, stopping off at Duluth, meeting President Hall, of the State Federation of Labor. While at Duluth, took up the matter of Bartenders' Union, Local 574, with Secretary Fred Bernard, the necessity of their affiliation with the Trades Union League of Minnesota. That means that they will be requested to contribute their mite, because it is only a short period off when St. Louis County will be up against County Option, and taking all things into consideration, it is natural they will need assistance. Come across, Local 574, and meet the toll. While mentioning the above, it is also considered that Local 287 and Local 408 of St. Paul, likewise Local 600 of Duluth, will affiliate at once.

August 4th. Attended meeting of the Minneapolis Trade and Labor Assembly, and will say that we have the honor of having Brother Sinton, of Cooks' Union, Local 458, as the secretary of the Assembly.

August 6th. Went to Hopkins, Minn., and met with a committee of the Minnesota Trade Union League in the interest of our allied crafts.

August 8th. Went to St. Paul to attend meeting of Bartenders' Union, Local 287, but owing to a parade of the "United Catholic Societies," and the saloons being permitted to open during the time of this parade, our members were forced to toil, and as a natural consequence no meeting could be called. Organizers Martel and Anderson were present.

August 18th. Attended meeting of Carriage, Wagon and Automobile Workers' Union, Local 193, on a matter that vitally interests their craft, and also those organizations that are identified with the Minnesota Trade Union League. Was accompanied by Business Agent Ives, of the engineers' union. Throughout the month attended the meetings of our allied crafts in Minneapolis regularly, and will mention that a steady increase in membership has been shown by the culinary organizations.

August 22nd. The County Optionists of Hennepin County, fired their first gun at the Auditorium. The ministers in the various churches announced during the morning services, that there would be no evening services held, and that every member of their churches would be requested to be in attendance. This brought out fifteen females to every male that attended. Judge Pollock, of Fargo, North Dakota, and ex-Congressman Lentz, of Ohio, were the principal speakers for the Drys. It was announced that they would have a parade of their women and children folks in the near future for the purpose of creating a feeling against the sale of liquor. Let me state at this time the Minnesota Trades Union League will also arrange for a similar demonstration.

August 24th. Attended meeting of the Minnesota Trades Union League. A committee from this league will wait on the Brewers' Association, August 27th, Organizer Anderson and the undersigned having been appointed to this conference.

The following is my expense account for the month:

HOUSTON, TEXAS, Aug. 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of August, extending from the 24th of July to this date:

On July 28th, I went to Marlin, Texas, to try to line up a local in that city, and after visiting and conferring with quite a number, I made arrangements for a return trip, as there were several of the main ones I wanted to see out on a fishing trip. On the 29th, back to Waco. On August 1st, I went to Mart to attend the meeting of our new local in that city and returning to Waco on the 4th, I attended a meeting of our new local in that city and the same evening being the regular meeting of the central body, we went in a body to that meeting.

On August 8th, I attended a meeting of the bartenders and on the 9th went to Marlin to see what could be done towards organizing that town; found only one restaurant in the city and it was a Greek place. The bartenders did not seem to know what a union was and looked at me like I was an animal. Marlin is the Hot Springs of Texas and not a local union in the town; the hotels are operated by negroes and there are a thousand boarding houses; found it was no place for an organizer and I returned to Waco.

On the 20th, I received orders to go at once to Galveston and ascertain if our people in the flooded city were in need of help, and immediately left for Houston, that being as far as one could buy a ticket; arrived in Houston on the 21st at 7 o'clock and found I could not reach Galveston, that city being quarantined against the outside world and under strict martial law. After sending several telegrams, I succeeded on Sunday at 2 p. m. in getting Brother Lusk of Local 69 over the long distance telephone at double the regular price and with a limit of three minutes; learned from Brother Lusk that Galveston was in a deplorable condition and our members in need of help. Brother Lusk losing his home and its contents. With this information, I wired the general office Sunday evening at 3 o'clock, and continued trying to reach Galveston, but no one could enter the city until the 24th, when I succeeded in getting across the line after showing my credentials and the letter from the general office advising me to go to the assistance of our people in the stricken city. The mayor and a number of fat bankers and pie eaters had previously sent out a telegram to the world that Galveston did not need help, to keep the world from knowing the real facts for fear their future would be ruined as to real estate prices. I want to say now and here that when I did reach the stricken city I witnessed a sight I never want to see again. The water stood six or more feet deep in the city, and from what I could see, Galveston alone has suffered ten million dollars damage. The saloons are all closed or the doors are closed on a ruined set of fixtures; there are a few restaurants trying to run, the majority being washed away. For fifteen miles inland all live stock were drowned and are now lying in heaps along the prairie. There is no use for me trying to explain all, it would take up too much space. No human could conceive the destruction unless he be on the ground and see for himself. Our people will suffer unless they get help—not only ours, but thousands of others. There is no water, but very little to eat, and hundreds are without clothes or even a home, all being washed away. The conditions here are very bad, indeed.

My expense account is as follows:

July 28 and 29—To Marlin and return.....	$1 60
Aug. 1 and 5—Mart and return.....	1 30
9 and 10—To Marlin and return.....	1 60
14 and 15—To Mart and return.....	1 30

LOS ANGELES, CAL., Aug. 24, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of August:

August 4th, attended meeting of Cooks' Local 27, and was invited to preside by request of the local; business of importance was considered and nomination of officers took place; one new member was initiated.

August 4th, attended local joint executive board meeting; matters of importance to both locals were acted upon.

August 5, attended meeting of Local 17, waiters; two members were initiated and two reinstated.

August 7, called upon a committee with Brother Palmer and secretary of the local joint executive board of the German Singing Society, with the purpose of having them employ members of Locals 17 and 27.

August 9th, with Brother Dale, state organizer of the A. F. of L., called on proprietors with a view of signing up a house.

August 10th, was invited to speak at an open meeting of the Sheet Metal Workers' Local Union No. 108; spoke on the benefit of organizing all crafts, and asked their assistance in helping our crafts.

August 11th, Called on committee of International Typographical Union and asked that a list of all union houses be given to the delegates to their convention, which request was granted.

August 12th, with Business Agent Palmer, went to a number of houses to get members of other locals to put their card in Local 17.

August 12th, a meeting was called for the purpose of forming an organization of hotel employees, but for good reasons no meeting was held.

August 12th, Cooks' Local 27 held an election of officers; one new member was initiated.

August 13th, attended Central Labor Council, where the usual routine of business was indulged in.

August 14th, attended address given by Hon. W. B. Wilson, secretary of labor; he explained the Clayton bill.

August 17th and 18th, called on waitresses at their home address for the purpose of forming a waitresses' local.

August 19th, attended meeting of Waiters' Local 17; a number of reinstatements were made, and new business taken up.

August 21st and 22d, called on proprietors of different houses with a view of having them sign up and send to the offices of Locals 17 and 29 when in need of help.

August 23d, signed up new house; on the 24th, secured the application of two waiters in the newly signed up house; on the 25th, attended meeting of Local 27 in order to solicit co-operation.

My expenses for the month are as follows:

Phone for month	$1 00
Local and suburban car fare.....	1 50
Stamps and stationery.....	50
Baggage transfer	75
 Total.....	$3 75

PORLAND, ORE., Aug 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the past month:

Continued work of assisting Secretary Henry Harder in straightening out the affairs of Waiters and Waitresses' Local 189; canvassed the entire city and completed audit of accounts.

On August 12th, forwarded check to headquarters in payment of April and May per capita, and on the 27th forwarded payment of June and July per capita, completing the full reinstatement of the local; the membership is approaching the 200 mark and with the adoption of a militant program, will be on the right road to prosperity.

The advent of State-wide prohibition indicates this will soon be a girls' town; the elimination of the waiter is proceeding rapidly, the waitresses, now in the majority, control the organization.

Conditions in the kitchens are simply deplorable, the Japanese having completely displaced the white cooks; full Japanese crews everywhere working under the direction of white chefs. Employers' Association is strongly organized here and very active for the "open shop."

On August 15th, all the union musicians employed in the theaters and movie houses were locked out with the end not yet in sight.

During the month attended all meetings of our two locals, the central councils and as many of the affiliated unions as was possible to make without interfering with my canvass of the night shifts.

Expense account—Postage, 50c; telephone and car fare, $2; total, $2.50.

Yours fraternally,
F. E. MERRYFIELD,
General Organizer.

EDMONTON, ALTA., August 24, 1915:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of August:

Since my last report I have been successful in putting cards in four cafes, thereby adding largely to the membership of Local 55, initiating sixteen on August 13th, and seventeen on August 15th, and five on the 20th and ten applications pending.

Regarding the Grand Trunk Pacific Hotel, after taking into consideration the existing labor depression I believed it in the best interests of Local 55 to leave it an open house. We have been able to place one night chef, one captain and three bartenders.

My expenses for the month are as follows:
Exchange on check..... $0 25
Postage 80
Exchange on check..... 25

Total $1 30

CHICAGO, ILL., August 28, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report from July 22nd:

Went to East St. Louis, Ill., as per instruction, to investigate the complaint made against Local 332, by Musicians' Union No. 2, St. Louis, Mo.

July 23rd, met a committee from both locals at headquarters. After Business Agent Hunter B. Keith explained that a former business agent of his local sold the house cards and bar signs to proprietors for five and ten dollars apiece, those proprietors refused to hire union bartenders, waiters or musicians, and Business Agent Keith has done all in his power to get those signs. The musicians' committee was satisfied that a mistake had been made.

July 24th, visited all the gardens and most of the cafes in his jurisdiction. Brother Keith accompanied me. He sure has got the town lined up.

July 25th, attended St. Louis Central Trades and Labor Union and assisted in electing Brother Joe Kinney a delegate to the State Federation of Labor. Local 20 has been represented at the last three State conventions.

July 26th, 27th, 28th and 29th, assisted the representatives of our affiliated locals.

July 30th, arrived in Chicago as per instructions, and joined our third vice-president, W. H. Foster.

August the 1st, attended the Chicago Federation of Labor, and from the 2nd to the 20th of August, canvassed the loop with application blanks; also attended the following labor organizations: Metal polishers, sign painters, gasfitters, florists, stone planers, beer bottle drivers, cigar makers, plumbers, engineers, inspectors, structural iron workers, sprinklers' union, steamfitters, and all our affiliated crafts. Some of the brothers were not very friendly to any of the organizers at first, but things have changed as they know we are doing good business. The bad actors have disappeared from the scene, the rest of them are going down the line and starting to boost. Our slogan is "Throw away your hammers and blow your horns."

The following is my expense account from July 22nd:

Street car fare, St. Louis and East St. Louis	$0 90
St. Louis to Chicago.....	7 50
Sleeper	2 00
Baggage	75
Postage and stationery.....	50
Local suburban car fare.....	4 50
 Total	 $16 15

Yours fraternally,
ROBT. LYONS,

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., August 26, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—My report for the month of August is as follows:

July 26th, attended the meeting of the Local Joint Executive Board, every local being represented. Several matters of importance to the affiliated locals were taken up and disposed of. Organizers Joyce and Martel were also present.

July 27th, in company with Organizer Joyce, had a conference with the officers of the Twin City Waiters' Association, in an effort to get them to affiliate with our International Union. We received some encouragement, and expect to get them in line with us in the near future. Also attended the meeting of the Minnesota Trades Union League, an organization composed of the various trade unions throughout the State, directly and indirectly interested in the outcome of the coming election, whether Minneapolis shall remain in the wet column, or whether the saloons shall be abolished and thousands of men thrown out of employment.

July 28, attended meeting of the Trades and Labor Assembly.

July 29, with Organizer Martel, attended meeting of Cooks' Local 408, St. Paul. This local had practically disbanded, but through the efforts of Organizer Martel, have gotten together once more, and on July 31 and August 2, Organizer Martel and myself checked up their books, and with Secretary Gardiner's assistance forwarded the delinquent per capita tax to the general office. This local is getting on its feet again, and success is expected.

July 30, attended meeting of Local 458, and Sunday, August 1, the meeting of Local 152.

August 3, in company with Vice-President Hoffman, held a long conference with the directors of the Twin City Waiters' Association, and good results are looked for from this conference. That night attended meeting of the Minneapolis Trade Union League.

August 4, attended meeting of the Trades and Labor Assembly, also had an interview with the managers of the Business Men's Association, pertaining to the coming campaign.

August 5th, 6th and 7th, with Organizer Joyce and District Organizer Spielman, done campaign work in the city and the suburban town of Hopkins.

Sunday, August 8th, with Organizers Martel and Joyce, went to St. Paul to attend the meeting of Bartenders' Local 287, but upon our arrival found that the "lid" had been tilted that day, on account of the convention of the United Catholic Societies being held there, a big parade and celebration being the program for the day, every bartender working and nobody at the meeting.

August 9, attended meeting of the Local Joint Executive Board, and in company with Organizer Joyce, held a conference with the officers of the Retailers' organization.

August 10th, attended an enthusiastic meeting of the Trades Union League; campaign and publicity committees were appointed, and Brother Joyce and myself were appointed to work in conjunction with these committees during the campaign.

August 11th, 12th, 13th and 14th, Joyce and myself worked with Vice-President Hoffman and committees on campaign work, as outlined by the league, also attended meetings of Locals 593, 458 and 152.

August 16th, 17th and 18th, campaign work was continued, also attended meeting of the Trades and Labor Assembly.

August 19, attended and presided over the meeting of Waiters' and Waitresses' Local 593. Amendments to their local by-laws were adopted and business of some importance transacted. Four new members were initiated and several applications are pending. The same night attended meeting of Cooks' Local 408 in St. Paul.

August 20th, the petition for a special election on County Option, with 13,726 signatures attached, was filed by the drys, and the election day was set for October 4th, and the battle is now on in Hennepin County, on one side for the existence of a livelihood now enjoyed, and on the other side to have that privilege destroyed.

Addressed the meeting of the Northwestern Cooks' Local 458 that evening. More than 150 members were in attendance.

Every day since the filing of the petition, Vice-President Hoffman, Organizer Joyce, and myself, have been busy on campaign work, and under the leadership of Brother Hoffman are getting out a weekly publication, The Real Issue, published by the Minnesota Trades Union League, for the prevention of unemployment and in favor of Home Rule.

The Drys held their first rally in the Auditorium, Sunday night, August 22, with Judge Pollock of North Dakota, (Father of the North Dakota prohibitory act); former Congressman John J. Lentz of Columbus, Ohio, and ex-Governor John Lind of Minnesota, as the speakers.

Organizer Joyce and myself were two of the many hundreds of Wet listeners at that rally, and judging from the one to sixteen male members of that audience, there were but very few "dry" votes in attendance.

Mr. Lentz handled figures and facts in a very careless manner, and not in accordance with official statistics and figures, but we know, and you know, that it is a hard matter for a professional prohibitionist or a paid reformer to handle the truth carefully.

The truth is not in them.

Our work in this campaign is under the direct supervision of Third Vice-President Frank Hoffman, and believe me, Frank knows how to lead and carry on a campaign, and if the members of our affiliated unions and the members of other Trade Unions, effected by this movement, will follow the work as outlined by him, there is no doubt but that we will be able to show the Prohibitionists, the County Optionists, the Anti-Saloon League, and the paid reformers, a thing or two before this campaign is over, but it is going to require work, and abundance of it.

In order to get the people acquainted how to vote intelligently on the question—"Shall the sale of liquor be prohibited"—we have adopted the slogan: Think NO; Talk NO; Vote NO, from now on until the last vote is cast on October 4th.

Brothers Hoffman, Joyce and myself, in company with the general campaign committee, are going to have a conference with the Brewers' Association August 27th, for the purpose of perfecting the campaign work.

My expenses for the month are as follows:
 Car fare, Minneapolis and St. Paul..... $2 20 Stationery, telephone, express charges and exchange on checks..... 2 60
 Postage for month..... 1 50

 Total $6 30

With greetings, I am

LEWISTOWN, MONT., August 28, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of August:

Visited Havre, Fort Benton, Chateau, Harlowtown, Round Up, Great Falls, Helena and Lewistown.

Addressed meetings of our unions in cities mentioned, central bodies, and as many meetings in other unions as time would permit.

We are getting along fairly well in Montana, despite the activity of the Anti-Saloon League. Business is good.

Bartenders from Oregon and Washington, better find time to straighten their accounts with their local unions before coming into Montana. We have a fight on our hands and know it. If you have been a "dead" one in your own State don't look for time or sympathy to be spent on you by the local secretaries of this State, they have all they can do taking care of live, active members who are unfortunate enough to find themselves out of employment.

Fraternally yours,
 J. P. McGINLEY,
 International Organizer.

CHICAGO, ILL., August 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of August:

On the 28th of July, Brother Gardiner and I went over the books of Local 408, to get a complete list of the membership and their standing. This inspection showed conclusively that business was neglected, as I knew some of the members personally who do not want to be in arrears, but did not know where to find the secretary on account of changing headquarters.

On the 29th, I attended the meeting of Local 408, at which Brother J. Anderson, International Organizer, Brothers Sinton and J. Bernier, of Local 458, also attended. This meeting decided to reinstate all members for the sum of $3.25, which ought to be an inducement.

On the 30th, attended the meeting of Local 458, in Minneapolis.

On the 31st Brother Anderson went with me to St. Paul, and we visited a number of members to stimulate some interest so as to get a better meeting for the coming week. The whole following week was spent in the Saintly City, with a meeting of Local 408 on the 5th, which was well attended.

On the 8th, Brothers Anderson, Joyce and myself went to St. Paul to attend the meeting of Local 287, but found that it was postponed on account of all the members being working; the saloons on that Sunday kept open on account of the convention of the German Catholic Societies of this State. What a contrast with other church organizations, who on a similar occasion would have asked even the movies to close. All week following in St. Paul with a meeting of Local 408 on the 13th.

On the 15th, attended the meeting of Local 287. At this meeting it was decided that the local should take part in the Labor Day parade and $50 was appropriated for that purpose. Local 408 decided also to participate.

From the 16th to the 21st, in St. Paul, also attended the meeting of the Minneapolis Trades and Labor Assembly on the 18th, of Local 408 on the 19th, and of Local 458 on the 20th.

The 21st and 23rd, I wound up in St. Paul, and on the 24th left Minneapolis for Milwaukee, where I met Brothers Marot, Robson and Sibilsky, of our three unions there.

On the 25th, I attended the meeting of Local 872, which was fairly well attended. One candidate was initiated. They went through the first reading of their new by-laws, elected delegates to the Federated Trades Council and the Label League. Charges were brought against three members for conduct unbecoming union men in their respective kitchens, which bids fair to open the eyes of all the members, showing that this local means business. Local 872 is paying a sick benefit and is striving to get an arrangement with other locals doing the same, as follows: If a member of Local 872 deposits his traveling card in another local, this member should be entitled to sick benefit immediately on depositing same card, Local 872 being willing to stand one-half of the amount, if the sickness occurs inside the first 60 days after depositing the traveling card, and vice versa. This local is doing good work and is going to hold an open meeting on September 22, previous to closing its charter. Brother V. Marot is a hard worker and the members realize it. Brother President J. Bliss is on the go all the time and does not let anything slip by. If a set of officers like them could be had in the Saintly City I'd feel happier, as the leadership in St. Paul is lacking; those able to lead, lack the time, as their positions and working hours are preventing them from doing so. I feel that I have done all I could for them, and hope they will help Brother Gardiner to keep the local going. Locals 64 and 59 in Milwaukee were hard hit when an order was issued by the chief of police, closing a large number of saloons, among them some of the biggest. Will the saloon keepers ever find out that cabarets are no part of their business?

August 27th, arrived in Chicago and met Sister E. Maloney at the Chicago Federation of Labor headquarters. Also met Brother Fred Ebeling at the cooks' headquarters.

The following is my expense account for the month:

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 29, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of August:

The situation in Chicago at the present time is one which is going to require a great deal of hard, honest and conscientious work on the part of the staff of organizers in this city. Some of our members here are imbued with the idea that they are organized. To one not conversant with the facts the impression might be held that such was the case, but our experience has taught us that this is not true.

It is needless to dwell upon the possibilities of what we are attempting to accomplish, suffice to say no stone will be left unturned to bring about results expected to be obtained when sent here.

My expenses for the month are as follows:
Telephone, local and long distance.....	$ 1 00
Local and suburban car fare.....	5 00

Hall rent (two meetings).....	4 00
Postage (July and August).....	3 00

STOCKTON, CAL., Aug. 24, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of August:

The situation, in so far as our locals are concerned, has improved some and the prospects for the future are much brighter, and with a large turnout on Labor Day, organized labor in the city of Stockton will come to its own before long.

During the month, have attended all the meetings of Locals 403 and 572, the L. J. E. Board, the meetings of the Central Labor Council and the Labor Day.

The L. J. E. Board has three places on the "We Don't Patronize" list, and with the assistance of the movement, we have cut their patronage more than half, but they are holding out with the expectation that we are going to quit—but they have another guess coming.

In the interest of our locals, I have, with a committee, visited the following organizations: Typographical Union, Musicians' Executive Board and Union, Painters Union, and the Brewery Workers' Union.

August 3d, to Tracy, with Business Agent Funk of Local 403. August 4th, to Modesto, with secretary of Local 403; expect in the near future to get a conference with all the proprietors. August 9th, to Modesto with Secretary Chase of Local 403, where we attended the meeting of the Central Labor Council and were promised assistance. August 14th, to San Francisco, returning to Stockton on the 16th. August 18th, to Sacramento, attending the meeting of Local 603.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Aug. 3—To Tracy and return	$1 00
4—To Modesto and return.....	1 80
9—To Modesto and return.....	1 80
14—To San Francisco	2 35
16—San Francisco to Stockton.....	2 35

OAKLAND, CAL., August 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of August, 1915:

August 2nd, meeting of Central Labor Council. Brother "Bill" Spooner, past secretary of Local 31, who has been holding the position of secretary-Business Agent of the Council for several terms was returned to that position by a unanimous vote. Members of Culinary Local 31, and Bartenders' Local 525, were elected to practically all the offices, which insures good service for the council.

August 3rd, meeting of the Local Joint Executive Board, matters of importance to both locals being given serious consideration.

August 4th, meeting of executive board and committee of fifteen of Local 31.

August 5th, meeting of said local, four candidates initiated and several reinstated by the business agent.

August 6th, meeting of business agents of Central Labor Council and Building Trades Council at 8 a. m. Apparently it is impossible to get united action under this plan, and the representatives of the Central Council propose to hold a separate meeting each Wednesday morning.

August 7th and 8th, with Brother Spooner on matters of infractions of the local by-laws, also visited boycotted places, with Brothers Bard and Spooner.

Glad to report that the bartenders have succeeded in bringing the three saloons boycotted to time, and are now after others who are not living up to the Union rules.

August 9th, meeting of Central Labor Council, which was a hot one. Several of the delegates had their fighting clothes on and proceeded to shake the dead ones up. With Business Agent Carter, of the teamsters, and Secretary Spooner, I was appointed to visit all unions affiliated with the council, in an effort to get more action and better assistance, both moral and financial.

August 10th, on boycott work, also on special meeting of Local 525 to be held on the 20th; Secretary Jack Kennealy and Business Agent Fred Bard having instituted a campaign to bring out the membership.

August 11th, meeting of executive board, and committee of fifteen of Local 31. Consideration given the wage scale which was to be distributed on the first of the month.

August 12th, meeting of Local 31. Attendance is fairly good, considering the fact that almost all the boys and girls are working either steady or extra.

August 16th, meeting of Central Labor Council was enlivened by report of Carmen's Union. That hustling organization, feeling suspicious of one of its members (who held a position as assistant secretary) proceeded to investigate, with the result that they caught the skunk with the goods on him. From the evidence secured it was proven that he had been making weekly reports of the doings of the union to the Employers' Association. When shown the proof in meeting, the party (Henry Gattel by name) confessed, and per agreement was permitted to leave town. We have proof that the M. M. & E. are getting reports of other organizations, and at this time we are on the trail of two of the traitors.

August 18th, meeting of executive board and committee of fifteen.

August 19th, meeting of Local 31.

August 20th, special meeting of Bartenders' Local 525; the attendance being very poor for such a large organization. However, those that did attend showed that they are on to the job and propose to take the necessary steps to protect their jobs from the fanatics at the next election.

August 23rd, meeting of Central Labor Council. At my suggestion the council sent a communication to the National Educational Association calling their attention to the fact that after all their claims to be working for the uplift of humanity, the fact that a large majority of them had persisted in eating in the scab restaurants, and passing union houses where human conditions were given, did not indicate an earnest desire to carry out the views expressed on the platform.

August 25th, meeting of executive board of Local 31.

August 26th, meeting of said local. Considering the tough fight the boys and girls are up against the spirit is fine and doubtless will continue to hold so.

This month has been an exceptionally bad one for our pickets, due to the fact that there have been several conventions meeting in Oakland, and it is with regret that I report that the most of them displayed very little sympathy for our cause. However there is another day coming and then it will be a different story. In a week or so there is going to be another very large cafeteria opened close to the two we are fighting. If the new place don't come through clean we are going to give them a touch of the red ribbon boy, and if we have to, it is going to be a hard matter for the scabby commercial club to find patrons enough to go around to all the scab joints.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Carfare, including three trips to San Fran-	$3 95
cisco and return.....	3 65
Telegram, stamps and stationery.....	75
Exchange on three checks.....

Total $8 35
With best wishes,

EL PASO, TEXAS, Aug. 21, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report to date for El Paso:

Bartenders' Union 628 is in exceptionally good shape, in spite of several serious drawbacks with which they have had to contend this summer. They have their union bar card in nearly all of the "wet refreshment emporiums" that are of the desirable class and about 85 per cent of their craft lined up. If the difference between the working conditions in the union and non-union places here was a fair sample of what it is throughout the country, there would certainly be no need for making any other argument for the cause of organized labor in their line. In the union places the bartenders average ten hours a day and none work for less than $21 a week, while the majority get $25 and some $30. In the non-union places, the bartenders generally work twelve to fourteen hours a day for from $10 to $12 a week. It should be remembered, however, that the majority of these places are among the poorer class of Mexicans.

The most serious problem that this local has had to solve this summer is one that is entirely new for them at this time of the year. So many bartenders usually leave here after the races are over in the spring, and especially when the hot days of the summer months arrive, that, by August there is a scarcity. But this is all different this year. They are now boasting that "they only have about a dozen idle members." When Arizona went dry, every bartender in that State had to hunt for a new home where he could make a living, and El Paso received its full share. This local did nobly in taking care of their unfortunate brothers to the best of their ability; some of them found employment in the restaurants (for Cooks and Waiters' Local 848 also did its best), until now they only have about a dozen idle members. The next time that any fool State wants to experiment with prohibition it should be compelled to take care of its own citizens that it throws out of employment instead of being allowed to shift the burden onto its neighbors.

A good share of the credit for the showing this local has made should be given to its officers. President E. L. Emerson is one of the most popular boys in the town, while Financial Secretary W. M. Grant and Business Agent James R. Boaz, make a team that is hard to beat anywhere. They are in good shape financially with over two hundred dollars in the bank.

Cooks and Waiters and Waitresses' Local 848 has had some of the same difficulties to contend with that the bartenders have, although in a lesser degree. Not only have they found jobs for some of the idle barboys, but an unusual number of idle cooks and waiters have also drifted in from Arizona, where they had lost their jobs at the same time and for the same reason that their bartender brothers did. Our experience is that prohibition hits the culinary workers just about one-third as hard as it does the bartenders.

It will be noticed that I do not overlook the waitresses in speaking of this local. Vice-President Bessie Cupples is proving one of the most energetic and intelligent workers we have ever had and she insists that the waitresses be not forgotten.

One thing that has helped this local very materially this summer has been the closing of six Chinese restaurants. The hard fight that we have been making against the Asiatics since we organized is at last bringing results and we have got them "on the run" now. Several good American restaurants have been opened during the past spring and summer and another will be ready for business in about a month.

Another thing that has helped this local considerably is the recent reorganization of the Local Joint Executive Board on a business-like basis. The bartender members of this board are experienced and capable union men and have been taking an active interest in the cooks and waiters' problem. I also think that in some cases a man can do more effective work for a brother local than he can for his own. The fact of his being a customer instead of an employe puts the matter in a different light when he tackles a proprietor. It is principally through the efforts of this board that preliminary steps are now being taken towards lining up one of the largest restaurants here and one that has been one of the most serious stumbling blocks.

Secretary R. A. Goodding should also be remembered in speaking of the success of this local. He is proving an energetic worker and has developed several new ideas that have been of great benefit. His latest is the securing of a desirable headquarters in the center of the town, which is the first step towards opening clubrooms for both the bartenders and cooks and waiters.

With best wishes to yourself and the general membership, I am

Yours fraternally,

E. D. SKINNER,
Local Special Organizer.

An announcement in The Culinary Craft for July, imparts the information that "All rights and interests in the name and business of The Culinary Craft have been transferred by Waiters' Union, Local 30, to the Local Joint Executive Board of San Francisco." Dan. P. Regan, Secretary of the Local Joint Executive Board, will be the editor and manager of the paper beginning with the August, 1915, number.

Members of our International Union who attempt to keep in close touch with the economic thought of the leaders of the labor movement, commit a serious error when they overlook subscribing for the American Federationist, the official magazine of the American Federation of Labor. The subscription price, one dollar per year, brings to your permanent address a publication which occupies a field exclusively its own, and to the student of labor affairs, it is worth many times the price asked. We have before us the August number, containing several splendid articles and editorials, one in particular, "The Workers and the Eight-Hour Work Day," by President Gompers, which is probably one of the most complete studies of that important question written in recent years.

As intimated, the amount for subscription is one dollar per year; lay aside that much, get a money order and remit same to Secretary Frank Morrison, 801 "G" street, N. W., Washington, D. C. If unable to dig up, there is no law preventing asking your union to subscribe and have the Federationist on file at your headquarters.

THE FORUM

THE CLAYTON ACT.

In the August number of the MIXER AND SERVER under the Forum heading we reproduced the report of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor in connection with the adoption of the Clayton Act. As a foot note to that report reference was made to the opinion of former Attorney-General Wickersham and believing that those of our members who are interested in the subject should have that opinion for reference we take advantage of the opportunity of reproducing the article as it appeared in the American Federationist for July 1915:

LABOR LEGISLATION IN THE CLAYTON ACT.

By HONORABLE GEORGE W. WICKERSHAM.

This article is republished from the Alumni Register of the University of Pennsylvania with the permission of its author, and of the Alumni Register. The opinion of former Attorney-General Wickersham as to the application and significance of labor provisions of the Clayton Act is of special interest to the members of organized labor. Mr. Wickersham confirms the claims advanced by the advocates of the legislation even although he does not endorse the principles. Mr. Wickersham's harsh and unjustifiable attacks in the article upon labor leaders and labor organizations discloses the fact that he cannot be accused of over-friendliness to organized labor. Hence his article is all the more valuable and convincing of the effectiveness and importance of the labor provisions of the Clayton Law.—S. Gompers.

The inclusion of dogmatic assertions of ethical or economic propositions in legislative acts or governmental proclamations, frequently has been resorted to as a means of justifying action which was, subconsciously perhaps, realized to be unjustifiable; or of appealing, sometimes almost pathetically; to that decent respect for the opinions of mankind which led the framers of our Declaration of Independence to set forth in studied phrase the causes which impelled the American Colonies to separate themselves from the government of Great Britain.

It is therefore natural that the bold enactment of class legislation, and the declaration of a new policy in the conduct of a government heretofore declared to be "of the people, for the people and by the people," without class distinction, should contain a statement of the economic theories relied upon to justify so radical a departure. So it is hardly with a feeling of surprise that one reads the declaration in the so-called "Clayton Act" just passed by Congress, and approved by the President ("An Act to Supplement Existing Laws Against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies, and for other Purposes," Approved October 15, 1914) that "the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce." This dogma is the favorite assumption employed as a major premise by Mr. Samuel Gompers and other advocates of special privileges for organizations of wage-workers, in their propaganda for the immunity of such organizations from any liability for the consequences of acts which they may employ for the purpose of subjecting the conduct of American industry to regulations adopted by them for their own benefit, without regard to the interests of others.*

The Sherman Antitrust Law, and the antimonopoly statutes of the various States, were enacted for the purpose of protecting individuals in the conduct of their business from the unjust interference of organized groups of competitors or others. Those laws have for their ends the preservation of that liberty under law which has been the ideal of the English-speaking race for nearly a thousand years. They prohibit contracts, combinations and conspiracies which unduly restrain the freedom of trade and commerce, and they make it a crime to monopolize or to attempt to monopolize that commerce. Why? The reason was given by Lord Coke in the seventeenth century, in language which has furnished the conclusive argument ever since his time. It is because such restraints and monopolies tend to the undue enhancement of prices, the deterioration of quality, and—what is even more serious—"to the impoverishment of divers artificers and others, who before, by the labor of their hands in their art or trade, had maintained themselves and their families, who now will of necessity be constrained to live in idleness and beggary. . . ."‡

It was a profound conviction that freedom of competition was a better means of securing the welfare of the individual, as well as the State, than even qualified restraint or regulated monopoly, that led the Congress of the United States to enact the Antitrust law of 1890. To ensure its efficacy, not only were the courts endowed by that law with equitable jurisdiction, at the suit of the government, to prevent and restrain violations of the act, and the individuals who offended against its provisions subjected to criminal liability; but by the seventh section, a right of action to recover treble the damages sustained by him was given to any person who should be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation "by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act."

This provision of the law was found effective to secure compensation to certain hat manufacturers in Danbury, Connecticut, for the destruction of their business by a nation-wide combination of hat workers, in a case which has become famous;† and the provisions in the Clayton Bill now under consideration have been framed especially to prevent any such redress from being obtained in the future in any similar case.†

The facts of that case as they appear in the official report are very simple. A firm of manufacturers of hats became involved in a dispute with the representatives of a union of hat workers. The firm maintained an open shop. The hat workers desired to "unionize" it. The firm refused. The union was one of many others united in a national organization known as the United Hatters of America, which in its turn was affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, an organization which, directly or indirectly, comprised a membership of nearly two millions throughout the United States. The vast machinery of this organization was set to work to destroy the business of the Danbury hat manufacturers. The methods adopted were all "peaceable." They were none the less effective. They consisted in declaring and carrying on a "boycott" against the firm, designed to prevent any one from dealing with it. The unions declared what in effect was a mediaeval interdict against that concern. They sought to so terrorize those who dealt with it by threats of like treatment, that its customers would fear to continue business with it. They "combined and conspired" to restrain—to prevent—to destroy, the trade and commerce in hats carried on by those manufacturers among the States of the Union; and they were largely successful. They inflicted grievous pecuniary losses upon the hat manufacturers, and they interfered seriously with the business of many who had no direct concern with the quarrel between the manufacturers and the union.

The manufacturers brought an action under the seventh section of the Sherman Act, against the members of the unions who were principally responsible for the injuries done, to recover treble the damages inflicted by the boycott upon their business and their property. The defendant demurred to the complaint. They contended in effect that "the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce," and that a combination of laborers engaged in the effort to destroy the business interstate commerce of an employer rash enough to oppose their will as to whom he should employ, and the terms and conditions of such employment, was not subject to the law which imposed a liability on combinations in restraint of interstate trade for damages inflicted by such combination upon the property or business of other persons.

But the Supreme Court of the United States decreed otherwise. Whether the conspirators were employers or employed, manufacturers or laborers, or neither one nor the other, if they were banded together to interfere with the normal flow of business among the States, the law was declared adequate to reach them. "The combination charged," said Chief Justice Fuller, in delivering the opinion of the court, "falls within the class of restraints of trade aimed at compelling third parties and strangers involuntarily not to engage in the course of trade except on conditions that the combination imposes. . . ." Such restraints the court held were illegal at common law and under the federal antitrust law, although no physical obstruction was contemplated.

The Chief Justice quoted in support of his conclusion the language of the Circuit Court in another case,* to the effect that while the congressional debates show that the Sherman Act had its origin in the evils of massed capital, when Congress came to formulate the prohibition, it declared broadly that "every contract or combination . . . in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States" should be illegal.

"The subject has so broadened in the minds of the legislators that the source of the evil was not regarded as material, and the evil in its entirety is dealt with. They made the interdiction include combinations of labor, as well as of capital; in fact all combinations in restraint of commerce, without reference to the character of the persons who entered into them. . . . It is the successful effort of the combination of the defendants to intimidate and overawe others who were at work in conducting or carrying on the commerce of the country, in which the court finds their error and their violation of the statute."

The law as thus declared has since stood as a deterrent against the unrestrained domination of voluntary associations of wage-workers, and as a protection to outsiders to a dispute between employers and employees, against being drawn in, against their will, to take sides in a quarrel with which they have no legitimate concern.

But from the moment of its rendition, the American Federation of Labor, and those affiliated with it, have striven to procure the enactment of legislation which should change the law as declared and enforced by that decision. Mr. Samuel Gompers as the spokesman of that organization has recently published a summary of the principles by which he seeks to justify such legislation. His contention is that "there is an essential difference between trusts and monopolies and organizations of workers;" that "under present conditions of combinations and concentration of the employing interests, industrial freedom is impossible for individual workers;" that "only organization can secure to the workers an opportunity to have a voice in determining wages and conditions under which they work. Organization gives the right of choice. Choice is freedom." Therefore, inferentially, the only freedom available to a workman is to become a member of a union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, and all the government forces of the United States should be directed to making it impossible for him to seek freedom by any other avenue. "Organizations protect and benefit the unorganized also. Labor power and patronage are what make the workingman effective and forceful." The workmen must be left free to use this power in whatever manner is found effective. "If the end is lawful and worthy, then the moral means for attaining that end must also be recognized as legal and necessary." Having thus fallen back upon the old Jesuitical argument that a worthy end justifies any means, however bad—an argument recently employed by the German government to justify a flagrant violation of its treaty to respect the neutrality of Belgium—Mr. Gompers exalts the use of the boycott as not "in itself" pernicious, illegal or a class weapon.

"Acts of violence and crime," he says, "can be and are punished under proper laws made and provided to meet them. But the boycott is not an act of violence—it is non-action, non-intercourse, essentially non-resistance."†

‡ See discussion on amendment of Senator Cummins in U. S. Senate, Sept. 2, 1914 (Cong. Rec. p. 18946, et seq.)

The record in the Danbury hat case shows how this "peaceable" rule of non-intercourse was forced upon the customers of the hat manufacturers, under well-justified fear of the destruction of their own business by the same "peaceful" methods.

Mr. Gompers says: "The right to 'boycott' is a phase of the larger struggles to establish personal rights, to make more definite their nature and scope and their paramount importance over all else. The classes who have controlled governments and the legislators have protected themselves and their property. Now the workers are demanding recognition of their personal rights. They propose to establish freedom in the industrial world, which is essential to real freedom everywhere."

This conception of freedom—novel in the annals of American institutions—was intended to be enacted into law by the promoters of the Clayton Bill. How far they have succeeded in so doing, and the limits of the legislative power to carry out such intention will have to be decided by the courts.

But before accepting the proposition that no laborer can find freedom outside the ranks of the American Federation of Labor, every American citizen would do well to ponder over President Lincoln's message to Congress of December 3, 1861, in which he said:

"Many independent men, everywhere in these States, a few years back in their lives were hired laborers. The prudent penniless beginner in the world labors for wages a while, saves a surplus with which to buy tools or land for himself, then labors on his own account another while, and at length hires another new beginner to help him. This is the just and generous and prosperous system which opens the way to all, gives hope to all and consequent energy and progress and improvement of condition to all. No men living are more worthy to be trusted than those who toil up from poverty, none less inclined to take or touch aught which they have not honestly earned. Let them beware of surrendering a political power which they already possess, and which, if surrendered, will surely be used to close the door of advancement against such as they, and to fix new disabilities and burdens upon them, till all of liberty shall be lost."

If, as Mr. Gompers contends, freedom is impossible to individual workers except through and within the limits of the labor organizations, then both the individual laborer within such organization, as well as every one outside of it, is deeply concerned to know what kind of freedom is available through such organization.

Section 6 of the Clayton Act opens with the enactment of Mr. Gompers' major premise,

"The labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce."

Therefore, it proceeds to declare.

"Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor, agricultural or horticultural organizations, instituted for the purposes of mutual help . . . or to forbid or restrain individual members of such organizations from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof; nor shall such organizations, or the members thereof, be held or construed to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, under the anti-trust laws."

So far as I am aware, the mere existence and operation of such organizations never has been questioned under the Sherman law, but when that existence and those operations were so directed as to cause an undue interference with the normal flow of commerce among the States, then they were subjected to the same liability as any other organization or combination engaged in similar unlawful acts. By virtue of the Clayton law, therefore, the antitrust laws henceforth are not to be construed as forbidding the existence and operation of "labor, agricultural or horticultural organizations, instituted for the purposes of mutual help, and not having capital stock or conducted for profit," nor shall they or their members be held to be illegal combinations or conspiracies in restraint of trade, nor forbidden or restrained from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects of such organizations. What are such "legitimate objects?" During the discussion on the bill in the United States Senate, Senator Cummins pointed out the indefiniteness of this clause, and moved to amend it so as to read:

"Nothing contained in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid the existence and operation of labor organizations having for their objects bettering the conditions, lessening the hours or advancing the compensation of labor."*

But the amendment failed of adoption.†

Senator Pittman (of Nevada) speaking of the provision as it stands in the act, said:

"I can not conceive that there can be any broader power given than the power of mutual help. The whole object of labor organizations as well as agricultural organizations is to combine their forces, to combine their power. It is for mutual benefit. It makes no difference what that benefit may be, whether it is as to wages or as to hours or as to sanitary conditions, or even as to political conditions. In fact, I believe one of the strongest powers, and a lawful power at that, of organizations of this kind, is the power to discuss and advise with regard to political issues and political candidates before the people."

Such being the broad unlimited and undefined "legitimate" objects of such organizations—by virtue of this new law, what may they do in "lawfully carrying out" those "legitimate objects?"

Section 20 declares that no restraining order or injunction shall be granted by a United States court or judge—

"in any case between an employer and employes, or between employes, or between persons employed and persons seeking employment, involving or growing out of a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment, unless necessary to prevent irreparable injury to property, or to a property right, of the party making the application for which injury there is no adequate remedy at law. . . .

"And no such restraining order or injunction shall prohibit any individual or individuals, whether singly or in concert, from terminating any relation of employment, or from ceasing to perform any work or labor, or from recommending, advising or persuading others by peaceful means so to do; or from attending at any place where any such person or persons may lawfully be, for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information, or from peacefully persuading any person to work or to abstain from working; or from withholding their patronage from any party to such dispute, or from recom*mending, advising or persuading others by peaceful and lawful means so to do; or from paying or giving to, or withholding from, any person engaged in such dispute any strike benefits or money or things of value; or from peaceably assembling in a lawful manner, and for lawful purposes, or from doing any act or thing which might lawfully be done in the absence of such dispute by any party thereto; nor shall any of the acts specified in this paragraph be considered or held to be violations of any laws of the United States.

A careful analysis is necessary to determine the precise meaning of this section.

No injunction or restraining order is to be granted in any of the following cases:

- (a) between an employer and employees, or
- (b) between employees, or
- (c) between persons employed and persons seeking employment, which cases involve or grow out of a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment, unless necessary to prevent irreparable injury to property, or a property right, for which injury there is no adequate remedy at law.

No such restraining order or injunction, (i. e., one issued in any of the three classes of cases above enumerated), shall prohibit any individual or individuals, whether singly or in concert, from:

(1) terminating any relation of employment, or

(2) ceasing to perform any work or labor, or

(3) recommending, advising or persuading others by peaceful means to so terminate or cease to perform, or

(4) attending at any place where any such person or persons may lawfully be for the purpose of peacefully obtaining or communicating information, or

(5) peacefully persuading any person to work or to abstain from working, or

(6) withholding their patronage from any party to a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment, or

(7) recommending, advising or persuading others by peaceful and lawful means so to withhold patronage, or

(8) paying, giving to or withholding from any person engaged in such dispute any strike benefits, money, or other things of value, or

(9) peaceably assembling in a lawful manner and for lawful purposes, or

(10) doing any act or thing which might lawfully be done in the absence of a dispute concerning terms and conditions of employment by any party thereto.

These ten limitations upon the granting of a restraining order, as such, merely qualify the right to an injunction in the three classes of cases,—a, b, and c,—above enumerated; but the clause by which they are followed, viz:

“Nor shall any of the acts specified in this paragraph be considered or held to be violations of any law of the United States,” enormously increases their importance.

Therefore, in considering what a labor organization formed “for the purposes of mutual help,” or its members, may “lawfully do, in carrying out the legitimate objects thereof,” we must be guided by this statutory declaration that henceforth none of the acts in the ten paragraphs above specified are to be considered unlawful.

* The italics are the author's.

But these enumerated acts include substantially all of such acts as constituted the cause of action in the Danbury hatters' case, and therefore labor organizations in the future may use the boycott as a weapon in a dispute between employer and employees without danger of interference by injunction or liability in damages by reason of the antitrust laws of the United States. That is, certainly so far as regards employers engaged in a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment, there can no longer exist under the laws of the United States a right of action on their behalf to recover damages suffered by them by reason of any individual or individuals, singly or in concert, recommending, advising or persuading their regular customers, or any other person or persons, by peaceful means, not otherwise unlawful (such for instance as might amount to extortion or libel), to withhold patronage from them.

The complaint in Loewe v. Lawlor averred that the defendants sought to compel plaintiffs to unionize their shop by restraining and destroying the interstate trade and commerce of the manufacturers, “by means of intimidation of and threats made to such manufacturers and their customers in the several States of boycotting them, their product and their customers, using therefor all the powerful means at their command, as aforesaid, until such time as, from the damage and loss of business resulting therefrom, the said manufacturers should yield to the said demand to unionize their factories.

The court dismissed the contention that the statute was not violated by those methods of coercion because physical obstruction was not alleged. Had the Clayton law been then in force, it seems clear that the defendants' acts would not have been illegal.†

The Supreme Court of the United States frequently has asserted a principle thus expressed in its latest decision under the Sherman law:*

“An act harmless when done by one may become a public wrong when done by many acting in concert, for it then takes on the form of a conspiracy, and may be prohibited or punished if the result be hurtful to the public or to the individual against whom the concerted action is directed.”

The court has also not infrequently adverted to that potency in numbers which gives tremendous effect to acts done by many which would be of negligible importance if done by one only.‡

But by force of the Clayton law, whether any of the acts enumerated in the second paragraph of section 19 be done singly, or in concert, henceforth they are equally legal in the eyes of the federal law. It is therefore apparent that the labor organizations have secured a statutory reversal of the principles of the decision in the Danbury hatters' case and the legalization of the boycott as a lawful instrument to ensure the dominance of organized labor, thus substituting the Gompers' conception of liberty for that of the Declaration of Independence, the Constitution of the United States and Abraham Lincoln.‡

to do that which does not injure others; "its principle is nature, its rule justice, its protection the law. Its moral limit is in the maximum: "Do not do others that which thou wouldest not have done to thee."§ The Clayton Act embodies a very different principle, and ignores any such moral limits. It legislates avowedly for a class. In so doing does it exceed the constitutional grant of national legislative power? The fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States limits the powers of Congress by declaring that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law;" while the fourteenth amendment forbids a State to "deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

"Life, liberty, property and the equal protection of the law, grouped together in the Constitution, are so related," says Mr. Justice Lamar in a recent case|| that the deprivation of any one of those separate and independent rights may lessen and extinguish the value of the other three. In so far as a man is deprived of the right to labor, his labor is restricted, his capacity to earn wages and to acquire property is lessened and he is denied the protection which the law affords those who are permitted to work. Liberty means more than freedom from servitude, and the constitutional guarantee is an assurance that the citizen shall be protected in the right to use his powers of mind and body in any lawful calling."

These constitutional provisions, the courts have said, were intended to secure the individual from the arbitrary exercise of the powers of government, unrestrained by the established principles of private rights and distributive justice.*

The liberty of the individual secured from invasion by these amendments has been held to mean—

"not only the right of a citizen to be free from physical restraint of his person, as by incarceration, but the term is deemed to express the right of the citizen to be free in the enjoyment of all his faculties; to be free to use them in all lawful ways; to live and work where he will; to earn his livelihood by any lawful calling; to pursue any livelihood or vocation, and for that purpose to enter into all contracts which may be proper, necessary and essential to his carrying out to a sensible conclusion the purposes above mentioned."†

Furthermore:

"In the privilege of pursuing an ordinary calling or trade and of acquiring, holding and selling property must be embraced the right to make all proper contracts in relations thereto."

The words "due process of law," as contained in the constitutional amendments, "imply a conformity with the natural and inherent principles of justice, and forbid that one man's property or right to property shall be taken for the benefit of another, or for the benefit of the

But the constitutional rights so guaranteed against invasion, are subject to the exercise of the police power through measures necessary for the protection of the public interest; a power whose permissible exercise by the States in apparent conflict with the constitutional rights of individuals frequently presents puzzling questions to the courts. The trend of decision in recent times exhibits a rapidly increasing reluctance to interfere with acts of the legislature passed in the ostensible exercise of this power, even where the invasion of the rights expressly guaranteed by the Constitution otherwise would seem clear, if the power is put forth, in the language of Mr. Justice Holmes,§ "in aid of what is sanctioned by usage, or held by the prevailing morality, or strong and preponderant opinion, to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare."

The question in each case where an interference with the right of contract is sought to be justified under the police power is "whether the legislature had adopted the statute in the exercise of a reasonable discretion, or whether its action be a mere excuse for an unjust discrimination or the oppression or spoliation of a particular class."

"Class legislation, discriminating against some and favoring others, is prohibited; but legislation which in carrying out a public purpose is limited in its application, if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the fourteenth amendment," declared Mr. Justice Field in delivering the opinion of the court in the well-known case of Barbier v. Connolly.|| In a later cause, the court summarized the effect of its previous decisions, as requiring that all persons subject to legislation limited as to the objects to which it is directed, or by the territory within which it is to operate, shall be treated alike under like circumstances and considerations, both in the privilege conferred and in the limitations imposed.||

In testing the above quoted sections of the Clayton Act by the application of these principles, we may consider those sections in two aspects:

(1) As legislation exempting a particular class from liability imposed upon all other classes for acts having the same effect.

(2) As legislation withdrawing from all persons protection from the invasion of their constitutional right to life, liberty and property; when such invasion comes from one particular class, exempted by this law from a liability to which all others are subject.

|| Connolly v. Union Sewer Pipe Co., 184 U. S., 540.

(1) Reading the Sherman law with section 6 of the Clayton Act, we have a legislative declaration that every contract, combination or conspiracy in restraint of interstate commerce, or attempt to monopolize such commerce, shall be unlawful, unless it is in the form of a labor, agricultural or horticultural organization instituted for the purposes of mutual help, or occasioned by the individual members of such an organization seeking to accomplish something mutually beneficial by means of a boycott, blacklisting, picketing, or some of the other peaceful acts described in section 20 of the Clayton Act resorted to for the purpose of compelling a party to a dispute concerning terms or conditions of employment to yield to the demands of those who adopt this peaceful weapon.

It has been contended that his legislation is within the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court* to the effect that the antitrust law of Missouri, which provides that "all arrangements, contracts, agreements, combinations or understandings made or entered into between any two or more persons, designed or made with a view to lessen, or which tend to lessen, lawful trade, or full and free competition, in the importation, transportation, manufacture or sale in the State of any product, commodity, or article, or thing bought or sold," and all such arrangements, etc., "which are designed or made with a view to increase, or which tend to increase the market price of any product, commodity, article or thing, of any class or kind whatsoever bought or sold," was not void under the fourteenth amendment, because as construed by the State Supreme Court, it applied only to persons and corporations dealing in commodities, and did not include combinations or persons engaged in labor pursuits. It was also held that the statute was not unconstitutional in that it arbitrarily discriminated between the makers and sellers of commodities and the purchasers thereof.

Both of these objections involved a consideration of the power of classification which might be exercised in the legislation of the State. The court pointed out that that power has a very great range; that classification must be accommodated to the problems of legislation, and may depend upon degrees of evil without being arbitrary or unreasonable, and that it had been held that it is competent for a legislature to determine upon what differences a distinction may be made for the purpose of statutory classification between objects otherwise having resemblances. Such power, of course, the court admitted, can not be exercised arbitrarily. The distinction must have a reasonable basis.

"And so in the case at bar. Whether the Missouri statute should have set its condemnation on restraints generally, prohibiting combined action for any purpose and to everybody, or confine it, as the statute does to manufacturers and vendors of articles and permitting it to purchasers of such articles; prohibiting it to sellers of commodities and permitting it to sellers of services, was a matter of legislative judgment and we can not say that the distinctions made are palpably arbitrary, which we have seen is the condition of judicial review. It is to be remembered that the question presented is of the power of the legislature, not the policy of the exercise of the power.

* International Harvester Co. v. Missouri, 284 U. S., 199.

To be able to find fault with such policy is not to establish the invalidity of the law based upon it."

The case involved no question as between the members of a combination and those injured in their property or business by their acts. It arose in a prosecution by the State of Missouri against the defendant, a Wisconsin corporation, for a violation of the act because formed by the combination of a number of competing corporations designed and made to lessen free competition in commodities manufactured by them.

It must be admitted, however, that this case goes very far in upholding the right of a State legislature to exclude a particular class of organizations from the otherwise general statutory condemnation of combinations in restraint of trade.

(2) But viewed in another aspect, the Clayton Act may be considered as depriving individuals of the protection of their liberty or property, if attacked by organizations of the character described in section 6, which the law would secure to them against any other aggressor; thus constituting arbitrary class legislation.

The constitutionality of the act depends primarily upon whether or not it is a valid exercise by Congress of the power to regulate interstate commerce. Congress is possessed of no such general undefined police power as that which the courts have held was reserved by the States out of the grant of powers to the federal government contained in the Constitution of the United States. The powers so granted to Congress are expressly restricted by the fifth amendment, and if a proposed regulation of commerce among the States involves the deprivation of the life, liberty or property of any person without due process of law, it must be held valid. In this respect, the powers of Congress are more restricted than those of a State. Even a State statute making illegal as an unlawful trust all combinations of capital, skill or acts between two or more persons, etc., for the purpose of restricting trade, limiting production, increasing the price of merchandise, preventing competition, etc., was held repugnant to the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, because it contained a clause providing that the provisions of the act should not apply to agricultural products or live stock while in the hands of the producer or raiser.* The court said:

"All except producers of agricultural commodities and raisers of live stock who combine their capital, skill or acts for any of the purposes named in the act may be punished as criminals, while agriculturalists or live stock raisers in respect of their products or live stock in hand are exempted from the operation of the statute and may combine and do that which, if done by others, would be a crime against the state. The statute so provides, notwithstanding persons engaged in trade or in the sale of merchandise or commodities within the limits of the state and agriculturalists and raisers of live stock are all in the same general class, that is, they are all alike engaged in domestic trade which is, of right, open to all, subject to such regulations applicable alike to all in like conditions as the state may legally prescribe.

"The difficulty is not met by saying that generally speaking the state when enacting laws may, in its discretion, make a classification of persons, firms, corporations and associations in order to subserve public objects. For this court has held that classification 'must always rest upon some difference which bears a reasonable and just relation to the acts in respect to which the classification is proposed, and can never be made arbitrarily and without any such basis . . . but arbitrary selection can never be justified by calling it classification. The equal protection demanded by the fourteenth article forbids this.

When a State by legislation seeks to regulate the enjoyment of rights and the pursuit of callings connected with domestic trade.

"it can not divide those engaged in trade into classes and make criminals of one class if they do certain forbidden things, while allowing another and favored class, engaged in the same domestic trade, to do the same thing with impunity. It is one thing to exert the power of taxation so as to meet the expenses of government and at the same time indirectly build up or protect particular interests or industries. It is quite a different thing for the State under its general police power, to enter the domain of trade or commerce and discriminate against some by declaring that particular classes within its jurisdiction shall be exempt from the operation of a general statute making it unlawful to do certain things connected with domestic trade or commerce. Such a statute is not a legitimate exertion of the power of classification, rests upon no reasonable basis, is purely arbitrary and plainly denies the equal protection of the laws to those against whom it discriminates."

(Opinion by HARLAN, J.)

This case was cited in support of the position taken by the plaintiff in the recent case of International Harvester Co. v. Missouri, cited supra. But the court briefly said that the statute there under consideration did not come within that ruling (p. 215).

In Adair v. United States,[†] an Act of Congress making it a criminal offense against the United States for a carrier engaged in interstate commerce, or an agent or officer thereof, to discharge an employe simply because he was a member of a labor organization was held an invasion of personal liberty, as well as of the right to property guaranteed by the fifth amendment to the Constitution, and therefore unenforceable as repugnant to the declaration of that amendment that no person shall be deprived of liberty or property without due process of law. Harlan, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"Such liberty and right embraces the right to make contracts for the purchase of the labor of others, and equally the right to make contracts for the sale of one's own labor; each right, however, being subject to the fundamental condition that no contract, whatever its subject-matter, can be sustained which the law upon reasonable grounds forbids as inconsistent with the public interest or as hurtful to the public order or as detrimental to the common good. . . . While, as already suggested, the right of liberty and property guaranteed by the Constitution against deprivation without due process of law is subject to such reasonable restraints as the common good or general welfare may require, it is not within the functions of government—at least in the absence of contract between the parties—to compel any person in the course of his business and against his will, to accept or retain the personal services of another or to compel any person against his will to perform personal services for another. This right of a person to sell his labor upon such terms as he deems proper is, in its essence, the same as the right of the purchaser of labor to prescribe conditions upon which he will accept such labor from the person offering to sell it. So the right of the employe to quit the services of the employer, for whatever reason, is the same as the right of the employer, for whatever reason, to dispense with the services of such employe. . . . In all such particulars, the employer and the employe have equality of right, and any legislation which disturbs that equality is an arbitrary interference with the liberty of contract which no government can legally justify in a free land."

The learned justice then considered quite elaborately the question whether or not the statute could be justified as a regulation of interstate commerce, but found that there is no legal or logical connection between an employe's membership in a labor organization and the carrying on of interstate commerce.

It results, on the whole case, that the provision of the statute under which the defendant was convicted must be held to be repugnant to the fifth amendment and as not embraced by or within the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce, but under the guise of regulating interstate commerce and as applied to this case, it arbitrarily sanctions an illegal invasion of the personal liberty, as well as of the right of property of the defendant Adair."

Of course, the court said, liberty of contract is not unlimited, but is subject to the exercise of the police power of the State, but—

"none of the cases sustains the proposition that under the power to secure the public safety a privileged class can be created and be then given a monopoly of the right to work in a special or favored position. Such a statute would shut the door without a hearing upon many persons and classes of persons who were competent to serve, and would deprive them of the liberty to work in a calling they were qualified to fill with safety to the public and benefit to themselves."

Justices McKenna and Holmes dissented from this decision, the latter upon the ground frequently expressed by him in varying language, that the court should not be astute to interfere with what the legislature deems is the public interest, upon the ground of invasion of a constitutional right, unless such invasion is glaring and unescapable. "I confess," he says, "that I think that the right to make contracts at will that has been derived from the word liberty in the amendments has been stretched to the extreme by the decisions; but they agree that sometimes the right may be restrained. When there is, or generally is believed to be, an important ground of public policy for restraint the Constitution does not forbid it, whether this court agrees or disagrees with the policy pursued." And he states if the only effect of the law under consideration were to tend to bring about the complete unionizing of such railroad laborers as Congress could deal with, that object alone, in his opinion would justify the act. "I quite agree that the question what and how much good labor unions do is one on which intelligent people may differ—I think that laboring men sometimes attribute to them advantages, as many attribute to combinations of capital disadvantages, that really are due to economic conditions of a far wider and deeper kind—but I could not pronounce it unwarranted if Congress should decide that to foster a strong union was for the best interest, not only of the men, but of the railroads and the country at large."

How far the views thus expressed would affect the majority of the court as at present constituted is problematical. In one of the latest decisions,* holding a statute of the State of Texas which prohibited any person from acting as conductor on a railroad train without having for two years prior thereto worked as a brakeman or conductor of a freight train, and prescribing no other qualifications, thus excluding the whole body of the public from the right to secure employment as conductors, to be unconstitutional as amounting, so far as concerned persons competent to fill such a position but who did not possess the specified qualification to a denial of the equal protection of the laws. Mr. Justice Lamar, speaking for the court, said:

"The liberty of contract is, of course, not unlimited; but that is no reason or authority for the proposition that conditions may be imposed by statute which will admit some who are competent and arbitrarily exclude others who are equally competent to labor on terms mutually satisfactory to employer and employee.

"None of the cases sustains the proposition that, under the power to secure the public safety a privileged class can be created and be then given a monopoly of the right to work in a special or favored position."

It remains to be seen whether, under the power to regulate interstate commerce, such a class can be created. If the labor legislation in the Clayton Act is upheld, this result will follow. That such result is intended by those who have promoted the legislation is avowed. But if the Supreme Court adheres to the views expressed by it in the Adair case, that even under the police power of the States a privileged class can not be created and given a monopoly of the right to work in a special or favored position, it must certainly hold that no such class can be created and invested with those special privileges under the power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, and that Congress can not under that power—vast as it is—withdraw from all outside of the organizations of labor, protection in courts of law and equity against the consequences of the boycott or other similar weapons employed to restrain or destroy the conduct of interstate commerce by an employer who refuses to accept the dictates of labor organizations.

It should also be noted that the Clayton Act only limits the application of the federal anti-trust laws as a matter of substantive law, while in Section 20 it regulates procedure in all cases brought in the courts of the United States by restricting the power of those courts and judges to issue injunctions in cases growing out of disputes concerning wages or conditions of employment. This distinction may become material in civil actions for damages, or for equitable relief brought in the federal courts, where the jurisdiction depends solely upon diversity of citizenship. A conspiracy to injure a person's business by preventing persons from entering his employment by threats and intimidations is a crime at common law. So in a suit brought in the United States courts where the jurisdiction of those tribunals depended solely upon diversity of citizenship, a combination of members of labor organizations to compel a manufacturer to discontinue the use of machinery in the conduct of his business, and to accomplish their purpose by inducing his customers and other persons not to purchase his product, or any such commodity made by machinery, was held by the Circuit Court of the United States in the Eighth Circuit, to be an unlawful conspiracy at common law to deprive plaintiff of his right to manage his business as he thought best, such as would entitle the manufacturer to recover from the parties concerned in the conspiracy whatever damage they had sustained thereby, and on proof that irreparable damage would result if defendants were allowed to carry out their purpose, an injunction was granted restraining them from continuing their acts.* Sanborn, P. J., writing the opinion of the court, in which Judge Thayer concurred, said:

"While the courts have invariably upheld the right of individuals to form labor organizations for the protection of the interests of the laboring class, and have denied the power to enjoin members of such associations from withdrawing peaceably from any service, either singly or in a body, even where such withdrawal involves a breach of contract, yet they have ever generally condemned those combinations, usually termed boycotts, which are formed for the purpose of interfering otherwise than by lawful competition with the business affairs of others, and depriving them by means of threats and intimidation of the right to conduct the business in which they happen to be engaged according to the dictates of their own judgments. The right of an individual to carry on his business as he sees fit, and to use such implements or processes of manufacture as he desires to use, provided he follows a lawful vocation and conducts it in a lawful manner, is entitled to as much consideration as his other personal rights; and the law should afford protection against the efforts of powerful combinations to rob him of that right and coerce his will by intimidating his customers and destroying his patronage. . . ."

While the power of the federal court to issue an injunction in such a case is restricted by Section 20 of the Clayton Act, and by virtue of its provisions no action for treble damages would lie under Section 7 of the Sherman law, yet in the rare cases of the respective parties to a labor controversy being so ranged as to present a case of which the United States district court would have jurisdiction by reason of diversity of citizenship, the plaintiff's rights to recover damages at law would remain unaffected by this recent legislation. TUBERCULOSIS TREATMENT.

After years and years of study, the medical profession agrees that consumption is a curable malady providing the afflicted have the chance of following out simple directions and living lives in the open air as much as possible. Here is the combined judgment of a congress of medical men after years research:

The three important factors in the treatment of tuberculosis are food, rest and fresh air. Meat, eggs and milk in generous quantities are the staple articles of diet. The process of over-feeding must be watched, however, and indigestion prevented.

THE UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

On the eve of closing the forms for this number of THE MIXER AND SERVER, the Commission on Industrial Relations releases a synopsis of its report to Congress. The summaries, three in number, cover several hundred pages, and contain excerpts from the general report, as well as items from supplementary reports, signed by two members of the Commission.

The main part of the report, drawn up by Basil M. Manly, Director of Research and Investigation for the Commission, was signed by Commissioners Walsh, Lennon, O'Connell and Garretson.

A synopsis of that portion of the first installment subscribed to by the above named Commissioners is as follows:

UNJUST DISTRIBUTION OF WEALTH.

The enactment of an inheritance tax so graded that while making generous provision for the support of dependents and the education of minor children, it shall leave no large accumulation of wealth to pass into hands which had no share in its production. The revenue from this tax to be reserved by the Federal Government for three principal purposes:

1. The extension of education.
2. The development of other important social services which should properly be performed by the nation which are discussed in detail elsewhere.
3. Development in co-operation with states and municipalities of great constructive works, such as road building, irrigation and reforestation, which would materially increase the efficiency and welfare of the entire nation.

There is no legislation which could be passed by Congress, the immediate and ultimate effects of which would be more salutary or would more greatly assist in tempering the existing spirit of unrest.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND DENIAL OF OPPORTUNITY TO EARN A LIVING.

Certain measures for dealing with these conditions which are discussed elsewhere in the report need to be pushed forward with all possible vigor, but it may be confidently predicted that the unemployment situation will not be appreciably relieved until great advances have been made in the removal of the two prime causes—unjust distribution of wealth and monopolization of land and natural resources.

The most direct methods of dealing with the inequality of wealth have already been briefly discussed and will be considered elsewhere in the report. With respect to the land question, however, the following basic suggestions are submitted:

1. Vigorous and unrelenting prosecution to regain all land, water power and mineral rights secured from the Government by fraud.
2. A general revision of our land laws, so as to apply to all future land grants the doctrine of "superior use," as in the case of water rights in California, and provision for forfeiture in case of actual non-use. In its simplest form the doctrine of "superior use" implies merely that at the time of making the lease the purpose for which the land will be used must be taken into consideration, and the use which is of greatest social value shall be given preference.
3. The forcing of all unused land into use by making the tax on non-productive the same as on productive land of the same kind, and exempting all improvements.

The unemployed have aptly been called "the shifting sands beneath the State." Surely there is no condition which more immediately demands the attention of Congress than that of unemployment, which is annually driving hundreds of thousands of otherwise productive citizens into poverty and bitter despair, sapping the very basis of our national efficiency, and germinating the seeds of revolution.

DENIAL OF JUSTICE.

With full recognition of the gravity of the suggestions it seems necessary to urge the Commission to make the following recommendations:

1. That Congress should forthwith initiate an amendment to the Constitution providing in specific terms for the protection of the personal rights of every person in the United States from encroachment by the Federal and State governments and by private individuals, associations and corporations. The principal rights which should be thus specifically protected by the power of the Federal Government are the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, the right to jury trial, free speech, peaceful assemblage, to keep and bear arms, to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures, to speedy public trial, to freedom from excessive bail, and from cruel and unusual punishments.
2. That Congress immediately enact by statute or, if deemed necessary, initiate a constitutional amendment specifically prohibiting the courts from declaring legislative acts unconstitutional.
3. That Congress enact that in all Federal cases where the trial is by jury, all qualified voters in the district shall be included in the list from which jurors are selected, and that they shall be drawn by the use of a wheel or other device designed to promote absolute impartiality.
4. That Congress should drastically regulate or prohibit private detective agencies and private employment agencies doing business in more than one State, employed by a company doing an interstate business, or using the mails in connection with their business. Such regulation, if it is feasible, should include particularly the limitation of their activities to the bona fide functions of detecting crime, and adequate provision should be made for the rigid supervision of their organization and personnel.
5. That, the militia of the several States being subject to regulation by Congress, carefully drawn rules for their personnel, organization and conduct in the field should be drawn up to insure their impartiality during industrial disputes.

DENIAL OF THE RIGHT AND OPPORTUNITY TO FORM EFFECTIVE ORGANIZATIONS.

1. Incorporation among the rights guaranteed by the Constitution the unlimited right of individuals to form associations, not for the sake of profit, but for the advancement of their individual and collective interests.
2. Enactment of statutes specifically protecting this right and prohibiting the discharge of any person because of his membership in a labor organization.
3. Enactment of a statute providing that action on the part of an association of individuals not organized for profit shall not be held to be unlawful, where such action would not be unlawful in the case of an individual.

4. That the Federal Trade Commission be specifically empowered and directed by Congress in determining unfair methods of competition to take into account and specially investigate the unfair treatment of labor in all respects, with particular reference to the following points:

(a) Refusal to permit employes to become members of labor organizations.

(b) Refusal to meet or confer with the authorized representatives of employes.

5. That the Department of Labor, through the Secretary of Labor or any other authorized official, be empowered and directed to present to the Federal Trade Commission, and to prosecute before that body, all cases of unfair competition arising out of the treatment of labor which may come to his attention.

6. That such cases, affecting as they do the lives of citizens in the humblest circumstances, as well as the profits of competitors and the peace of the community, be directed by Congress to have precedence over all other cases before the Federal Trade Commission.

Widespread existence of living and working conditions in American industry that menace the Nation's welfare by denying proper standards of living to millions of its citizens, and by making them subservient to the wills of employers who control their opportunities for labor, are set forth in the final report of Basil M. Manly, Director of Research and Investigation for the United States Commission on Industrial Relations.

The Commission today made public the first section of the Manly report. The remaining sections will be made public as soon as they leave the hands of the printer, and the report in full will then be transmitted to Congress. It was accepted and ordered printed by resolution of the full Commission, and is signed by Frank P. Walsh, Chairman of the Commission, and by Commissioners John B. Lennon, James O'Connell and Austin B. Garretson.

As a paramount necessity, if the Nation is to remedy the evils found to exist by the Commission's staff, the report urges action that will remove the "many existing obstacles which prevent effective organization and co-operation" by wage earners, and that will thereby bring about a democratic organization of industry along the lines of trade union activity.

The crux of the whole question on industrial relations is declared to be "shall the workers, for the protection of their interests, be organized and represented collectively by their chosen delegates, even as the stockholders are represented by their directors and by the various grades of executive officials and bosses?"

Mr. Manly's report is based on the research and field work of members of the staff, whose point of view is that of impartial investigators, and upon testimony at the public hearings conducted by the Commission in fourteen principal cities and industrial centers of the United States. These hearings occupied in all 154 days and a total of 740 witnesses were heard. Of these 230 were affiliated with employers, 245 with labor and 265 were not affiliated with either group. Where interests are affected, statements of fact are based entirely on the testimony of those witnesses whose interest might be regarded as adversely affected.

ACTION IS IMPERATIVE.

In an introductory statement Congress and the public are urged to regard the question of industrial relations as "more fundamental and of greater importance to the welfare of the Nation than any other question except that of our Government."

"The only hope for the solution of the tremendous problems created by industrial relationship," says the report, "lies in the effective use of our democratic institutions and the rapid extension of the principles of democracy to industry."

The immediate effects of the form and character of industrial organization are held to be "greater and closer to the lives and happiness of all classes of citizens than even the form and character of our political institutions."

"The ordinary man," it is pointed out, "whether employer or worker, has relatively little contact with the government. If he and his family are well-fed, well-housed, and well-clothed, and if he can pay for the education of his children, he can exist even under an autocratic monarchy with little concern until some critical situation develops in which his own liberty is interfered with or until he is deprived of life or property by the overwhelming power of his tyrannical ruler. But his industrial relations determine every day what he and his family shall eat, what they shall wear, how many hours of his life he shall labor and in what surroundings. Under certain conditions where his individual or corporate employer owns or controls the community in which he lives, the education of his children, the character and prices of his food, clothing and house, his own actions, speech and opinions, and in some cases even his religion, are controlled and determined, insofar as the interests of the employer make it desirable for him to exercise such control. Such conditions are established and maintained not only through the dictation of all working conditions of employment by the employer, but by his usurpation or control of the functions and machinery of political government in such communities."

"In the available time it has been impossible to ascertain how general such conditions are, but it is clearly indicated by the investigations that in isolated industrial, mining or agricultural communities, which are owned or controlled by single individuals or corporations, and in which the employees are unorganized, industrial feudalism is the rule rather than the exception."

"In such communities democratic government does not as a rule exist, except in name or form, and as a consequence there now exist within the body of our republic petty industrial communities, which are virtually principalities, oppressive to those dependent upon them for a livelihood and a dreadful menace to the peace and welfare of the nation."

"Such conditions as these are the direct and inevitable consequence of the industrial relations which exist in such communities. Political freedom can exist only where there is industrial freedom; political democracy only where there is industrial democracy."

"Such industrial democracy has been established in a greater or less degree in certain American industries or for certain classes of employes. But between such conditions of industrial democracy and industrial feudalism, there are almost infinite gradations marking the stages of evolution which have been reached. In every case, however, investigation has shown that the degree of political freedom and democracy which exists is conditional by the industrial status of the citizens who form the majority of the community."

POLITICAL LIBERTIES AT STAKE.

"The problems of industrial relations, therefore, demand the attention of Congress, not only because they determine the life, security and happiness of the twenty-five million citizens of the United States who occupy the position of wage earners, but because they affect for good or evil the government of localities and States, and to a smaller degree that of the nation itself. What each of these wage earners shall eat, what he shall wear, where he shall live, and how long and under what conditions he shall labor are determined by his industrial status and by his relation individually or collectively to the person or corporation employing him. Similarly and almost as directly this relationship determines whether the machinery of government shall be used for or against his welfare, whether his vote shall count for or against his own interest, whether he shall be tried by a jury of his peers or a jury selected in collusion with the employing company, or, under conditions of so-called martial law, by no jury whatever; whether in fact he shall be a free man or be deprived of every right guaranteed by Federal and State constitutions, imprisoned without warrant for the commission of crimes of which he may be innocent, or forcibly deported from the community or State in which he has made his home. For these reasons, it seems desirable at the outset to suggest a recommendation to Congress that these problems of industrial relationship should occupy their due prominence in the deliberations of that Honorable Body, and that the entire machinery of the Federal Government should be utilized to the greatest possible degree for the correction of such deplorable conditions as have been found to exist.

"The lack of a proper industrial relationship and the existence of bad labor conditions is a matter of the most serious moment during times of peace, but the events of the past year have demonstrated how enormously their menace to the welfare of a nation is increased during a period of war. The present European war is being fought on the farms and in the factories as much as in the trenches. The effective mobilization of our industrial resources is as important simply from the standpoint of war, as the mobilization of our military and naval forces.

"It is equally important that action be taken now rather than after war is a reality.

"An attempt is made in the succeeding pages of the report to suggest some of the measures which should be adopted, with a full realization, however, that no action will be effective which does not come through an understanding by the American people of the essential facts regarding industrial conditions. Practically, however, there are only two alternatives for effective action, first, the creation of a huge system of bureaucratic paternalism such as has been developed in Germany; or action which will remove the many existing obstacles which prevent effective organization and co-operation, reserving for performance by the government only those services which can not be effectively conducted by voluntary organizations, and those which are of such vital importance to the entire nation that they should not be left to the hazard of private enterprise."

The introductory statement closes with the following quotation from Carlyle, the Scotch historian, which, it asserts, "contains in a few eloquent sentences the very heart of the situation in American industry:"

"With the working people, again, it is not so well. Unlucky. For there are from twenty to twenty-five million of them. Whom, however, we lump together into a kind of dim compendious unity. . . . as 'the masses.' Masses indeed: and yet, singular to say, the masses consist all of units, . . . every unit of whom has his own heart and sorrows; stands covered there with his own skin, and if you prick him he will bleed. Every unit of these masses is a miraculous man, even as thou thyself art; struggling with vision or with blindness for his infinite kingdom (this life which he has got, once only, in the middle of eternities); with a spark of the divinity, what thou callest an immortal soul, in him!

"Clearly a difficult 'point' for government, that of dealing with these masses; if indeed it be not rather the sole point and problem of government, and all other points more accidental crotchetts, superficialities, and beatings of the wind! For let charter-chests, use and wont, law common and special say what they will, the masses count to so many millions of units, made, to all appearances, by God, whose earth this is declared to be."

That section of the report made public today deals almost entirely with the causes of industrial unrest.

CAUSES OF UNREST.

The report finds that the causes of industrial unrest "group themselves almost without exception under four main sources which include all the others. These four are:

1. Unjust distribution of wealth and income.
2. Unemployment and denial of opportunity to earn a living.
3. Denial of justice in the creation, in the adjudication and in the administration of law.
4. Denial of the right and opportunity to form effective organizations.

UNJUST DISTRIBUTION.

Discussing the first of these causes, the report summarizes evidence showing that 44 families possess aggregate incomes totaling at least fifty millions per year, while between one-fourth and one-third of male workers in factories and mines, 18 years of age and over, earn less than $10.00 per week, and only about one-tenth earn more than $20.00 per week.

Inequality in the distribution of wealth and income is set forth as follows:

"First, with regard to the adult workmen, the fathers and potential fathers, from whose earnings according to the 'American standard,' the support of the family is to be derived.

"Between one-fourth and one-third of male workers in factories and mines 18 years of age and over earn less than $10 per week; from two-thirds to three-fourths earn less than $15, and only about one-tenth earn more than $20 a week. This does not take into consideration lost working time for any cause.

"Next are the women, the most portentously growing factor in the labor force, whose wages are important, not only for their own support or as the supplement of the meager earnings of their fathers and husbands, but because through the force of competition in a rapidly extending field, they threaten the whole basis of the wage scale. From two-thirds to three-fourths of women workers in factories, stores, laundries, and in industrial occupations generally, work at less than $8 a week. Approximately one-fifth earn less than $4 and nearly one-half earn less than $6 a week.

PLIGHT OF THE UNDERPAID.

"Six dollars a week—what does it mean to many? Three theater tickets, gasoline for the week, or the price of a dinner for two; a pair of shoes; three pairs of gloves, or the cost of an evening at bridge. To the girl it means that every penny must be counted, every normal desire stifled, and each basic necessity of life barely satisfied by the sacrifice of some other necessity. If more food must be had than is given with 15-cent dinner, it must be bought with what should go for clothes; if there is need for a new waist to replace the old one at which the forewoman has glanced reproachfully, or at which the girls have giggled, there can be no lunches for a week, and dinners must cost five cents less each day. Always too the room must be paid for, and back of it lies the certainty that with slack seasons will come lay-offs and discharges. If the breaking point has come, and she must have some amusement, where can it come from? Surely not out of six dollars a week.

"Last of all are the children, for whose petty addition to the stream of production the nation is paying a heavy toll in ignorance, deformity of body and mind, and premature old age. After all, does it matter much what they are paid, for all experience has shown that in the end the father's wages are reduced by about the amount that the children earn. This is the so-called 'family wage,' and examination of the wages in different industries corroborates the theory that in those industries, such as textiles, where women and children can be largely utilized, the wages of men are extremely low.

"The competitive effect of the employment of women and children upon the wages of men, can scarcely be overestimated. Surely it is hard enough to be forced to put children to work, without having to see the wages of men held down by their employment.

"This is the condition at one end of the social scale; what is at the other?

"Massed in millions, at the other end of the social scale, are fortunes of a size never before dreamt of, whose very owners do not know the extent, nor without the aid of an intelligent clerk, even the sources of their incomes. Incapable of being spent in any legitimate manner, these fortunes are burdens, which can only be squandered, hoarded, put into so-called 'benevolents,' which for the most part constitute a menace to the State, or put back into the industrial machine to pile up ever-increasing mountains of gold.

REWARDS ONLY FOR SERVICE.

"In many cases, no doubt, these huge fortunes have come in whole or in part, as the rich reward of exceptional service. None would deny or envy him who has performed such service the richest of rewards, although one may question the ideals of a nation which rewards exceptional service only by burdensome fortunes. But such reward can be claimed as a right only by those who have performed service, not by those who, through relationship or mere partnership, chance to be designated as heirs.

"Legal right, of course, they have by virtue of the law of inheritance, which, however, runs counter to whole theory of American society, and which was adopted, with important variations from the English law without any conception of its ultimate results and apparently with the idea that it would prevent exactly the condition which has arisen.

INHERITANCE LAW CONDEMNED.

"In effect the American law of inheritance is as efficient for the establishment and maintenance of families as the English law, which has bulwarked the British aristocracy through the centuries. Every year, indeed, sees this tendency increase, as the creation of 'estates in trust' secures the ends which might be more simply reached, if there were no prohibition of 'entail.'

"According to the income tax returns for ten months of 1914, there are in the United States 1,598 fortunes yielding an income of $100,000 per year or over. Practically all of these fortunes are so invested and hedged about with restrictions upon expenditure that they are, to all intents and purposes, perpetuities.

"An analysis of fifty of the largest American fortunes shows that nearly half have already passed to the control of heirs or to trustees (their vice regents), and that the remainder will pass to the control of heirs within twenty years upon the deaths of the 'founders.' Already, indeed, these founders have almost without exception retired from active service, leaving the management ostensibly to their heirs, but actually to executive officials upon salary.

SOME STRIKING FIGURES.

"We have, according to the income tax returns, 44 families with incomes of $1,000,000 or more, whose members perform little or no useful service, but whose aggregate incomes, totalling at the least fifty millions per year, are equivalent to the earnings of 100,000 wage earners, at the average rate of $500.

"Between the two extremes of superfluity and poverty is the large middle class, farmers, manufacturers, merchants, professional men, skilled artisans, and salaried officials whose incomes are more or less adequate for their legitimate needs and desires, and who are rewarded more or less exactly in proportion to service. They have problems to meet in adjusting expenses to income, but the pinch of want and hunger is not felt, nor is there the deadening, devitalizing effect of superfluous, unearned wealth.

"From top to bottom of society, however, in all grades of incomes are an innumerable number of parasites of every conceivable type. They perform no useful service, but drain off from the income of the producers a sum whose total can not be estimated.

"Besides the economic significance of these great inequalities of wealth and income, there is a social aspect which equally merits the attention of Congress. It has been shown that the great fortunes of those who have profited by the enormous expansion of American industry have already or will in a few years pass by right of inheritance to the control of heirs or to trustees who act as their 'vice regents.' They are frequently styled by our newspapers 'monarchs of industry,' and indeed occupy within our republic a position almost exactly analogous to that of feudal lords.

"These heirs, owners only by virtue of the accident of birth, control the livelihoods and have the power to dictate the happiness of more human beings than populated England in the middle ages. Their principalities, it is true, are scattered and, through the medium of stock-ownership, shared in part with others; but they are none the less real. In fact, such scattered, invisible industrial principalities are a greater menace to the welfare of the nation, than would be equal power consolidated into numerous petty kingdoms in different parts of the country. They might then be visualized and guarded against,—now their influence invisibly permeates and controls every phase of life and industry.

"The king can do no wrong' not only because he is above the law, but because every function is either performed or responsibility assumed by his ministers and agents. Similarly, our Rockefellers, Morgans, Fricks, Vanderbilts and Astors can do no industrial wrong, because all effective action and direct responsibility is shifted from them to the executive officials who manage American industry.

QUOTES ROCKEFELLER.

"The similitude, indeed, runs even to mental attitude and phase. Compare these two statements:

"John D. Rockefeller, Jr.—'My appreciation of the conditions surrounding wage earners and my sympathy with every endeavor to better these conditions are as strong as those of any man.'

"Louis XVI.—'There is none but you and me that has the people's interest at heart.' ('Il n'y a que vous et moi qui aimons le peuple.')

"The 'families' of these industrial princes are already well established and are knit together not only by commercial alliances, but by a net work of inter-marriages which assure harmonious action whenever their common interest is threatened.

"Effective action by Congress is required, therefore, not only to readjust on a basis commensurate in some measure to the service performed, the existing inequalities in the distribution of wealth and income, but also to check the growth of an hereditary aristocracy, which is not only foreign to every conception of American Government, but menacing to the welfare of the people and the existence of the nation as a democracy.

"The objects to be attained in making this readjustment are: to reduce the swollen, unearned fortunes of those who have a superfluity; to raise the underpaid masses to a level of decent and comfortable living; and at the same time to accomplish this on a basis which will, in some measure, approximate the just standard of income proportional to service."

INHERITANCE TAX A REMEDY.

As a remedy for the unequal distribution of wealth and income, the report urges "the enactment of an inheritance tax so graded that while making generous provision for the support of dependents and the education of minor children, it shall leave no large accumulation of wealth to pass into hands which had no share in its production. The report suggests that a limit of one million dollars be fixed on the amount that shall pass to the heirs. It recommends that the revenue from this tax be reserved by the Federal Government for three principal purposes:

1. The extension of education.

2. The development of other important social services which should properly be performed by the nation, which are discussed in detail elsewhere.

3. Development, in co-operation with States and municipalities, of great constructive works, such as road building, irrigation and reforestation, which would materially increase the efficiency and welfare of the entire nation.

"There is no legislation," says the report, "which could be passed by Congress, the immediate and ultimate effects of which would be more salutary or would more greatly assist in tempering the existing spirit of unrest."

DENIAL OF OPPORTUNITY.

Discussing unemployment and denial of opportunity to earn a living as the second principal cause of industrial unrest, the report makes the following recommendations:

"Certain measures for dealing with these conditions which are discussed elsewhere in the report need to be pushed forward with all possible vigor, but it may be confidently predicted that the unemployment situation will not be appreciably relieved until great advances have been made in the removal of the two prime causes—unjust distribution of wealth and monopolization of land and natural resources.

"The most direct methods of dealing with the inequality of wealth, have already been briefly discussed and will be considered elsewhere in the report. With respect to the land question, however, the following basic suggestions are submitted:

1. Vigorous and unrelenting prosecution to regain all land, water power and mineral rights secured from the Government by fraud.

2. A general revision of our land laws, so as to apply to all future land grants the doctrine of 'superior use,' as in the case of water rights in California, and provision for forfeiture in case of actual non-use. In its simplest form the doctrine of 'superior use' implies merely that at the time of making the lease the purpose for which the land will be used must be taken into consideration, and the use which is of greatest social value shall be given preference.

3. The forcing of all unused land into use by making the tax on non-productive the same as on productive land of the same kind, and exempting all improvements.

"The unemployed have aptly been called 'the shifting sands beneath the State.' Surely there is no condition which more immediately demands the attention of Congress than that of unemployment, which is annually driving hundreds of thousands of otherwise productive citizens into poverty and bitter despair, sapping the very basis of our national efficiency, and germinating the seeds of revolution."

DENIAL OF JUSTICE.

Under the head, "Denial of Justice," found to be the third principal cause of unrest, the report cites numerous typical instances to prove the following charges:

First, with regard to the enactment of laws, it is charged that the workers have been unable to secure legislation to protect them against grievous wrongs except after exhausting struggles against overwhelming odds and against insidious influences.

Second, it is charged that after wholesome and necessary laws are passed, they are in large part nullified by the courts upon technicalities of a character which would not be held to invalidate legislation favorable to the interests of manufacturers, merchants, bankers, and other property owners, or thrown out on the broad ground of unconstitutionality through strained or illogical construction of constitution provisions.

Third, that in the administration of law, both common and statute, there is discrimination by the courts against the poor and in favor of the wealthy and powerful, and that this discrimination arises not only from the economic disabilities of the poor, but also out of the actual bias on the part of judges in favor of the wealthy and influential.

Fourth, that courts have not only neglected or refused to protect workers in their rights guaranteed by the constitution of the United States, and of the several States, but that sections of the constitution framed primarily to protect human rights have been perverted to protect property rights only, and to deprive workers of the protection of rights secured to them by statutes.

Fifth, that the ordinary legal machinery provides no adequate means whereby laborers and other poor men can secure redress for wrongs inflicted upon them through the non-payment of wages, through over-charges at company stores, through exorbitant hospital and other fees, fines and deductions, through fraud on the part of private employment offices, loan offices and installment houses, and through the "grafting" of foremen and superintendents. The losses to wage earners from these sources are stated to amount each year to millions of dollars and to work untold hardship on a class of men who can ill afford to lose even a penny of their hard-won earnings.

Sixth, that the courts, by the unwarranted extension of their powers in the issuance of injunctions, have not only grievously injured the workers individually and collectively, upon innumerable occasions, but have also, by the contempt procedure consequent upon disobedience to such injunctions, deprived the workers of the right, fundamental to Anglo-Saxon institutions, to be tried by jury.

Seventh, that the laws designed for the protection of labor in workshops, mines and on railroads are not effectively enforced, except in a few States.

Eighth, that in cases involving industrial questions the workers are liable to great injustice by reason of the fact that in many localities they are excluded from juries by the qualifications prescribed (usually payment of property tax) or by the method of selection.

Ninth, that during strikes, innocent men are in many cases arrested without just cause, charged with fictitious crimes, held under excessive bail, and treated frequently with unexampled brutality for the purpose of injuring the strikers and breaking the strike.

Tenth, that in many localities during strikes not only is one of the greatest functions of the State, that of policing, turned virtually over to employers or arrogantly assumed by them, but criminals employed by detective agencies and strike-breaking agencies are clothed by the process of deputization, with arbitrary power and relieved of criminal liability for their acts.

Eleventh, that during strikes in many localities the entire system of civil government is suspended and there is set up in its place a military despotism under so-called martial law.

Twelfth, that in some localities the control by the employers of the entire machinery of government is so great that lawless acts on the part of agents of the employers go unheeded and unpunished, while vindictive action against the leaders of the strike is accomplished by methods unparalleled in civilized countries.

In each instance what Mr. Manly considers convincing proof that these charges are fully justified is cited in the form of testimony before the Commission setting forth specific cases, the facts of which are admitted by all concerned. Evidence gathered in the Commission's investigation of the Colorado strike is cited in substantiation of the twelfth charge.

The report says regarding remedies:

"In considering the action which needs to be taken it has been urged by some that the end to be achieved is to place personal rights on a parity with property rights. It is necessary to render a firm protest and warning against the acceptance of such an ideal. The establishment of property rights and personal rights on the same level can leave only a constant and ever growing menace to our popular institutions. With the acceptance of such an ideal our democracy is doomed to ultimate destruction. Personal rights must be recognized as supreme and of unalterable ascendancy over property rights.

"Relief from these grave evils can not be secured by petty reforms. The action must be drastic and directed at the roots from which these evils spring.

"With full recognition of the gravity of the suggestions it seems necessary to urge the Commission to make the following recommendations:

"1. That Congress should forthwith initiate an amendment to the Constitution providing in specific terms for the protection of the personal rights of every person in the United States from encroachment by the Federal and State governments and by private individuals, associations and corporations. The principal rights which should be thus specifically protected by the power of the Federal Government are the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, the right to jury trial, free speech, peaceful assemblage, to keep and bear arms, to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures, to speedy public trial, to freedom from excessive bail, and from cruel and unusual punishments.

"2. That Congress immediately enact by statute or, if deemed necessary, initiate a constitutional amendment specifically prohibiting the courts from declaring legislative acts unconstitutional.

"3. That Congress enact that in all Federal cases where the trial is by jury all qualified voters in the district shall be included in the list from which jurors are selected, and that they shall be drawn by the use of a wheel or other device designed to promote absolute impartiality.

"4. That Congress should drastically regulate or prohibit private detective agencies doing business in more than one State, employed by a company doing an interstate business, or using the mails in connection with their business. Such regulation, if it is feasible, should include particularly the limitation of their activities to the bona fide functions of detecting crime, and adequate provision should be made for the rigid supervision of their organization and personnel.

"5. That, the militia of the several States being subject to regulation by Congress, carefully drawn rules for their personnel, organization and conduct in the field should be drawn up to insure their impartiality during industrial disputes."

RIGHT TO ORGANIZE.

Evidence and testimony are cited showing that many employers refuse to deal with organizations of their employees or to employ men who belong to labor organizations, this denial of the right of organization being discussed as the fourth principal cause of industrial unrest. The report says:

"The previous discussion of the causes of industrial unrest has dealt with the denial of certain fundamental objects to which the workers believe they have natural and inalienable rights, namely, a fair distribution of the products of industry, the opportunity to earn a living, free access to unused land and natural resources, and just treatment by legislators, courts and executive officials.

"A more serious and fundamental charge is, however, contained in the allegation by the workers that, in spite of the nominal legal right which has been established by a century-long struggle, almost insurmountable obstacles are placed in the way of their using the only means by which economic and political justice can be secured, namely, by combined action through voluntary organization.

"The workers insist that this right of organization is fundamental and necessary for their freedom, and that it is inherent in the general rights guaranteed every citizen of a democracy. They insist that 'people can free themselves from oppression only by organized force. No people could gain or maintain their rights or liberties acting singly, and any class of citizens in the State subject to unjust burdens or oppression can gain relief only by combined action.'

"The demand for organization and collective action has been misunderstood, it is claimed, because of the belief among a large number of citizens that its purpose was simply to secure better wages and better physical conditions. It has been urged, however, by a large number of witnesses before the Commission that this is a misconception of the purpose for which workers desire to form organizations.

NOT A MATERIAL STRUGGLE.

"It has been pointed out with great force and logic that the struggle of labor for organization is not merely an attempt to secure an increased measure of the material comforts of life, but is a part of the age-long struggle for liberty; that this struggle is sharpened by the pinch of hunger and the exhaustion of body and mind by long hours and improper working conditions; but that even if men were well fed they would still struggle to be free.

"It is not denied that the exceptional individual can secure an economic sufficiency either by the sale of his unusual ability or talent, or by sycophantic subservience to some person in authority, but it is insisted that no individual can achieve freedom by his own efforts. Similarly, while it is admitted that in some cases exceptional employers treat their employees with the greatest justice and liberality, it is held to be a social axiom that no group of workers can become free except by combined action, nor can the mass hope to achieve any material advance in their condition except by collective effort.

"Furthermore, it is urged by the representatives of labor that the efforts of individuals who are bent upon bettering their own condition without reference to their health or to the interests of others, directly injure each of their fellow workers and indirectly weaken the whole fabric of society.

BARGAINING EQUALITY LACKING.

"It is also pointed out that the evolution of modern industry has greatly increased the necessity for organization on the part of wage earners, while it is not admitted that the employer who has only one employee is on an economic equality with the person who is employed by him, because of the fact that the employer controls the means of livelihood which gives him an almost incalculable advantage in any bargain, nevertheless this condition of inequality is held to have been enormously increased by the development of corporations controlling the livelihood of hundreds of thousands of employees, and by the growth of employers' associations whose members act as a unit in questions affecting their relations with employees."

The report points out that less than half a dozen employers out of 230 employers or their agents who have testified before the Commission, have denied the propriety of collective action on the part of employees, but that many maintained "what they, in accordance with common terminology, called 'open shop.'"

MEANING OF "OPEN SHOP."

Of the open shop the report says:

"The theory of the 'open shop,' according to these witnesses, is that workers are employed without any reference to their membership or non-membership in trade unions; while, as a matter of fact, it was found upon investigation that these employers did not willingly or knowingly employ union men. Nevertheless, this is deemed to be a minor point. The 'open shop,' even if union men are not discriminated against, is as much a denial of the right of collective action as is the 'anti-union shop.' In neither is the collective action of employees permitted for the purpose of negotiating with reference to labor conditions. Both in theory and practice, in the absence of legislative regulation, the working conditions are fixed by the employer.

"It is evident, therefore, that there can at best be only a benevolent despotism where collective action on the part of employees does not exist."

Discussing the attitude of employers who refuse to deal collectively with their workmen, but who do in fact grant audiences at which the grievances of their workmen may be presented, the report says:

"One is repelled rather than impressed by the insistence with which this idea has been presented. Every tyrant in history has on stated days granted audiences to which his faithful subjects might bring their complaints against his officers and agents. At these audiences, in theory at least, even the poorest widow might be heard by her sovereign in her search for justice. That justice was never secured under such conditions, except at the whim of the tyrant, is sure. It is equally sure that in industry, justice can never be attained by such a method."

The willingness of certain employers to deal with their own employees collectively, while refusing to deal with any national organization, and resenting the intrusion of any persons acting for their employees who are not members of their own labor force, is dealt with in the following:

"In practice these statements have been generally found to be specious. Such employers as a rule oppose any effective form of organization among their employees as bitterly as they fight the national unions. The underlying motive of such statements seems to be only that as long as organizations are unsupported from outside they are ineffective and can be crushed with ease and impunity by discharging the ringleaders. Similarly, that opposition to the representation of their employees by persons outside their labor force, seems to arise wholly from the knowledge that as long as the workers' representatives are on the payroll they can be controlled, or, if they prove intractable, they can be effectively disposed of by summary dismissal.

ADVANCE MUST BE UNIFORM.

"To suggest that labor unions can be effective if organized on less than a national scale, seems to ignore entirely the facts and trend of present-day American business. There is no line of organized industry in which individual establishments can act independently. Ignoring for the time the centralization of control and ownership, and also the almost universal existence of employers' associations, the mere fact of competition would render any organization of employees which was limited to a single establishment totally ineffective. Advance in labor conditions must proceed with a fair degree of uniformity throughout any line of industry. This does not indeed require that ALL employees in any industry must belong to a national organization, for experience has shown that wherever even a considerable portion are union members, the advances which they secure are almost invariably granted by competitors, even if they do not employ union men, in order to prevent their own employees from organizing."

That political freedom can not exist where the right to organize is denied, and that such denial therefore threatens the political institutions of the nation, is charged by Mr. Manly in concluding his discussion on this subject.

The conclusions and recommendations designed not only to prevent denial of the right to organize, but to guarantee this right are set forth as follows:

"The conclusions upon this question, however, are not based upon theory, but upon a thorough investigation of typical situations in which the contrast between organization and the denial of the right of organization could best be studied. The Commission has held public hearings and has made thorough investigations in such industrial communities as Paterson, N. J.; Los Angeles, Cal.; Lead, S. D., and Colorado, where the right of collective action on the part of employees is denied. These investigations have shown that, under the best possible conditions, and granting the most excellent motives on the part of employers, freedom does not exist either politically, industrially or socially, and that the fibre of manhood will inevitably be destroyed by the continuance of the existing situation.

"Investigations have proved that although the physical and material conditions may be unusually good, as for example, in Lead, S. D., they were the price paid for the absolute submission of the employees to the will of the employing corporation. Such satisfactory conditions, are, however, shown by the hearings of the Commission and by the investigations of its staff to be exceptional.

EFFECT OF "OPEN SHOP."

"Los Angeles, for example, although exceptionally endowed in location, climate and natural resources, was sharply criticised for the labor conditions which had developed during its 'open shop' regime even by Mr. Walter Drew, representing several of the largest associations which contend for the 'open shop.' It is significant that the only claim ordinarily made for the conditions in such establishments is that 'they are as good as are secured by the union.' As a matter of fact, there are few establishments which make this boast, and in the majority the conditions were found to be far below any acceptable standards.

"The Commission has also, through public hearings and the investigations of its staff, made a thorough and searching investigation of the conditions in those industries and establishments where collective action, through the medium of trade unions, and joint agreements, exists. It has not been found that the conditions in such industries are ideal, and that friction between employers and the unions is unknown; nor has it been found that the employees in such industries have entirely achieved economic, political or industrial freedom, for these ideals can not be gained until the fundamental changes in our political and economic structure, which have already been referred to, have in some way been accomplished.

FRICITION REDUCED.

"It has been found, however, that the material conditions of the workers in such industries and establishments are on a generally higher plane than where workers are unorganized; that improvements in such conditions have been achieved as the direct result of organization; that the friction which exists in such industries and establishments has been reduced rather than increased by organization; and that the workers at least have established a basis upon which their political and economic freedom may ultimately be established.

DISCUSSES UNION EVILS.

"The evils of graft, 'machine politics,' factional fights and false leadership, which have been found sometimes to exist in such organized industries, are those which are inevitable in any democratic form of organization. They are the same evils which have accompanied the development of the American nation, and of its States and municipalities. Such evils as have been found to exist are indeed to be condemned, but a study of the history of these organizations seems to show clearly that there is a tendency to eradicate them as the organizations become stronger and the membership becomes more familiar with the responsibilities and methods of democratic action.

"Furthermore, there is a fundamental principle which applies in this field as in all other lines of human activity. This principle is contained in the following contrast: In democratic organizations such evils and excesses as may arise tend to disrupt and destroy the organization, and are therefore self-eradicating; while in an autocracy, evils and excesses tend inevitably to strengthen the existing autocrat and can be eradicated only in the event of a revolt on the part of those who suffer from such evils. This is the history, not only of every form of artificial association, but also of nations.

"The fundamental question for the nation to decide, for in the end public opinion will control here as elsewhere, is whether the workers shall have an effective means of adjusting their grievances, improving their condition, and securing their liberty, through negotiation with their employers, or whether they shall be driven by necessity and oppression to the extreme of revolt.

"Where men are well organized, and the power of employers and employes is fairly well balanced, agreements are nearly always reached by negotiations; but, even if this fails, the strikes or lockouts which follow are, as a rule, merely cessations of work until economic necessity forces the parties together again to adopt some form of compromise.

"With the unorganized, there is no hope of achieving anything except by spontaneous revolt. Too often has it been found that during the delay of attempted negotiations, the leaders are discharged, and new men are found ready to take the place of those who protest against conditions. Without strike funds or other financial support, the unorganized must achieve results at once; they can not afford to wait for reason and compromise to come into play. Lacking strong leaders and definite organization, such revolts can only be expected to change to mob action on the slightest provocation.

MANY STRIKES ACTUAL REVOLUTIONS.

"Looking back over the industrial history of the last quarter century, the industrial disputes which have attracted the attention of the country and which have been accompanied by bloodshed and violence, have been revolutions against industrial oppression, and not mere strikes for the improvement of working conditions.

"Such revolutions, in fact, were the railway strikes of the late eighties, the Homestead strike, the bituminous coal strike of 1897, the anthracite strikes of 1900 and 1903, the strike at McKees Rocks in 1909, the Bethlehem Steel Company strike in 1910, the strikes in the textile mills at Lawrence, Paterson and Little Falls, many of the strikes in the mining camps of Idaho and Colorado, the garment workers' strikes in New York and other cities, and the recent strikes in the mining districts of West Virginia, Westmoreland County, Pennsylvania, and Calumet, Mich.

ACTION IS URGED.

"As a result, therefore, not only of fundamental considerations, but of practical investigations, the results of which are described in detail hereafter, the Commission is convinced that every means should be used to extend and strengthen organizations throughout the entire industrial field. Much attention has been devoted to the means by which this can best be accomplished, and a large number of suggestions have been received. As a result of careful consideration, it is suggested the Commission recommend the following action:

"1. Incorporation among the rights guaranteed by the Constitution of the unlimited right of individuals to form associations, not for the sake of profit, but for the advancement of their individual and collective interests.

"2. Enactment of statutes specifically protecting this right and prohibiting the discharge of any person because of his membership in a labor organization.

"3. Enactment of a statute providing that action on the part of an association of individuals not organized for profit shall not be held to be unlawful, where such action would not be unlawful in the case of an individual.

"4. That the Federal Trade Commission be specifically empowered and directed by Congress in determining unfair methods of competition to take into account and specially investigate the unfair treatment of labor in all respects, with particular reference to the following points:

"(a) Refusal to permit employees to become members of labor organizations.

"(b) Refusal to meet or confer with the authorized representatives of employes.

"5. That the Department of Labor, through the Secretary of Labor or any other authorized official, be empowered and directed to present to the Federal Trade Commission, and to prosecute before that body, all cases of unfair competition arising out of the treatment of labor which may come to his attention.

"6. That such cases, affecting, as they do, the lives of citizens in the humblest circumstances, as well as the profits of competitors and the peace of the community, be directed by Congress to have precedence over all other cases before the Federal Trade Commission."

FUTURE CITIZENS WILL BE HELPED BY BUREAU.

Means Will Be Taken to Inspire Assistance to Men Who Contemplate Naturalization. There Are 8,000,000 Aliens in the United States.

Washington, August 13, 1915.—During the years 1911-1914 there were 2,345 declarations of intention to become American citizens on the part of aliens residing in Cincinnati. Within that period there were submitted 1,128 petitions for naturalization, out of a total of 6,250 alien males, 21 years old and over.

What has Cincinnati done to prepare these aliens for American citizenship?

This is the question, not directly put, but suggested by recent developments which the Bureau of Naturalization of the Department of Labor is putting up to the leaders in the Cincinnati field of education. Not to Cincinnati alone, but to educators in all the communities which have a large foreign-born population. It is part of a nation-wide movement recently inaugurated here, and beginning to bear fruit.

The work of making citizens out of the raw material of the resident foreigner has been part of the function of the Bureau of Naturalization for almost a decade—ever since Congress, on June 29, 1906, passed the current naturalization law. By this law, all the courts, State as well as Federal, and the officials of these courts in their ministerial relationship, were placed under the supervision of the United States Government, exercised through the Bureau of Naturalization. During the years of this Federal supervision of the execution of the naturalization law, almost two and a half million foreigners have asked for citizenship. Of these, almost one and three-quarter million have declared their intention, or taken out their first papers. Approximately three-quarters of a million have asked for final papers, and of these about 650,000 have been admitted to citizenship during that time. Upward of 85,000 foreigners have been refused admission—more than one-half of them because of mental and moral unfitness. The figures quoted indicate a large number of foreigners coming forward for American citizenship.

A LARGE PROPORTION.

But the Bureau of Naturalization does not regard the number as relatively large, for in 1910, it says, there were nearly 14,000,000 foreigners in this country, of whom 9,000,000 were not citizens—and the number of foreigners has increased nearly 1,000,000 annually since then, except during the first year of the great war. By far the larger portion of the foreign residents of this country have retained their allegiance to the sovereignty of their birth, is the somewhat astonishing statement made by Richard K. Campbell, Commissioner of Naturalization. Recent reports have shown that many of these are ready to respond to the behest of these sovereignties, that they have returned in large numbers immediately upon the call of the country of their nativity, leaving the ties—personal, family and industrial—for the stronger call of allegiance to the foreign land. Even prior to the European war this was in lesser evidence during the war among the Balkan States. Among those who went back to the old countries were many who had declared their intention to become American citizens. Some returned and later presented themselves before the courts of citizenship for admission. Judges of these courts have held that absence from the country because of participation in the military operations of other lands broke the continuity of their residence for naturalization purposes here, and denied their applications.

Only 85,000 foreigners have been refused citizenship because of unfitness, but at least that many more, Mr. Campbell avers, have been admitted in spite of these deficiencies, during the period of Federal supervision. The courts have been reluctant to refuse citizenship to a candidate, even though he be ignorant of American institutions or of the privileges and obligations imposed upon him. Especially has this been so in communities which offered no facilities to petitioners to overcome their defects. Where, under the inspiration of the Bureau of Naturalization, schools have been opened to the foreigner, where they are taught the duties of citizenship, the courts have responded to a different order and have refused citizenship unless candidates measured up to the higher standard set by Federal supervision. Scarcely a State in the union now which has not citizenship classes carried on either by the public schools or under the direction of private agencies.

SCHOOLS TO HELP CANDIDATES.

But the activities of these schools have been directed almost wholly to the preparation of the candidate for final papers and the foreigner having his first papers, or who has just declared his intention to become a citizen at some future time, has been largely neglected. The law permits an illiterate to declare his intention. In from two years to five he is eligible to petition for naturalization. During that period nothing has been done heretofore to help his claim. The new plans of the Bureau of Naturalization contemplate the extension of a helping hand to the nearly half-million foreigners who each year ask for citizenship. During the last year more than 335,000 foreigners declared their intention and petitioned for naturalization. The Federal census records are quoted to show that the foreign population is many times greater than the number who come forward for citizenship. In some States the proportion of candidates to the entire foreign-born white population is as low as 2 per cent; in no State does it exceed 50 per cent. Many who are admitted to citizenship are unable to inscribe their names in the English language but do so in foreign characters. Many have but slight ability to comprehend the English language, and less to speak it.

To overcome these obvious faults in the prevailing system, the Bureau of Naturalization has extended the agitation to make it nation-wide and has brought the educational movement, its purposes, its system, and its draw-backs, to the attention of all the superintendents of public schools, to enlist these influential officials in carrying the propaganda forward. Personal letters have been sent to the city and county superintendents in each State to stimulate their interest, particularly in those sections which show a large foreign-born population. Conferences already have been held in Washington, attended by school superintendents and presidents of boards of education of Eastern cities, who have pledged themselves to open the public schools for the instruction of the foreigner, where such schools are not now in existence, and to extend the activities of those already established to meet the desires of the Bureau of Naturalization. Additional conferences with the educational leaders of other cities are to be held within thirty days.

ASSURANCE OF HELP RECEIVED.

The bureau, in the meantime, is advising the superintendents of schools of the number of foreigners who, within their jurisdictions, have applied for citizenship within the last three years. The names and addresses of candidates for citizenship are being forwarded and arrangements are complete to include all the principal cities, beginning with the opening of the school year next month. Thus the school authorities may become acquainted with the candidates and offer them such inducements as to inspire them to attend the public schools if they have not already mastered the English language. Further to facilitate this object, the bureau is sending literature to the candidates, urging them to get in touch with the school authorities. The movement comprehends the opening of night schools, as well as day schools, in the larger communities, where many of the foreigners may be employed at night. Assurances of hearty co-operation have greatly cheered the originators of the movement, whose desire is also to interest Chambers of Commerce, the press, and civic organizations generally, to get behind the movement and secure appropriations of funds sufficient to carry out the plan.

JOHN R. LAWSON'S REPLY TO JUDGE HILLYER.

"The court has asked me what, if anything I have to say why sentence should not now be pronounced against me."

"During two days of argument on that very question, through which I listened, not in a personal way, but so far as possible as a citizen of our common country, I had supposed that many and unanswerable reasons supporting my view had been given to the court."

"Therefore, in the court's interest at this moment I must recognize a mere formality. It is plain that nothing I can say will change your fixed determination so far as you have the power to start me down the dark path of imprisonment for life.

VICTIM OF UNSCRUPULOUS PROSECUTION.

"It is proper that a man so situated, especially when, as in my case, he is the victim without fault of an utterly unscrupulous persecution, should be permitted to enter his protest against injustice, however much that protest may appear weakened by its relation to individual experience.

"Fortunately, what I have to say is warranted by bigger considerations than any personal to me. So far-reaching are they that I feel I have a right to ask you to hear my views with the same courtesy I have used during my trial through your rulings and remarks.

"About to be condemned by you to prison for life, I will, therefore, make answer to your question in the following way:

CALLS HILLIER ROCKEFELLER JUDGE.

"First of all, in the name of the courts of my country, which I respect, I protest against your right of power to pass any judgement against me. It is undenied in this case that you were appointed to the bench this spring for the trial of myself and my associates, fresh from the employment of the very coal operators of Colorado and the country, including the Rockefellers, who have pressed and engineered these prosecutions.

"Yourself a coal company attorney, engaged to assist as a practicing lawyer in the trial of cases arising like mine out of the industrial disturbances of 1913 and 1914, you had no right, when challenged, to sit as trial judge in the case of any striking miner.

TRIAL A TRAVESTY ON JUSTICE.

"You were so deeply prejudiced against me that my case was a travesty on justice from the start. Notwithstanding the affidavits of reliable citizens who have sworn to your prejudice, you have persisted on the bench. Today the Supreme Court of Colorado in Denver is reviewing your conduct, and yet you refuse to wait another twenty-four hours for the guidance of that court's decision. Such unseemly haste in the exercise of such a jurisdiction to thrust me into prison should not be passed without a protest.

"Second only to the resolution with which you hold your seat upon the bench was the method by you for selecting a jury to try me. You refused to permit the jury to be drawn from the regular jury box provided by law, and you ordered an open venire.

HAND-PICKED JURY OF COAL COMPANY PARTISANS.

"This method was exactly adapted to procure what none were surprised to discover—a hand-picked jury of coal company partisans. After you had removed the coroner as a summoning officer, over my protest, you selected your own instruments to pick this jury. And the jury so chosen was naturally subject to the self-same coal company influences which with hue and cry now seek to drive me to the penitentiary.

"It matters not that I was utterly guiltless of the charge against me. It matters not that the prosecution was forced to abandon its claim that on October 25, 1913, I fired a shot or did other than seek to avoid the violence which menaced the cause dearest to my heart.

WHAT OF COAL OPERATORS' GUILT?

"It matters not that it became necessary for the prosecution to invoke legal doctrines of conspiracy, which, if applied impartially, would convict the leading coal operators of Colorado and the country for the deaths of men, women and children at Ludlow on April 20, 1914.

"Perhaps this seemed immaterial, because none of them have been informed against, much less tried, and none of them fear our courts or prosecuting officials.

"It matters not that the only evidence, on which the prosecution was forced to rest, was the testimony of two disreputable Baldwin-Felts detectives, employes of the coal operators' association, with whom you yourself were formerly professionally associated.

"Nothing was to be permitted to stand in the way, and it is significant that even a jury so selected by you, according to affidavits on file in this court, tortured a juror with manufactured reports of the dangerous illness of the juror's wife, and as a final stroke warned the jury that under your orders the jury would have nothing further to eat until they rendered their verdict.

"In the face of this sworn charge, which courts everywhere have held sufficient to undermine the whole structure of jury trials and to destroy the integrity of such a verdict, your bailiff has remained silent and this court impulsive. May I ask whether judicial travesty is not the right description of such proceedings?

"Such practices, however astonishing to our people in general, do not surprise one who has observed our industrial history. From long experience I recognize the power of wealth, the magnitude of our industrial problems and their effect on our existing social system, I can understand, for I have seen how men who seek a living realization for the workers of the world of the old ideals of justice and equality; who endeavor to open the eyes of their fellows to the true economic conditions that surround them as they seek their daily bread, are persecuted, defamed and even, in exceptional instances, hounded to the gallows by those who control the wealth and privileges of our generous country.

HAS SEEN PRIVILEGE USE GOVERNMENT.

"I have seen some masters of finance within and without this State using the full powers of government to divide the workers, to crush the hopes and aspirations in their breasts, and to extinguish the kindling light of intelligence in their souls in full realization of the fact that understanding brings the fixed desire for the higher and nobler things in life, including a dream of equality of opportunity some day for the children of rich and poor alike.

"And it is not overstated to say that I am here today because, with others, I have patiently, without bitterness, yet persistently, for years, sought these things—a wider chance in life for those who toil, a higher type of democratic citizenship and a social system of industry which gives promise to mankind and denies autocratic power over the lives and liberties of the great mass of workers to the masters of millions who have usurped governmental authority itself.

OPPRESSION AT ITS WORST IN SOUTH.

"Such usurpation has reached its most finished expression in Las Animas and Huerfano counties, in this State, and those who, like myself, have continued none the less to worship at the ancient altars of human liberty and justice in this country have been marked for annihilation.

"But let no one think we have not seen through years this very possibility.

"In receiving sentence of life imprisonment at hard labor from this court I can do so with the knowledge that I have broken no law and committed no crime, unless it be that I am a coal miner, honored by my fellow workers, with their years of confident faith that my devotion will stand even this acid test for the maintenance of their principles.

HILLYER VIOLATES EVERY PRINCIPLE OF JUSTICE.

"In a word, the reason this court should not pass judgment as I see it, is that by so doing it will openly violate every principle of justice for the promotion of which our courts exist.

"Solemnly facing iron bars and prison walls, I assert my love for justice and my faith in its ultimate triumph—not a justice of theory, but of reality extending to men, women and children whose proper equality of opportunity it embraces; and with utmost earnestness I want it understood that my one satisfaction is my lot—separated though I be from those who are dearer to me than life—lies in the belief that this, my undeserved experience, may help awaken others to the living wrongs in our world, calling today as definitely as in the past for remedy.

"It is a privilege and a duty, even by sacrifice, to advance our priceless cause. I am therefore ready to receive the sentence this court should declare itself without either authority, right or justification to impose."

"ONE DAY OFF IN SEVEN."

By E. D. SKINNER.

Denver, Colorado, was proud of two things: Elich's restaurant, and the Reverend Myron W. Reed. Booming towns always have to be proud of something—and Denver was booming.

This was more than thirty years ago.

I ate my first meal at Elich's, and listened to my first sermon at the First Presbyterian Church. The meal was good, but the sermon a disappointment. I had received my religious training under the tutelage of lady-like divines who painted beautiful word pictures of spiritual altitudes to which they had a sort of mild hope that the souls of their auditors might aspire. The reverend Myron W. Reed was not of this sort. As to personal appearance, he was entirely too rugged for a lady; and his sermon was made up of a series of short, coldly stated sentences that absolutely failed to complete my ideal of a polished oratorical effort. Denver was certainly badly in need of the civilizing influences of eastern culture if this was the best they could boast of in the way of a pulpit exhorter! But, in the days that followed, certain of these sharp, jerky sentences insistently recurred to my mind. Polished orations I had forgotten, when hardly finished. But these were helpful in the everyday problems of human life—and singularly pertinent.

It was on the Sunday of the "Lincoln's Birthday Memorial Services" that I listened to his appreciation of the "best man and the grandest statesman that ever graced our presidential chair"—listened until it almost seemed that the resurrected spirit of the "Great Emancipator" was itself speaking from that church pulpit—listened until, at last, I caught a glimpse of the inner soul of the very reverend Myron W. Reed—the most humanely practical ecclesiastic that I have ever been fated to meet. Sour faced deacons and deaconesses bemoaned his "lack of dignity" and bitterly bewailed the fact that he did not faint away at the sight of a whisky bottle, when on the hunting and fishing trips that he enjoyed so well. But hard working men, seriously struggling with life's difficult problems, went to him for advice and were not disappointed.

The Tabor Grand Opera House was filled to overflowing. A public mass meeting had been called by the retail clerks for the purpose of arousing interest in the closing of the stores on Sunday. A good many of the clerks did not belong to any particular church and had not been properly converted to any decidedly religious sentiments, but—they wanted to live like human beings. Aside from themselves and their particular friends, the general public was not specially interested, but—the reverend Myron W. Reed was to address the meeting, and standing room was at a premium in the "finest theatre of its size in the world." Strangers, hearing that a celebrated divine was to speak, probably expected a forensic masterpiece on the sanctity of the holy Sabbath Day that would lift their souls above the sordid cares and tribulations of everyday life and carry them away into the realms of the higher spiritualities, where angels ever lie in beatified prostration before sublimated divinity and the eternal ether is heavy laden with "incense and myrrh." Probably they were seriously disappointed when he devoted an hour and a half to a plain, simple, concise elaboration of the contention that "one day's rest in seven is a physical necessity for all men." Very likely they were even seriously shocked when he admitted that "clerks, closely confined at sedentary indoor occupations for six days a week, would gain needed benefit by the one day's rest, even if they did spend it at a base ball game where tired brains find relaxation in healthy amusement and weary bodies absorb new life from God's own fresh air and bright sunshine." But, very certainly they did not forget what he said that day, for, since then, the Denver stores have been doing an ever increasing business in six days a week, instead of seven.

From one end of our country to the other, cooks, waiters and waitresses—boys and girls and old men and women—are asking for "one day off in seven." They want to "live like human beings." Theirs is called "light work" by those who do not know. Those who do know, know better. Insurance companies rate this work among their "short lived" occupations. Those who know, know why it is "short lived." They know that it is bodily wearying and mentally nerve racking. If these boys and girls and old men and women get their "one day off in seven," it may be that they will not devote that day to the spiritual elevation of their souls. It may be that they will go to the base ball games, where "tired brains find relaxation in healthy amusement and weary bodies absorb new life from God's own fresh air and bright sunshine." Because of this will the ministers, and the churches and the "good people," refuse to help? The Christ, whom they profess to follow, said, "The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath."

LOOKING FOR MORE TROUBLE.

One naturally assumed that the Mulhall exposé had put a crimp in the activities of the National Association of Manufacturers, that their officials would remain seated away back in the Amen Corner and that the organization would conduct its affairs with less aggressiveness than prior to the Congressional inquiry which exposed the whole rotten methods of the N. A. M. That they are neither dead or sleeping the citizens of the Pacific Coast can well testify, for it was not so many months ago when a part of that organization, assuming for the time being another title, began its criminal crusade in the city of Stockton, Cal., and gave that thriving city a sample of unlawful methods from which it will take many years to recover. We long ago suspected that there was a connection between the Anti-Saloon League and the N. A. M., and concluded that where the one failed the other would put forth all of its energies to bring commercial and industrial disharmony and distress.

It seems passing strange that the Water Wagonites, under the guidance of Anti-Saloon League founder Russell, should have selected almost the same route for their efforts and finally land in the State of California, but they are there and trying their level best to either kill off industry or put that good State on the tramp. We have commented on the Water Wagonites in previous issues of THE MIXER AND SERVER, now we have the privilege of offering some terse and interesting items relative to the other branch of the House of Destruction. The following news item appeared in the Sacramento Bee on August 6th and the two editorials which follow on the same date, appeared in the Union and Bee as indicated by credit following each:

CHAMBER WILL NOT WELCOME COMING OF ANTI-LABOR SPEAKERS.

Commerce Body to Investigate Organization Which Wants to Send Representatives.

A letter from the Pacific Federation of Employers, seeking to arrange a speaking engagement for speakers from the National Association of Manufacturers, was looked upon with suspicion by the directors of the Chamber of Commerce last night, and will be investigated before any action is taken.

The letter seeks to arrange an appointment in Sacramento for George Pope, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, and James E. Emery, general counsel for the association. President Carmichael stated he is certain it has no connection with the Merchants', Manufacturers' and Employers' Association, an anti-union labor organization of this State.

The Directors of the Chamber of Commerce will investigate before a reply giving a date to the speakers is sent. They will not invite speakers in any way connected with the Merchants', Manufacturers' and Employers' Association.—Sacramento Bee.

NO LABOR WAR WANTED.

For weeks an agent of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association has been in this city seeking to strengthen the hands of that organization of employers.

Although this man who was the stormy petrel of the Stockton labor war, denies that he is seeking to cause a similar conflict here, there is evidence that his mission is anything but peaceful.

This man is simply the paid agent of the association. He is working on precisely the same principle as the old-time "walking delegate"—he is known best possibly by the trouble he makes.

If this man is here to foment discord, the sooner he leaves the better for this city. This is not the time to stir up a labor conflict.

When such things come it is the right—yes, the duty—of employers to meet the issue fearlessly.

That employers have just as much right to organize as the workers cannot be questioned. One of the weaknesses of employers in dealing with labor organizations in the past was their lack of cohesive organization.

There is nothing in the industrial situation at present that seems to require the efforts of a professional disturber. Peace reigns in practically all lines of business. Here and there are minor disputes which will continue as long as there are employers and employees, and no form of compulsory arbitration.

The employers of Sacramento are not likely to look with favor on the overtures of this adversary agent whose success as a business promoter was not such as to make him an adviser whose opinions have practical value.

This city wants peace and not industrial war. It wants prosperity and not increased depression.

The merchants of Sacramento have trouble enough without having more forced on them.—Editorial, Sacramento (Cal. Union), August 6, 1915.

SACRAMENTO EMPLOYERS CAN MANAGE THEIR OWN AFFAIRS.

A paid organizer of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association—known in Stockton and elsewhere as the Merchants, Manufacturers and Employers' Association—is in the city of Sacramento busily engaged in endeavoring to have the employers become active members of such association.

The main object of this association is, according to its statements, to combine employers together for their mutual advantage and protection.

Another purpose—as shown by its work and even its pronunciamento in Stockton, and really its principal object—is to disrupt, if not to destroy, union labor organizations.

Now, employers have the same right to combine as have employees. Not only that, they should combine.

There is absolutely no more reason why men who employ should not get together for the purpose of protecting their interests as such employers, than that the employees should not get together for the purpose of advancing their interests, of obtaining better conditions of labor, better hours and fairer wages.

And it is a good thing for both sides when both are organized, so that organization can speak to organization with authority to act and enforce its decrees.

But this Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, while demanding that employees must treat with it as an organized body, exacts at the same time that employers shall not treat with employees save as separate units—that, while forcing recognition of their association, they refuse to recognize any organization authorized to speak for their employees.

Without going any further into this subject, it is sufficient to say that it would be extremely bad policy on the part of the employers of Sacramento to join any association so constituted and so working.

Sacramento does not need any alien organization to send its paid organizers and fomenters of discord to tell the business men of this city how they shall act for their own protection.

And particularly does Sacramento not need the services of an alien organization that—while combating the undoubted unjust exactions sometimes made by organized labor—itself is guilty of a throttling tyranny as oppressive as any act it has complained against.

In Stockton, for instance, this association bulldozed unwilling merchants into joining by threats of ruin if they did not; had pliant banks put the screws on merchant debtors in order to force them into line; and deliberately "instructed" the newspapers what they must and must not publish concerning the labor troubles, on pain of wholesale loss of advertising patronage.

The employers of Sacramento are fully competent to organize for their own good, without relying on the doubtful benefit of alliance with such an organization.

And it probably would be a goodly thing if the business men of Sacramento had a strong organization pledged to mutual advancement, mutual protection and mutual assistance—an organization that while demanding for itself the right to organize into a central body for such purpose, would not have the inconsistency to deny to its employes the same right.

This Merchants and Manufacturers' Association—or the Merchants, Manufacturers and Employers' Association—no matter what one may choose to call it—endeavored to get a foothold in Fresno. The employers there, after considering the matter, refused to have anything to do with it.

But at the same time the business men of Fresno did not go unorganized. They have a splendid, well-systematized association of employers there, which has on more than one occasion come to the front for the protection and aid of a member of such association considered to be unfairly treated.

So far as known, the differences in Fresno under the management of the labor unions on one side and this local employers' association on the other, have not led to any of the intense bitterness which will leave many a sore spot in Stockton for years to come; have not put a black eye on the business of Fresno, as the interjection of this alien association did in Stockton for over a year.

Fresno business men wisely have decided that—while they intend to keep together to fight for what they believe to be their rights, and stand by one another when they consider any member is unjustly treated by the other side—they do not intend to permit themselves to become catspaws for any intermeddling, alien organization.

And Sacramento business men will be wise if they follow the good example of Fresno.—Editorial, Sacramento (Cal.) Bee, August 6, 1915.

ALONG THE FIRING LINE

A STRONG PROTEST AGAINST PROHIBITION.

This coming fall the voters of Ohio are again compelled to undergo the annoyance and turmoil connected with a political campaign against the endeavor of the prohibition fanatics to have a constitutional amendment adopted providing for State-wide prohibition, although the same amendment was rejected last fall by an overwhelming majority. Local 12, Cincinnati, celebrated its thirty-fifth anniversary last Saturday, and the officers and members of the local took advantage of this occasion to voice their energetic protest against the prohibition movement. The principal speaker of the day was Mr. Ernest A. Weier, a man, although no more active in the labor movement, who never lets an opportunity slip by to raise his voice in the defense of labor's rights. Mr. Weier said in part:

"The celebration of your thirty-fifth anniversary you have dedicated to a demonstration against that absurd fanaticism which endeavors to destroy your industry, and with it destroy the means of your livelihood—that favorite daughter of puritanism—Prohibition.

"You are accustomed to fight prohibition for economic reasons. This but natural. Moreover, all of us admit, that in this land of the Almighty Dollar the argument of the economic waste of prohibition carries the greatest force in the swaying of public opinion. Material interests are generally very influential in determining men's votes.

"But there are other, and, in my opinion, greater reasons, for our objection to prohibition, than the purely economic ones.

"We can afford to be frank in this matter. We acknowledge that the agitation in favor of prohibition has grown phenomenally. The campaign against the use of alcoholic stimulants is accumulating force in a degree which should arouse the vigilance of every lover of true democracy and personal liberty. All arguments which may have a semblance of truth, if delivered against THE ABUSE of alcohol are hurled against the USE of any stimulating beverages. We have no fault to find with the Puritans and their fanaticism, if they try only to make us THINK AS THEY DO. What we object to is that they try to force us TO DO AS THEY THINK. WE do not try to force THEM to take a drink with us. The average teetotaler is the sort of a man we wouldn't care to drink with—even if he drank. But he is entitled to his personal views, as long as he does not try to make HIS FALLACIES the law of the land, and to establish himself as censor over our daily lives. As I have said, I am opposed to prohibition not for economic reasons only. Personally I object to prohibition mainly on moral grounds. I object to prohibition because I am American by choice, who loves his country and its institutions, and will do the best that is in him, to rid it of any and all fanatic outgrowths. This is the native country of my children and grandchildren, and as long as I can speak and do, I will in words and actions do the best in my ability to preserve the liberty and the freedom of this country.

"The prohibition movement, we are assured from many pulpits, is based entirely upon moral considerations! But, is that true? Our own conception of the matter is, that prohibition is absolutely and positively unmoral! Mind you, we speak of PROHIBITION, not of temperance nor of abstinence!

"Just a glance at the ethical side of prohibition. A tree is judged by its fruits. And what are the fruits of prohibition? One thing is sure—and that is tearfully admitted by the sincere prohibitionists—prohibition does not prohibit! If I speak of sincere prohibitionists, then I mean those poor misguided souls who really believe that demon rum is responsible for all human ills, and who can't see further than their noses' length. The professional prohibitionists, who make a business out of it, like Wayne Wheeler and others of like ilk, don't admit that, of course—it might lose them their remunerative jobs, and about that they are very particular. They have a great respect for the pay envelopes. But, if prohibition does not prohibit, what does it do? First of all, it abolishes very decent and well regulated saloons, where men may congregate in respectable social intercourse, discuss the affairs of the day, etc., and in their stead it creates low dives, kept by men of low character, speakeasies and bootleggers. It turns every drug store into a speakeasy, where men can get rot-gut whiskies by the wholesale or in coffee cups, and under any old name that may be invented for it. The business prohibitionists say that every mother who cares for the future of her son should and would vote for prohibition if she had the vote. I can not conceive of a mother who would rather see her son sneaking into the back door of a low dive and come out with a whiskey bottle in his side pocket, than see him go straight into that front door of a respectable saloon, have his drink of beer or wine with his friends and come out open and free as a man. Prohibition makes hypocrites and liars out of men who would prefer to be candid and straightforward. What is more honorable, to have a beer wagon drive up to your front door, or that the express driver delivers to you a dozen bottles of whiskey in a soap box to fool your neighbors. The greatest asset of a republic is the respect its citizenship holds for the laws of the land. Prohibition creates contempt of law and fosters this contempt—it undermines the very foundation of the republic. Do you believe that any respectable citizen can maintain respect for a law which he knows in his heart is immoral and which dictates to him what he shall eat and drink and do—when his heart is set only on doing right and to live his life in his own way, and live it in a way that it does not interfere with the happiness and welfare of his fellow citizen? No, you don't; because it is against all human nature. But contempt for one law breeds contempt for all laws. That is the grounds on which I oppose prohibition, and the reason why I consider the whole movement as an immoral one. We all know and fully admit that intemperance is a great evil. We are all honestly willing to promote temperance and temperateness.

"But prohibition has never and in no place aided temperance. The very term prohibition implies intemperance. He who is intemperate in forcing his own views, how good or how bad they may be, upon his neighbors, is apt to be intemperate in all other things. That is the reason why intemperate boozers so often become eloquent prohibitionists. There are hundreds of arguments that I could present along this line. But this is the ethical aspect of the proposition. Again, I repeat, prohibition is immoral!

"Just one illustration. Georgia is practically a prohibition State since 1907. But to cap the climax, to put an extra twist into the devil's tail, State-wide prohibition went into effect on July 1 this year. I have in my hand a newspaper clipping, which is a special dispatch to the New York World. It is dated Atlanta, July 2, 1915, and reads as follows: 'State-wide prohibition went into effect yesterday, and every saloon and dispensary was closed.' Yet today the House of Representatives passed this new rule:

"No member shall be permitted on the floor of the House while in an intoxicated condition, and the doorkeeper is directed to keep a close watch and eject any member who is intoxicated."

"If prohibition prohibits why was this rule necessary? Let us suppose the legislature of Georgia realized that it was drunk when it passed the State-wide prohibition act and wanted to protect itself from the demon rum.

"Prohibition has in no instance fulfilled what was promised of it. It has never decreased drunkenness nor debauchery, instead of emptying the jails and poorhouses it has overcrowded them; instead of abolishing poverty it has created more paupers.

"But the fervor of the paid prohibitionists never abates! When it is possible to say to the workingmen (and prohibitionary laws are, of course, instituted only for the laboring class) what they should drink or not drink, then it is also possible to regulate what the workingman should eat! On July 8 of this year, only two weeks ago, the Supreme Court of Kansas held that Jamaica ginger, lemon and vanilla extracts, cologne, camphor and similar tinctures, extracts and essences are to be classed as intoxicating liquors, and that a druggist who sells them may be prosecuted for violation of the prohibitory laws.

"Kansas is a fine territory for the prohibitionists! In glorious pictures we are told of the fertile grounds, of the golden wheat fields of Kansas. But rarely the truth leaks out. Statistics, however, show that the fertile grounds and the golden wheat fields of Kansas are passing more and more into the hands of large corporations, that the small farmer in Kansas is on the wane, and is constantly sinking down into tenantry. And yet the fool farmers of Kansas and so many other States do not see the cause of the toboggan-slide which destroys their individuality and their independence.

"The paid reformers, who, in the service of capitalism and abetted by mollycoddle preachers and some good-goodies in petticoats, endeavor to establish a false ethical code for the working class, and to place this class under the tyranny of sumptuary laws, are a menace to the country. There is no slavery more abominable than the slavery of ill-considered laws, denying and destroying the personal rights of the citizens and crushing individual manhood with the policeman's club. It becomes the duty of every true citizen of this republic to twist the tail of the immoral prohibitionist devil which infests the political arena, and drive him out of the country.

"Specially the workingmen of this country must demonstrate to the powers who rule that they are men, not merely hands. And they must demonstrate that they are fullfledged citizens, ready and able to protect their personal liberty, and not mere objects of exploitation.

"But this sordid question is apt to destroy the pleasures of an occasion which should be a joyous one. Returning to my first remarks, I again congratulate you and your organization upon the progress you have made.

"May you continue to work and to grow in the even tenor of your way—an honor to yourself and a splendid example for the entire labor movement. And, by the way, don't neglect next fall to puncture the tires of the water-wagon!"—Brewery Workers' Journal, July 31, 1915.

SALOON SEATS.

This paper holds no brief for the saloon business. What is here said is not for the purpose of making a defense of either the selling or the drinking of intoxicating beverages, but it is to call to mind the basis upon which the business of the selling of liquor rests and the service which the saloon supplies in order to get an opportunity to sell liquor.

We dare to speak of that service even at the risk of being understood as championing the liquor business.

After a hot day in Bakersfield the number of men who gather about the various bars of the city may approximate several hundred. The saloons offer a cool room with comfortable seats and an opportunity to indulge in sociability.

Let's take for example the unmarried working-man who lives in a single room in a lodging house. His room has been closed all day. Until 9 or 10 o'clock at night such a room is unendurable. Just as naturally as water flows down hill, the occupant of such a room will drop into a place where he can find a measure of comfort during the early hours of the evening. The saloon supplies just such a place and nothing else in Bakersfield at this time seeks to supply it. The few seats about the city hall are always filled. Even out at our toy park in the southern end of the city you will find the seats well taken up most any evening.

There is a need for parks. Places where people can spend the sweltering hours of early evening in a measure of comfort. Until we make some intelligent effort to supply such things there will remain well founded opposition to more stringent regulation of the saloons in the matter of removing the seats, where men sit under an electric fan and rest, even though they may in taking such rest spend money for beer.

We have found by experience that we must supply by public effort a lot of things which we do not have. Private enterprise does not seem sufficient to supply the need. Every evening scores of people go from Bakersfield to a poor little irrigation reservoir six miles in the country to get an opportunity to take a plunge. They pay for the service, too. The trip costs them money and the plunge costs them another small fee.

Think of it! There is hardly a village anywhere which does not supply things like this at greater convenience than does this city.

While we are regulating things and seeking out things which people ought not to do, let's help them to do things which they ought to do.

The man who lives in a fine home with a fine lawn and shade and a car in which to take his family out at evening for a cooling drive does not feel the need for a park or a seat in a saloon, where a nickel spent for beer will give him chance to sit down and read the papers and cool off. It is the people who live in sun-baked houses, who work hard all day, who need the parks and it is mainly those same people who sit in the saloon seats. Now, if we want to keep the people out of the saloons, let's give them some place else to go.—Bakersfield (Cal.) Union Labor Journal.

ADVOCATES TAXING LAND VALUES AS A MEANS OF PROVIDING THE GOVERNMENT WITH FUNDS FOR ITS MAINTENANCE.

The Chicago Liquor Dealers' Protective Association are appealing to senators and congressmen to substitute a tax on land values for the proposed further taxation on the beverage industry of the United States.

The activity of the Chicago Liquor Dealers is an excellent sign that they realize that the unobstructed, or practically so, campaign to tax the beverage industry out of existence, has gone to its ultimate if they can prevent it. They have begun a serious effort to direct attention to unused land and land minus proper land value taxation, which they believe, and with considerable to back them in that belief, that the government should "scatter its blows a little bit" and reach those who have been almost immune from taxation heretofore.

The following letter fully sets forth the wishes of the organization and no doubt gives expression to views held by citizens who give such matters thought:

To the Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States:

In view of the fact that the war in Europe has seriously interfered with the Government income and realizing that Congress in order to enable our country to maintain itself will be forced to increase the rates on property and vocations already taxed, or to levy a tax on property or vocations which are now untaxed, we, the undersigned, an organization of retail liquor dealers in the city of Chicago, beg to submit the following:

It has been the custom of Congress when an emergency arose necessitating an increase of income to turn its attention first to the liquor traffic. The tax on everything that the retail liquor dealer sold was raised forthwith. It was evidently the opinion of the law-makers that this tax increase would be borne by the wealthy owners of the great breweries, distilleries and vineyards of the country and would not fall on those least able to pay.

We regret to say that these tax increases were never paid by the great producers but were immediately shifted to the shoulders of the small retail liquor dealers. On account of a fixed and almost unchangeable scale of prices in the retail liquor trade, the small dealer could not make an increase in the cost of his goods to the consumer. The result has been that out of the meager income from his business, the retail liquor dealer has been obliged to pay the entire tax increase on every gallon of liquor which he sold. It must also be remembered that on account of confiscatory state laws we have suffered a greater property loss than any other class since our government was organized, unless it be those men of the South whose lawful property in slaves was taken from them without compensation in 1863.

Believing that it is your desire to be fair to men in all vocations, we do most respectfully ask you to make no further increase in our burden, as we are sure that impartial consideration will convince your honorable body that out of the profits of our business we are now paying to the government a share far in excess of that paid by any other class of business men.

We also wish at this time to call your attention to a class of property that seems to have been treated with remarkable solicitude by Congress. We refer to property in land. We can not conceive of a fairer method to all classes than a tax on land values. In common with other business men we are the prey of the owner of land values, with this exception that we are generally charged fifty to one hundred per cent higher rents. It seems unfair to impose on the men of our nation, who strive and work and hustle the entire tax burden and then allow those, who reap the greatest income with the least effort, to practically escape all national taxation. We, therefore, ask you to study the question of a tax on land values if it is found to be necessary to increase the national income.

A tax of this kind will be opposed by all wealthy parasites, by all the great land-holding corporations and by all land speculators, but we do not think any objections which these interests may offer should be given much consideration by Congress. Men who withhold useful land from use while hundreds of thousands of willing workers are unemployed, should not be exempted from their just share of taxation.

A tax on land values would be fair to all, would be an inexhaustible source of all necessary revenue for the maintenance of our government and would be the means of giving employment to thousands of men by forcing into use an immense area of valuable idle land.

We are also sure it would be a most welcome opportunity for all true patriots in prohibition States to share with the retail liquor dealers in wet States, the privilege of contributing their just quota to the revenue of our glorious country.

Yours very respectfully,

CHICAGO LIQUOR DEALERS' PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

WAR'S EFFECT ON UNIONISM.

Ottawa, Ontario, July 26, 1915.—The effect of the European war on Canadian trade unionism is one of the features of the fourth annual report of the Dominion Department of Labor. It is shown that the loss in trade union membership last year was 9,636.

A table is furnished showing the expenditure during the year 1914 on account of benefits paid by central labor organizations operating in Canada. Of the 102 international bodies whose activities extend into the Dominion, 79 have benefit features on a varying scale. The total disbursements during 1914 by the various international organizations amounted to $12,837,987, divided as follows:

Death benefits, $8,864,631; strike benefits, $1,953,350; sick benefits, $963,353; accident benefits, $635,580; old age pensions, $266,395; unemployed benefits, $97,392; traveling benefits, $47,286.

ONE BARREL OF BEER A MONTH ENOUGH FOR MAN.

Official "Liquor Censor" of Mason City Making Census of Thirsty Population.

Mason City, Ia., Aug. 7.—R. D. Mason, "liquor censor" by virtue of his appointment Thursday by the city council, today reported that on his first day of work he had sent back to breweries thirty barrels of beer out of sixty received in Mason City. He is compiling a list of the thirsty population of the city and expects to see that they do not overdo their liquor orders.

"One barrel or three cases of beer and one gallon of whisky is as much as any one man should have in a month without a physician's prescription," said Mr. Mason.

No doubt the reader will peruse the foregoing press dispatch with amazement, for it is generally understood that Iowa is DRY and that it is not only impossible to obtain intoxicating beverages legally in that State, but that those who try to do so invite the attention of the police authorities. If Iowa sets the minimum at one barrel or three cases of beer and one gallon of whiskey for each of its citizens per month, and they try to consume the minimum allowed, what a wonderful advance will be made for prohibition.

SLANG-SLINGING SOUL-SAVING SUGGESTIONS.

Observing the success of the Billy Sunday methods in the matter of conversion, "Puck" suggests that the attempt be made to apply the same methods to other church ceremonies and activities. The following formulas are proposed Pastor (christening infant)—What do you want to call this hunk of excess baggage, Bo?

Presiding Parson—What miserable mutt giveth this skirt to be married to this gink?

The Bride's Father—I'm the guy.

Industrious Usher—Slide, you ice-carts! Slide!

Passing the Plate—Come across with the iron men, you low-lived tight-wads!

Sunday School Superintendent—All of you little flivvers that want to swat Satan, stand on one leg.

There is yet time for you to take an application and endeavor to convert a non-union worker at the catering industry before the close of the year, 1915. Surely you desire to see your local union show as large a membership as it had when at the beginning of 1915 your officers made their reports for the previous year. There is one way to make good—get applicants.

LAND OF PLEASANT DREAMS.

Some day when weariness fills us with tear,
Some day together we'll wander, my dear;
Some day through shadows and out to the sun
In the country of dreams and of laughter and fun.

The country of pleasant and beautiful dreams,
Of hills over valleys that are bound by sweet streams
That flow through the bottom and sing all the day
To the hearts of the weary that rest by the way.

Some day when shadows are lifted awhile,
Some day together we'll go with a smile,
Hand clasped in hand and our heads to the blue
Above the sweet country of dreams, me and you.

CHAT OF THE CRAFT

GOVERNMENT OFFICIAL WOULD HAVE AMERICANS EAT MORE SNAILS.

Fifty Tons of Snails Consumed Daily in Paris During Season—Rome Regarded Them As a Delicacy.

Washington, July 26.—Exit, the oyster; enter the snail. That is to say, if, in the matter of gastronomy, you are willing to follow the lead of E. W. Rust of the Federal Horticultural Board. Rust is the chap who wants the American people to solve the problem of the high cost of living by the establishment of hippopotami preserves in the Southern States, substituting the generous steak supply of that pachydermatous aquatic animal for the vanishing one of the American beef. Having started on a mad career looking to the reformation of our food habits, Mr. Rust deems it incumbent on him to suggest something beside the great staples, and offers the edible snail as an available tidbit. Having relieved the French of the odium of being the only frog-eaters in the world, why not imitate the Parisians likewise in the matter of devouring snails?

Mr. Rust develops his own familiarity with the subject, not only in an historical and a scientific, but likewise in a culinary sense. When he speaks of snails he knows whereof he speaks, and he speaks with some reverence, not at all in the mushy grapejuice spirit that prevailed within the administration not so many moons ago. The snail, he says, is not a national dish in France; it is a national delicacy—one to be partaken of, perhaps, as an entree at 30 or 40 cents the plate when one goes to dine at some smart cafe—one to be washed down with wine while the orchestra plays softly. Oh, happy, Rustian memories of a gay sojourn in dear old Paris! A luxury, a tidbit, if you wish, says Rust, but scarcely a staple—and never to be mentioned in the same breath as beefsteak and onions. Of course not.

Mr. Rust, having eaten the luscious, if somewhat glutinous, gasteropod of the genus Helix, proceeded to inform himself with reference to the approved methods of its preparation for table. His latest literary production will, no doubt, in spots, be embalmed within the next national cook book to be issued by Uncle Sam. It embodies the recipes for making the snail palatable. First you catch your snail, if you're sufficiently fleet of foot; you cleanse; you boil in a caldron of salt water. Now the meat is removed, reduced to paste, seasoned with finely chopped parsley, chervil and shallots—my little hand dictionary refuses to divulge the identity of chervil and shallots—and is placed between two thin slices of unsalted butter. The shells having been cleaned and dried, they are now stuffed with this mixture. If your stomach permits, you eat. Another favorite dish is escarpots a la Bordelaise; simply a combination of the cooked snail meat, garlic, butter and red wine. For those who find it too rich, a body of toasted crackers or bread crumbs can be added. Deelicious! Ex-quise!

There's nothing nauseating about it—almost everyone who has ever eaten well-prepared snails, says Mr. Rust, admits their gastronomic worth, both from the point of nutritive value and that of flavor. They might be used to a great extent as a substitute for oysters, he suggests, which they resemble in flavor when properly prepared. Such a practice, in his opinion, would be advantageous, for the snail is preferable as an article of human consumption. It is cleaner and feeds daintily, only on the cleanest of vegetable tissues, while oysters, being unable to move about in search of food, must take what comes to them in the water, and are sometimes fattened in water impregnated with bacteria-laden sewage, thus acting as carriers of typhoid and other diseases.

SOMETHING ABOUT SNAIL HISTORY.

Mr. Rust goes back to the B. C. period in his attempt historically to establish the ancient recognition of the snail as an article of food. Snail culture, although reaching the Himalaya of its development in France, can be traced far back, for Pliny the elder relates that Mr. Fluvius Hirpinus first instituted snail preserves at Tarquinium, a Tuscan city not far from Rome, about 50 B. C. There the mollusks were guarded in enclosures and gorged on meal and boiled wine until fat enough for use. The snails "attained a large size and a very agreeable flavor," Mr. Pliny, senior, assures us. During the growth of the Roman empire snail culture was introduced into the countries subjugated—the snail following the flag, as it were—and in this manner the industry found a foothold in Switzerland and in the provinces bordering on the Danube, where it flourished during the Middle Ages. From Ulm, in the Swabian Alps, 10,000 snails annually were sent down the Danube to Vienna, where they were eaten as "fish" during the lenten season. During the latter part of the eighteenth century a sure market for snails was found in France, having been introduced by French wine merchants who annually visited Burgundy and who first partook of the delicacy at the posting inns. New markets have been established since then, and in the town of Gutenstein alone several millions of snails are fattened each year.

THE SNAIL'S LIFE STORY.

Likewise Mr. Rust has gone thoroughly into the life history of the edible snail, being the Helix pomatia—having nothing whatever to do with pomade—in the United States. The eggs are deposited during June and July; they resemble mistletoe berries in color and consistency, and might readily be mistaken for homeopathic pills. Growth is rapid, and by autumn they have attained the size of a large marble and are "quite fat and well-conditioned," having eaten ravenously preparatory to a long winter's fast. When the frost comes, the snails become inactive and congregate in town meetings. Each one digs a hole with its foot, just large enough to accommodate the shell, and after lining this hole with dead leaves and slime from its mantle, the mollusk turns the mouth of its shell upward and closes the aperture with a thick calcareous lid called an epiphragm, which is excreted by the mantle. Thus protected, the snail passes the winter in a torpid condition. With the advent of warm weather the epiphragm is thrown off and growth recommences. The snail does not reach its maximum size until the second summer, when it should be from one and a half to two and a half inches in height and vary from creamy white to dark brown, either with or without stripes—depending, no doubt, on its law-abiding or criminal instincts. In Europe these snails are placed in inclosures, called pens, parks or gardens.

In the United States snail growing would be a simple matter, for all that is required is a bushy hillside or, preferably, a limestone bluff near water and partially covered with vegetation. They will require no farther attention, as they do not wander far, may with safety be allowed to play with the children, and are perfectly capable of obtaining food and shelter from the wild plants which cover their domain. "There they will multiply," says Mr. Rust enthusiastically, "and every farmer might have his own supply to replace the widely used oyster, and might also supply his less fortunate city neighbor, with profit to both." The sense of smell of the snails Mr. Rust describes as very acute and it leads them infallibly to their food, which they attack by means of the tongue, or radula, which is ribbon-shaped and beset with rows of hundreds of sharp teeth of microscopic size. They must not be allowed to over-feed, for if they do a horrible fate will overtake them. Gases will form, and they'll swell up and burst. In which condition they are perfectly useless. The snail season in Paris runs from September to April—just like our oyster season—and more than 200,000,000 snails are disposed of during that time. Fifty tons of snails are consumed in Paris daily when trade is at its best.

BUT AMERICANS HAVE PREJUDICE.

The United States yet remains in almost total ignorance of the delightful possibilities which Mr. Rust has discovered. In the larger cities snails have a limited sale among foreigners, but few native-born Americans have ever tasted them. Mr. Rust regretfully admits that few now even regard them as a fit article of diet. But they are, he exclaims, an excellent and tasty morsel, which should be grown over large sections of our country to furnish a "welcome addition" to the menu of the locality. "And thus," he concludes, "a really worthy article of diet would be introduced and an industry created which might reach large proportions if the American people could only be educated to see the true worth of the edible snail."

To which stirring appeal the attention of the American people is herewith prayerfully directed.—Gus J. KARGER in Times-Star.

MORATORIUM IN RELIGION.

The following article was printed in many of the American newspapers who use the Associated Press dispatches. The article was seemingly mailed from Berlin July 12, but did not make its appearance in the American press until July 23, 1915:

"Berlin, July 12, 1915.—A 'moratorium in Christianity' is proposed by a writer in the Christliche Welt, one of the leading religious journals of Germany. The writer urges that 'in a war of this character, where ruthlessness of an unparalleled type is displayed, and where the very regiments of Christianity are ignored, it would be wise, if Christianity is to be maintained, that it should not be preached or taught during the continuance of the war.'

"The writer, who states that he is now serving at the front, says he is convinced that war itself is an evidence that, for the time being, evil is uppermost in the world. 'It is as though one were obliged to lay aside humanity and to relinquish all that distinguished a Christian man. It is mockery to ask men with blood-stained hearts to approach the table of the Lord.'

"'Fighting in the trenches,' continues the article, 'is of such a character that every feeling of religion and every inclination to prayer ceases. It is not Christian teaching that a man wants as he comes fresh from the frightful hell of the trenches.

"'War is a phenomenon which the church should not be able to bless. It is opposed to every essential of Christianity, and the sooner a moratorium for Christianity is declared the better. There should be no more church nonsense about the ennobling and purifying effects of war. For hundreds of thousands of men at the front, men who once believed in the faith, the moratorium is already in effect. When they return from the blood-soaked battle front their Christianity will be of a different order, and they will insist upon the church adopting a different Christianity.'

Had that German soldier visited the United States during the campaign of 1914, especially as it was conducted in the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Ohio, Oregon and Washington, he would have speedily reached the conclusion that a fair share of the so-called Christians of some churches which pretend to be Christian institutions, had not only been operating under a Religious Moratorium, but had succeeded in getting by with a Social and a Humane suspension at one and the same time.

The so-called "Church in Action," as described by the Anti-Saloon League shouters, has succeeded in engraving on the churches "a different Christianity." So different, in fact, that not many months ago one of the denominations made an admission that it had lost more than 250,000 members inside of five years. And while they did not advise the cause for so many suspensions, the real underlying facts are, that the folks who believe that the Word of God should be expounded in Christian churches, discovered that their edifices had been re-immersed and came out of the baptismal pond with the dollar mark of Politico-Christianity emblazoned thereon. America can boast of more kinds of Christian Moratoriums than the Germany Army has different kinds of weapons.

SHAKING THINGS UP SOMEWHAT AT LOS ANGELES.

Right on the heels, so to speak, of the action of our Eighteenth General Convention, the mayor of Los Angeles, Cal., has taken, or advised that such step be taken, which will quickly clean up the Asiatic and non-citizen worker in saloons and cafes which vend intoxicants.

The following item from the Los Angeles Herald of August 4, 1915, will interest the members of our International Union who have been giving the question of Oriental competition their time and attention in an effort to find a solution of the problem:

"A blow at the practice of holders of saloon licenses employing Oriental assistance in saloons was struck by the police commission today.

"Mayor Sebastian suggested to the police commission that the secretary be instructed to prepare a resolution which would prohibit any one but an American citizen being employed in saloons.

"His plan was given support by both Commissioner Owen and Commissioner Johnson, who stated that they would take it under consideration for action at the next police commission meeting.

"I do not believe it is good practice for saloon proprietors to employ anyone but American citizens in saloons, particularly when there are so many men out of work," said Mayor Sebastian.

"Can this be done legally?" asked Commissioner Johnson of City Prosecutor Williams.

"The commission has the right to dictate the policy of any saloons and say whether or not it is for the best conduct of the saloons to employ others than American citizens," replied the prosecutor.

"We will take this up at the next meeting, and in the meantime have a resolution prepared instructing the saloonkeepers to employ only American citizens," said Commissioner Owen.

MAKING COOKS BY THE THOUSANDS.

It is estimated that there are in the field kitchens of the German Army one cook to each twenty men bearing arms. That is to say, that since mobilization occurred, over a year ago, one out of every twenty German soldiers have been forced to learn the rudiments of plain cooking, under the direction of men fully acquainted with that branch of the trade. After the war closes it is just barely possible that these men may seek employment at the catering industry and stand a pretty good chance of displacing those who have heretofore held the kitchen jobs. America is not at war, but it has developed, in the last few years, enough embryo waiters, graduates from the self-service houses, to make the outlook anything but encouraging. It may sound like a joke to some of our members, but it is fact, nevertheless, that self-service patrons are becoming adepts in what the old-timers used to call "arm work," and when some of them lose a job they make a pretty good bluff at table service.

BIG SALT PRODUCTION.

Washington, Aug. 5.—Salt consumed in the United States amounted to 9,998,520,560 pounds during 1914, an increase of 41,575,800 pounds over that consumed in 1913. That amount, announced today by the Geological Survey, would mean a per capita consumption of almost 100 pounds for the year. Sugar's per capita consumption during 1914 was 89.14 pounds.

AMBITIOUS PEPPERTOWN.

This is an era of municipal aspirations. In every city there is the disquiet that is born of the desire to have the multitude of conveniences and luxuries of metropolitan life. And it is not alone in the larger communities that civic ambition dwells. For instance, a "Pro Bono Publico" correspondent of our contemporary, the Harrison News, writes of the needs of Peppertown, Ind. As they are few in number, although undoubtedly important, we quote in full:

1. Christian church.
2. Concrete sidewalks.
3. Town hall.
4. Jail.
5. A good marshal and a good mayor.
6. A fire department. As there is no river close, will have to use chemicals.
7. To build up the town and to make it a success, will have to have a railway run through the town and a good depot.
8. And several other things the town needs is a store, flour mill, postoffice, and best of all, an electric light plant.

I think Peppertown is getting ahead of New Trenton, for Peppertown has no saloons or fishing camps. Our town is dry, and we hope it will always stay dry. There is only one or two drunkards in our town. Another thing our town needs is a telephone exchange.

Having pondered the needs of the Indiana municipality we are constrained to ask, "What would become of Peppertown if that house should burn down?" And would it be depopulation if those "one or two drunkards" should shake the paving of Peppertown from their feet?—Times-Star, July 30, 1915.

The Journeymen Tailors' Union is back in good standing with the American Federation of Labor, therefore our members can, as formerly, insist on getting the union label on their made-to-measure garments.

Speaking of union labels, reminds us of the fact that our members can secure the United Garment Workers' label on their working uniforms. Our experience is that labeled goods are better wearing and more serviceable than any other.

PLAIN AMERICANISM.

That Woodrow Wilson can talk plainly when he wants to be understood was shown by those parts of his speech intended for the people of the United States. It is like one clear, ringing blow of a hammer to hear the last sentence in this extract:

"There are groups of selfish men in the United States, there are coteries, where sinister things are proposed, but the great heart of the American people is just as sound and true as it ever was. And it is a single heart; it is the heart of America. It is not a heart made up of sections selected out of other countries."

This is true Americanism, refreshing and glorifying whenever manifested. It is the spirit and the principle a President is chosen to embody. Under this ensign, our President takes his rightful position as our national spokesman when he says: "I am not saying that I am worthy to represent you, but I do claim this degree of worthiness, that before everything else, I love America."—Brooklyn Standard-Union.

DID YOU NOTICE IT?

The August number of the MIXER AND SERVER was one James-Dandy, rip-snorting, satisfying publication from the standpoint of contributors from our local unions. Time was when the position of "correspondent" was looked upon by the members as an empty honor, but our unions are getting "Solomonized" to facts and one of those facts is, that the array of clever, descriptive contributors continues to grow larger each month. Just look over that August number again—begin with President John Cumming's article and go right through to that old veteran of Local 175, Frank Brown, of Buffalo, and if you do not agree with us in our conclusions—that few labor publications can match our boys and girls as clean, classy and interesting writers—you are terribly hard to please. Now that you have this number in hand, turn over to the contributions from local unions and peruse what your local union "correspondent" has to offer.

Brother Frank N. Fillian, of Local 609, Great Falls, Montana, paid us a pleasant, but brief visit a few days before closing forms for this number of the MIXER AND SERVER. Brother Fillian informed us that every member of his local, as well as the members of Local 101, are on the firing line and propose to remain busily engaged in that position until the last ballot is cast in the coming election. The Drys are putting forth great efforts to add Montana to Arizona, Colorado, Oregon and Washington as DRY States, but they will have a bigger task than they imagine, for Montana has ever been a liberal State and the citizens are determined to keep it so.

Brother Fillian is visiting friends and relatives in Ohio and will make a tour of eastern cities before returning to Great Falls in ample time to help in the wind-up before the election.

AIN'T IT THE TRUTH.

We never blame the tailor when our pants we have to pin;
We never blame the shoeman when our shoes grow old and thin;
We never blame the hatter when our lids we have to flout,
But we always blame the laundry when our shirts wear out.

—Luke McLuke, Cincinnati Enquirer.

The laundryman is much abused, he'll tell you so himself.
It hurts him to have people think he's merely out for pelf.
But when your shirt comes back all frayed and specked with oil and dirt,
He never blames his old machine, but always blames the shirt.

—Springfield (Mass.) Union.

JITNEY OPERATORS ORGANIZE.

San Francisco (Cal.) Jitney Bus Operators' Union, recently organized in that city, should be one of the strongest of local unions if the "Jit Operators" take the matter as seriously as they should and get together. In some cities the Jitney has made but little headway, but in San Francisco it seems to have come into its own, and in fact renders swift and capable service which has popularized that branch of the transportation service of the city. A view of Market street from early morn until the rush hours are over is a sight which one does not forget quickly; the wonder is that so few accidents occur, and that known fact prompts the conclusion that the "Jit Operators" are in a class by themselves, careful and reliable.

Brother Jerry Deems, of Fort Worth, Texas, president of Local 206 ever since that union became a real factor on the labor movement of the Lone Star State, dropped off at Cincinnati and found his way to headquarters, where he made himself at home and participated in a good old-fashioned "shop talk," the editor being the other half of the conversationing. Brother Deems brought loads of good wishes from the members of Local 206 and we are asking him to respond for us on his return. Jerry is making an eastern vacation tour, renewing old acquaintances and making new friends; after touring back east he will return to his old stamping ground, where we are sure the members of Local 206 will greet him with open arms.

Local 206, according to Brother Deems, is showing greater activity than ever, for the members realize that it is necessary to be eternally on the job and be prepared to overcome any new moves of the "Prohibs" who haven't given up the idea that they can land Texas in the DRY columns. Brother Deems says a good word for the new culinary union of Fort Worth and believes that they are going to try and make a winner this time.

CENSUS AND OTHER FIGURES ON BLINDNESS.

In a recent press dispatch from Washington, D. C., there appeared a statement to the effect that there were 57,000 blind persons in the United States. Assuming that such is the case, it may not have occurred to the Director of the Census that his investigators overlooked several hundred thousands who might just as well be minus the use of their eyes for all the good they get out of them.

Without much effort and without reaching beyond the catering industry of the United States, we can add to that 57,000 several hundred thousands bartenders, cooks, waiters and waitresses who are not only blind, but can not be made to appreciate the pertinent fact of their disability. For the sake of making this point evident, let us size up the city of Chicago, where we have stationed several of our International organizers for the sole purpose of "removing the blinders" from the eyes of the catering industry employees of that city and to induce them to SEE things as they should be able to SEE them. The Chicago Anti-Saloonists, under several different titles, are moving heaven, and the other place, too, in an endeavor to close the "work shops" of 6,000 bartenders. These drys also have an EYE, not affected with impediment of any kind, which is trying to SEE how many of the eight or more thousand male and female cooks, and about a similar number of male and female waiters, they can separate from good paying jobs, which are now a reality under liberal license laws, but which will become but a memory under the SEEING EYES of the so-called Church in Action aggregation. Will these workers SEE in time to prevent the deluge being prepared for them? We wonder.

WISHING IT INTO EXISTENCE.

Ever since the Anti-Saloon League established its general printing plant at Westerville, O., Editor-in-Chief Cherrington has had and, seemingly, taken advantage of his bucolic surroundings to conduct a series of dream experiments, some of which did not exactly develop into "world beaters," nor, for that matter, did they produce any effect, except, probably, indignation among a certain class of citizen voters of America. At the recent powwow of the Anti-Saloon League forces at Atlantic City, N. J., there was advertised to meet what was called the Catholic Prohibition League. But in spite of a careful and vigorous search by interested parties, there was no such organization meeting at Atlantic City during the week which the Anti-Saloon League occupied a small portion of the Million Dollar pier. It is true that a few men who lay claim to being of the Catholic faith, and who are on the payroll of the Anti-Saloon League, met the newspaper men and handed out the usual bunch of hot air about the immense crowd of delegates in attendance, but facts are facts, and can not be made to serve the Antis at this time. The great big convention dwindled down to an ordinary aggregation, unable to fill comfortably one of the halls on the pier; that is to say, that the combined forces of the Anti-Saloon League delegates—principally employees of that organization—and the so-called Catholic Prohibition League, were scarcely able to fill one of the auditoriums on the pier. Whoever heard of the Catholic Prohibition League before Editor-in-Chief Ernest Cherrington took over the habit of dreaming in a cross-road Ohio town. Cherrington may be forced to conclude that wishing things into existence don't always pan out, for that little bit of politics—trying to impress the country that the Catholic Church was working with the Anti-Saloon League—may prove quite an obstacle before the summer flowers begin to fade.

LABOR TEMPLE ASSOCIATION GOES ON WATER WAGON FOR ITS FIELD DAY.

"The Labor Temple Association, of which Peter J. Hemmerling, president of the common council, is president, has voted to abolish the intoxicating drink concession at its annual field day at Brandywine Park this year. The labor organization has taken the view it should not sanction the sale of intoxicants in the face of the present nation-wide temperance movement. Instead of the customary cases of beers, only soft drinks will be displayed this Labor Day as a result.

"The big field day is to be held September 6. It will probably attract greater interest because of the stand taken on the liquor question. In announcing the innovation, the labor men say it is an experiment, which they believe worthy of a test.

"James McConville, former member of a city board, is chairman of the committee on arrangements. Dancing, a big program of sports and new features will be introduced to interest the patrons."

The above article appeared in the Schenectady (N. Y.) Gazette of June 15, 1915, and is fully up to any article which we have observed printed in the American Issue, the official mouthpiece of the Anti-Saloon League. In fact, we seriously doubt whether Ernest Cherrington, the editor-in-chief of the Anti-Saloon League publications, could have done any better with the material in hand.

One naturally wonders where the members of the Brewery Workers, Cigar Makers, Coopers, Glass Bottle Blowers, Lithographers, Machinists, Metal Polishers, Musicians, Painters, Paper-hangers, Decorators, Printers, Pressmen, Plumbers, Steam Fitters, Teamsters, Tobacco Workers, Engineers, Firemen, and a host of other trades, not excepting the Cooks, Waiters and Bartenders, were; or where they fit in in such a campaign. Possibly the promoters of that outing and prohibition publicity campaign regard themselves as trades unionists, and yet they are aiding in throwing on the unemployed list hundreds of thousands of as good trades unionists as ever carried a paid-up membership book or card.

Some years ago the Central Labor Union of Schenectady selected a member of Local 320—a bartender—as their Labor Day marshal, and forthwith there was spewed on the defenseless public the utterances of pinheaded objectors, who never had paid a month's dues to any union, yet had the audacity to set themselves up as censors of what labor organizations chose to do in arranging for their festival.

Possibly the Labor Temple Association holds views contrary to what the above news item indicates. If, however, it is a dry proposal, then the unions who would be affected by prohibition should see to it that its title does not remain unchanged.

CONCLUSIVE EVIDENCE.

"Is your new minister an especially intellectual man?"

"Very; he's been tried twice for heresy and thinks the saloon is a necessity."—Puck.

THE BEVERAGE TRADES FORM STATE LEAGUE.

The "Allied League of Beverage Trades" was formed at Rock Springs, Wyo., this week by delegates from the Bartenders, Cooks and Waiters and Brewery Workers' locals. The rapid inroads being made in the employment of these crafts by prohibition sentiment has occasioned this league for defensive and educational purposes as the preamble states.

The officers are: Joseph Flanery, of Casper, president; Clyde Mackney, of Cheyenne, secretary. Executive Board: M. C. Aley, of Sheridan; W. C. Dunning, of Sheridan; Joe Motto, of Kemmerer; C. H. Noblitt, of Rock Springs; Joe Davidson, of Laramie; E. F. Duffy, of Cheyenne; Thomas Browne, of Casper; Tim Sheridan, of Sheridan.

The purpose of the league is to carry on an educational propaganda in the furtherance of the interests of its affiliated locals. One of the steps of the immediate future will be an attempt to thoroughly organize all businesses that come under its circles. Hotels, bars and restaurants will all be urged to give employment to union men, and thus help to win their own cause.

It is admitted that this organization will fill a long-felt want, and that it will tend to familiarize the public with a question of which it has only heard one side. The headquarters of the league will be in Cheyenne, Wyo., where the secretary will begin his work of securing the undivided interest of the allied locals.—Wyoming Weekly Labor Journal, August 6, 1915.

CARRYING WATER ON BOTH SHOULDERS.

On the one hand the sponsor for the famous "Billy" offers his wares to hotel men and has been one of the leading competitors for their business.

On the other hand, Mr. Wanamaker entertains the "reformer" whose foul mouth has vomited vituperation against the very business men to whom the Wanamaker stores offer their merchandise.

Consistency, thou art a jewel! Is John Wanamaker consistent? He indorses "Billy" Sunday. "Billy" Sunday would ruin you and confiscate your industry. If you indorse John Wanamaker, you indorse "Billy" Sunday at the same time.

Why carry water on both shoulders?

SUNDAY TAKES FIRST REST IN WANAMAKER'S HOME IN JENKINTOWN.

Immediately following his sermon last night and a quick rubdown and change of clothing in his residence at 1914 Spring Garden street, the evangelist, accompanied by Mrs. Sunday, his son, George, with the latter's wife and baby, were motored to the country estate of John Wanamaker in Jenkintown, where they are going to remain through the day.

"Billy" had one of his most strenuous days' work, and, while he was feeling very well, he was tired and he decided to accept the invitation of Mr. Wanamaker to go far away from the noise and excitement of the city. The "trail-hitters" for the three services yesterday totaled 1,182, mostly men.—(Philadelphia Evening Ledger).

The foregoing editorial in a recent number of the New York Hotel Register and Review, challenges the admiration of every fair minded worker in the catering industry and proves conclusively that Editor Gehring proposes to carry the fight which he has been waging for the last seven months, right into the camp of the opposition. It may be difficult to calculate just how much the former Postmaster General sets aside from his daily income of the big Wanamaker stores for the purpose of supporting "Billy" Sunday and those engaged in the campaign with him, but we do know that the men and women engaged in the catering industry would have trouble to find and offer acceptable excuse for helpin' "Saintly John" by bringing their contributions to him via purchases made at his stores.

The Anti-Saloonists, no matter under what name they may parade, are trying to injure the catering industry; in fact endeavoring to wipe it off the industrial map, and the men and women employed at that industry are just plain foolish to aid any such persons or firms, even to the extent of purchasing a penny's worth from them.

Patronize those who patronize you, or still better, make sure that your money is spent with concerns friendly to the industry which gives you your pay envelope weekly, fortnightly or monthly.

Neither Kansas or Maine, both prohibition States, have any use for the men and women of our allied crafts. There is not now, nor has there been for years, a live local union of our organization in either State—and what is probably more to the point, it is difficult to secure attention from the catering industry employees of those two commonwealths—the real reason being that skilled catering employees neither go to or remain in Kansas or Maine. Occasionally one or two are discovered, but when approached they invariably say: "I am going to get out as soon as I get railroad fare."

THE FULFILLMENT OF A PROPHECY.

As the members of our International Union know, the American Federation of Labor has elected and sent to England annually, two Fraternal Delegates to the British Trade Union Congress, and the Congress reciprocated by electing and sending to the conventions of the American Federation of Labor two Fraternal Delegates. The exchange of delegates began in the year 1895, and continued without interruption until the war in Europe prevented further exchange. The American Federation of Labor became affiliated with what was known as the International Secretariat, later the title was changed to International Federation of Trade Unions. At the meeting of that organization in Zurich, Switzerland, September, 1913, George W. Perkins, president of the Cigarmakers' International Union, was the delegate from the American Federation of Labor; the following countries were represented: England, France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Germany, Austria, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Hungary, Croatia, Switzerland, Italy, Spain and the United States.

Delegate Perkins submitted his report to the convention of the American Federation of Labor, held at Seattle, Wash., in November, 1913. Among other interesting and instructive information offered in his report, he said:

"Personally I am of the opinion that standing armies of continental Europe are maintained not so much for the purpose of repelling foreign invasion, but rather to hold in subjection the workers and to repel any uprising or revolution which the intolerable conditions might inspire in them. CONTINENTAL EUROPE AS IT EXISTS TODAY IS STANDING ON A VOLCANO, GLOSSED OVER WITH A THIN VENEER OF FLOWERS, SONG, MUSIC, ART, OLD BUILDINGS, AND TRADITIONS. REMOVE THESE, AND THERE MIGHT BE AN ERUPTION THAT WOULD SHAKE THE CIVILIZED WORLD TO ITS VERY FOUNDATIONS. Where will it end?"

The veneer was thinner than Brother Perkins imagined, and the volcano has been in uninterrupted eruption for over a year. In the language of Brother Perkins, "Where will it end?"

WAGE-EARNERS IN "DRY" (?) KANSAS.

Prohibitionists tear their hair and rend the air with statements in effect that, where there are no legalized saloons, the workers are benefited and enjoy prosperity such as the workers of licensed States and Provinces can not hope to participate similarly. Kansas, as every reader knows, has been pushed forward as the one great shining example of industrial tranquility and success.

Writing in the Topeka (Kan.) Daily Capital, Clyde O. Tessner punctures the tranquility-success-progress-amity picture in the following manner:

"How is this for prosperous Kansas? Statistics show that in the canning and preserving industry in this State (Kansas) 77.47 per cent of the employees receive less than $10 per week; 15.48 per cent receive less than $6 per week, and of those who receive less than $10 per week 62 per cent are men and 38 per cent are women and children. Their working time averages but little less than ten hours per day."

GET AN EARLY START.

The Eighteenth General Convention of our International Union was made up of delegates elected from 124 local unions; when the convention was in session there were attached to and in good standing in our International Union FIVE HUNDRED AND NINETY-SIX LOCALS. That means that there were FOUR HUNDRED AND SEVENTY-TWO LOCALS which either did not show interest enough to send delegates, or were so poor that they were unable to do so. To conclude that the latter is or was the case would be to admit that there are locals holding charter from our International which uselessly waste their income for purposes other than the advancement of their membership. The seat of the Nineteenth General Convention, St. Louis, Mo., is situated in the heart of American population or nearly so, that but few miles intervene. There is no excuse which will be acceptable, that unions have not been advised in time. The Nineteenth General Convention convenes on Monday, June 11, 1917, therefore yourself and members have twenty-two months in which to lay aside enough of your local's income to provide for paying the expenses of representation. Make a memorandum to read, Monday, June 11, 1917, Convention, St. Louis, Mo., U. S. A., and add thereto, My Local will BE REPRESENTED.

WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH GEORGIA?

Almost a quarter of the lynchings in the United States during 1914 occurred in Georgia, eight of thirty-four. And in addition Georgia has had to bear the blot of the Frank case, in which it was said that she was saved from the charge of a judicial lynching only because of the courageous act of her governor.

This record is not in consonance with the Georgia of history. One of the thirteen original States, she has contributed able men to the nation from the beginning of our national existence. She possesses one of the most attractive and probably the most energetic of Southern cities. And Georgia has a culture capable of such fine flowers as Joel Chandler Harris and Henry W. Grady.

So there should be nothing the matter with Georgia? But is there?—(Editorial in Cincinnati Times-Star, August 3, 1915.)

The editor of the Cincinnati Times-Star knows only too well what is the matter with Georgia, in fact, what is the matter with any and all DRY States. The legislature of Georgia listened to the seductive voice of the industry wreckers of America, the Anti-Saloon League, and on the 8th of August, 1907, they passed a measure which made that State DRY beginning January 1, 1908, practically confiscating millions of investments without so much as giving that money or its owners a chance to get from under. The same disease is eating that State which has made the State of Maine a commonwealth joke, and which affliction the Antis are trying to inoculate Ohio and every live State in the Union with. The forces of unrest and confiscation made Georgia occupy a position such as is briefly referred to in the editorial; they are still actively engaged in their campaign, and they will continue in their efforts just so long as the fanatical easy-marks, who occupy pews at church on the Sabbath and squeeze the pennies out of labor during the other six days of the week, produce the wherewith to carry on the vicious work.

At that Georgia has a fighting chance; legislative enactments can be remedied, and we predict that when the live voters of that State wake up their sleeping brethren, they will get back where they belong and make impossible such frightful record as shown during the last twelve months.

Since the above was prepared Leo Frank was taken from jail by a mob and lynched. Georgia is still dry.

"HAM AND" OTHER THINGS.

We do not wish to be understood as being hypercritical—or trying to belittle our fellow craftsmen of foreign birth, and education, for we realize that the apprenticeship system, in vogue, in older countries is more apt to produce a better master of his art, trade or profession in any occupation as well as in the culinary line, rather than the short, quick—sometimes good old U. S. A. way of starting as Fry Cook and jumping around like a parched pea in a hot skillet from one job to another and getting a chef position without ever having been, on speaking terms, with a Roux "Except Chicago" or an Espagnole. "The exceptional" boy will evolve into a good cook, under any system, and the mutt will never become an Artist in any line. Some of our best—perhaps, started in as pan-washers, only a few years ago, and believe me, that is the only way, to come up from station to station and when you take the head job, know the fundamentals of all.

Give credit to whom due—"Old England" for Roast Beef—Boston for "Baked Beans"—France for Soups, "Italy for Sauces," Germany and Switzerland for Entrees. But each cook should use the style of work and change his method to suit the taste of the community that he caters to.

Who can improve on the "Corn Bread or Fried Chicken of our Sunny South," the Sunday morning breakfast of New England, "Pork and Beans and Brown Bread," the New England boiled dinner that was due every Thursday, and the Fish Cakes, and Chowders that were almost a religious rite on Fridays.

What epicure would wish for a better breakfast than "Ham and" in the Country. With perhaps the Ham par-boiled in milk before it hits the pan and a cream gravy brought up from the milk, and served on the same platter, Eggs Chipolata or any other "A LA" would be in the discard in comparison.—The Northwestern Culinary Art Journal.

Did you secure that "one" application last month? Don't give up trying, you can win. You know you can.

PROHIBITION ITEMS.

A four-headed rabbit with green eyes whipped a hunter and killed two dogs in West Virginia.

A red, white and blue coyote walked into a Kansas drug store and bit the bartender on the leg.

A purple snolligoster with long, pink hair wandered into a Maine lumber camp and ate the cook.

A scarlet giraffe, with cerise wings, chased an Arkansas man and stole a pint of wood alcohol from him.

An Alabama man reports a desperate battle between a ninety-foot boa constrictor with three tails and an orange and green-striped sea lion with sixteen legs.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A CHEERING MESSAGE FROM A TRIO OF LABOR VETS.

Even when the thermometer exerts itself and tries to reach the highest point indicating sultry weather, it is good to know that we are remembered by our friends and that they are enjoying some of the good things of life. A few weeks ago we received a postal card postmarked San Francisco, Cal., and the following written thereon: "This State is not DRY—yet." (Signed) E. E. Greenawalt, Grant Hamilton and H. J. Skeffington.

Need we add that the message proved that the signers appreciated how good it is to partake of the "cup that clears." The three signers of that postal card are well-known labor veterans, many and many are the battles for the rights of the workers which they were enlisted in, and though getting along in years they are still in harness. Their postal and their greeting reminds us of a passage from the "Sprig of Laurel," by John O'Keefe, which runs about as follows:

"A glass is good, and a lass is good,
And a pipe to smoke in cold weather;
The world is good, and the people are good,
And we're all good fellows together."

We are gratified to hear that California is not DRY—yet; in fact, we believe that there is too much genuine Americanism in that State to ever fall for the bait offered by the destroyers of liberalism; and we further believe that the army of unemployed which has invaded California from the States voted dry last fall is sufficiently convincing to the voters of the Golden State that they made no mistake when they rejected Prohibition. California is now and has been for many years a live commonwealth, it is therefore not at all surprising that three such good fellows as sent us that postal card should select that part of the country to get together and feast of the goods things which abound in such generous profusion.

HERE YOU ARE, GIRLS.

Occasionally some of our girls seek an authority on "calling" on their lady friends and acquaintances and are of course anxious to follow the rules as laid down by the arbiters of social etiquette. The rules as recorded on "Calling Cards" reads:

While the customs pertaining to cards and calling are much simpler at present than they were several years ago, still there are certain definite rules that should be observed.

The calling card should always be engraved. From time to time styles as to size, shape and type change, and it is safest to go to a reliable stationer and follow his suggestion if there is any doubt.

The joint husband and wife card is no longer used except to accompany Christmas gifts.

The card of a married woman is often a bit larger than that of an unmarried woman.

The social card of a professional woman should never indicate her vocation, but her business card must be specific in this matter.

School girls can use cards among themselves, but these cards should bear the name only, with no prefix.

SOMETHING WHICH WE CAN DO.

Members who keep in touch with legislative matters, especially such as receive attention from the law makers down at Washington, D. C., will recall that a Child Labor Bill was passed by the last House of Representatives by a vote of 233 to 43, and might have passed the Senate also during the closing hours of the session if a Senator from North Carolina has not objected.

The bill will be introduced again early in the first session of the Sixty-fourth Congress, and it will go through PROVIDED the workers of the country will get busy and write their Senators and Congressmen and urge them to pass the measure at the earliest opportunity.

Our members can help develop public opinion. They have many opportunities of doing so not granted to the average working man or working woman, and they should make the most of such opportunities.

Don't wait until Congress convenes; write your law makers now, for the greater the demand for such legislation before Congress meets the more likely are the law makers to appreciate that the men and women who toil are determined to erase the awful blot of child murder—another name for child labor—from the industries of the land.

Your law makers seek your vote to send them to Washington. They will adopt this measure if you tell them that you and your fellow workmen and women want it; if you refrain from writing them they may take advantage and hide behind the excuse that their constituents have made no demand for such legislation.

Write now; write as an organization; write as individual voters and let the law makers whom you helped to elect know what you want.

Our allied crafts have been accused of being indifferent to anything but what concerns them as workers. Here is a good chance to prove that our men and women are quite as sincere and capable of thought for others. Reading the foregoing suggestions and postponing action until later on may strike you as being wise, but don't do that. Make up your mind to write a few lines and make good, and do it.

If you have any doubt as to what a few lines can convey, get the following on paper: Mr. Senator or Congressman, as a voter of the First Congressional District I hereby request your hearty co-operation in favor of a Child Labor measure which will save the boys and girls from the mills and mines and fill the school rooms, where they may have a chance of getting an education which will make them valuable citizens of the country. Something of that kind; to the point, and clear enough to make your wishes known. Wouldn't you give up a five-cent piece to help some poor kid to enjoy real childhood? Well, that's about all that it will cost you.

NATURE STUDIES.

"I see in this little book," said Charles McKee, business agent of Local 815, Salt Lake City, to one of the boys of that local at their offices one morning recently, "that a lion can jump from twenty-five to thirty feet from a standing start while in its native habitat, the jungle."

"But that's nothing in comparison to some of the 'tourists' who dropped into this town during the summer and discovered that there was nothing doing without a card. Some of them jumped clean back to Indianapolis from this good old town. And, take it from me, that is some jump. Which no lion, either in the jungle or out, would even attempt."

THE LINCOLN HIGHWAY "WATER-WAGON" TOUR.

Starting at Mount Vernon, N. Y., on July 4, 1915, putting in the two meetings, one of which was held in Brooklyn, N. Y., the Anti-Saloon League began a novel tour, or rather under its auspices such a tour was begun, and no doubt by this time is well on its way across the continent. According to the itinerary the aggregation included twelve stops in the State of Pennsylvania, fourteen stops in the State of Ohio; five stops in the State of Indiana, four stops in the State of Illinois, ten in the State of Iowa, thirteen stops in the State of Nebraska, seven stops in the State of Wyoming, one stop in the State of Colorado, five stops in the State of Utah, eleven stops in the State of Nevada, and six stops in the State of California, San Francisco being one of the principal prizes. According to the program the water-wagonites reach that city September 5 and will hold meetings until September 12th. The "Rail Splitter" Quartet and Howard H. Russell, D. D., LL. D., founder of the Anti-Saloon League and Lincoln-Lee Legion, aided by talent, and they have an enormous supply of such both on and off the pay-roll, will join in to make these meetings successful. Their purpose is to endeavor to secure one million signers to their so-called Abstinence Pledge.

This is a new wrinkle, and whoever originated it is entitled to considerable credit, for the pledges will be as fine a card system of addresses of adherents to what the Anti-Saloon stands for as can be procured. There is little doubt but what the million pledges will be obtained and afterwards a little of that persuasion which the Anti-Saloon League will no doubt use to extract dimes and dollars from the signers. Just for the sake of a little diversion, suppose you take your pencil and calculate what the amount would be if each of the million pledge signers remitted ten cents quarterly to the Anti-Saloon League. Some "small change" you say—agreed to—but figure it out and know.

A SECRET SHRINE.

There stands on a far peak that towers high
The temple of my soul, a secret shrine
That I have raised until it reaches sky,
Upon its altar lighted flame divine.

Borne high above the world on hallowed wing
I built my temple with a magic might;
I filled it with the songs the angels sing,
Then closed its portals on a mystic night.

My temple stands aloft, so fine, so pure,
That never may I hope to come again
To its high altar—tortured, must endure
A vision splendid I may not attain.

Here I must stand remote and raise my eyes
To that far shrine that never may be won!
My temple, that I built against the skies—
I see it shining splendid in the sun!

—New York Times.

WHEN THE SHOE PINCHES.

There are members of our International Union who profess to believe that they are immune from the effects of Prohibition and sumptuary legislation because, as they put it, they work in houses which vend no intoxicating beverages and consequently cannot by any stretch of the imagination be affected by the operation of DRY LAWS.

El Paso, Texas, is "some jump," as Ole Oleson would say, from Phoenix and other points in the State of Arizona, and owing to the cost of transportation it takes a few simoleons to travel on the cushions—and that is about the only way one can travel in that part of the country—for hitting the side door and fighting cinders is almost a lost art, at least that is the conclusion reached by certain "tourists" who have acquired the reputation of knowing what is what when it comes to getting over territory with nothing but nerve and a smile. More than likely the boys of Local 848 expected some visitors from the State of Arizona, but they hardly believed there would be so many. The object in printing the following item is not to say "I told you so" to the boys of Local 848, but to show to some of our members elsewhere that Prohibition does affect ALL of our crafts. Under local items of news from unions in the El Paso City and County Advocate under date of July 16, 1915, we clip the following:

"Business Agent R. A. Gooding secured the contract for supplying a party across the river with seventeen waiters last Monday night, and this proved a great help to the boys who have been idle. Under ordinary circumstances there is generally a shortage of cooks and waiters in El Paso at this time of the year, but this union has been hit by the same trouble that the bartenders are encountering this year. Many of the idle bartenders who have been driven out of Arizona by the lately adopted prohibition law, have had previous experience in the culinary branch of their allied crafts, and these are looking for work in the restaurants, because the bartenders cannot take care of them. The cooks and waiters are glad to do all they can for these boys, but the problem has proven more than they could handle lately."

WHY HUSBANDS LEAVE HOME.

Why do so many husbands run away? A Chicago statistician, connected with the Bureau of Public Welfare in that city has been trying to answer the question.

After investigating thousands of cases of desertion he finds that the husband's action can usually be ascribed to one of the following four causes:

Ill health and peevishness of the wife.

Slouchiness of the wife either in her own person or in her housekeeping, or both.

The wife's habit of nagging or gossiping.

Dislike for children on the wife's part.

This statistician found that the strongest incentive to reconciliation in cases of family discord is almost invariably the child. He also found that very few wives are deserted who are:

Physically big and mentally cheerful.

Able to contribute to the family income either by outside labor or by frugality in home management.

Affectionate and home-loving.

Sympathetic and considerate of their husbands.

The very interesting and valuable statistics which he collected prove that native American husbands are more prone to desert their wives than are the foreign-born.

They also show that married life is the happiest when husband and wife are nearest alike in age, nationality, religion, moral standards, temperament, health and physical strength.—New York American.

GUM SHOE SKUNK TRAPPED BY CARMEN.

That is the heading for a full page article in the Tri-City Labor Review of Oakland, Cal., August 13, 1915, and the story offered is one which every member of our labor unions in that section of California should absorb and remember. Carmen's Union Division 192 is to be congratulated in "smoking out the skunk," an excellent name by the way, for "Operatives" in the employ of Labor Union Wrecking and Spying Agencies. The "Skunk" bore the name of Henry Gattel and carried another which was very suggestive—"Pinkey"—due it is said to his ruddy, sandy complexion. "Pinkey" has worked as motorman and conductor on street cars in the cities of New York, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans and Los Angeles.

Henry Gattel, alias "Pinkey," correct name is presumed to be Schumacher.

Description—Weight 180 pounds, height 5 feet 9 inches, age 32 years, stands very straight and erect, light complexion, curly red hair, brown eyes. Has large gold tooth right side upper front jaw. Also deep scar on forehead, caused by mercury treatment. Left Germany when 18 years old; is fairly well educated, but speaks with German accent.

Our members who are employed in the vicinity of car barns and where street car men congregate, would do well to keep the foregoing description in their mind; it may be possible to keep "Pinkey" moving along.

CORRESPONDENCE

This Journal will not be Held Responsible for Views Expressed by Correspondents.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I wrote you a letter on behalf of this local (593) last month, but since it reached you too late to be published in the August issue of the MIXER AND SERVER I will ask you to discard it and substitute the following in the September issue:

As members of our great, big International Union have not read of the excellent progress of Local 593, I will endeavor to outline the advancement that has been and is being made in the membership of our local, and I believe that it is the right sort of progress to report—at least I have always been taught that in numbers there is strength.

Since January 1, 1915, Local 593 has taken in 59 new members, reinstated 24, and received 21 by traveling card. In the month of July there were 13 initiations, and up to the present date (August 25) we have taken in 23 new members. And so we all believe that we can feel proud of the advancement that we are making and with the push that is behind the local at the present time there is certain to be even greater progress to report later.

We are in the midst of one of those disagreeable county option campaigns, but this is one fight where the fanatics are on the defensive, although they are trying their utmost to reverse the order. Labor has lined up solid against the opposers of personal liberty and within a harmonious co-operation of the liquor interests we expect to sweep a clean cut victory into the community of a liberty loving labor controlled county and city; in fact, we expect this fight to decide the strength of organized labor in the city of Minneapolis, and I want to assure the members of our International Union that if we win in this fight it will be an assurance that the waiters and waitresses of Local 593 will have a firm foundation to build our organization up and I am quite sure that we will not overlook the opportunity to get real busy right after the election in October.

We have the services of Organizers Joyce and Anderson, who are here to help win the county option fight, and I want to say to their credit that they are not overlooking any opportunities to do Local 593 a good turn. Already they have been in a measure responsible for a great deal of good work in our local affairs and have succeeded with the co-operation of others in lining up one more union house. They are with us heart and soul and I want to say for the members of Local 593 that they are mighty welcome and their every effort in our behalf will be likewise appreciated.

The trade unions of Minneapolis, through the Minnesota Trade Union League, which is an organization for the prevention of unemployment, are not losing any opportunities to interest themselves in the county option fight and we will be able to report their activities at a later date.

Local 593 recognizes the fact that this is a very good time to organize the large hotels of the city and we are centering our efforts in that direction at present and hope to be able to report some substantial progress in the near future.

Our delegates to the State Convention of Labor were able to report the biggest and best ever, and some very important matters were judiciously handled by that body. They were especially favorable to the women workers as they provided for a woman organizer and elected a woman vice-president to the executive board.

At this late date it is hardly necessary to mention the big convention of our own International Union, but will say that our members were well pleased with the proceedings and satisfied with the expenditure of the local in sending a delegate to represent Local 593.

It is my sad duty at this time to report that Sister Louise Parks-Riordan, one of our most esteemed members, is still on the sick list and has been so for some months past. It is impossible to measure the amount of regret and sympathy which the members of Local 593 extend to Sister Riordan.

There being no further business, we will adjourn with the usual greeting and best wishes to all members of our International.

Fraternally yours,

H. WADE MILLER,
Press Secretary, Local 593.

BALTIMORE, MD.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Some more news from Local 532: The entire Boosters' Committee have something up their sleeve—must be important, as they use the utmost secrecy about their routine of business. All the members can get out of them is "wait and see." We all hope it is some surprise.

Business here is at a complete standstill (mid-season).

Local 532 sent a beautiful bouquet to our late Brother Hittenack, who was employed at Roche's cafe, N. Lafayette near Howard streets.

Brother Chenoweth has gone on a two weeks' vacation. Brother Baseman will be married in the fall. President Flannagan is still the official umps in the Catholic League. Watch us grow!

Fraternally yours,

BERNARD STERN,
Press Secretary, Local 532.

VANCOUVER, B. C.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—A few days ago Business Agent Graham of Local 28, and the writer, paid an educational visit to the waiters employed in a certain well-known non-union hotel in this city. In the course of the interview, which was more or less harmonious, we endeavored, with the best argumentative ability at our command, to convince the boys that membership in our organization was a duty they owed both to themselves and to their fellow craftsmen. Several of the boys were sufficiently interested in the betterment of their economic status in the industrial struggle and we secured their applications. One or two were non-committal for the moment and required a little more time for consideration, etc., while two came out flat-footed and declined to entertain the proposition at all—not, mind you, because they had any particular objection to trades unionism in general or to our union in particular, but simply because they considered that membership in a culinary local would compel them to associate with waiters of an inferior type (they had the "coffee and" specialist in mind I presume), and that that association would result in a consequent lowering of their dignity. And they dwelt upon and embellished, and emphasized that "dignity" plea to an extent that would have been hilarious had it not been for the fact that the occasion to us was a matter of sober, serious business. Ye gods! can you imagine any apparently intelligent, presumably sane, red-blooded white man advancing dignity, or the fear of losing it, as a reason for refusing to become a member in the union of his craft. And the pitiful feature of a pathetic incident is the fact that these human bivalves work for wages which would not support a canary, at least not a very fast living canary. Indeed, were it not for the fact that their miserable earnings are occasionally augmented by the donations of a charitably inclined public, which they receive in the shape of tips, these dignified aristocrats of the dining room could not exist; yet when someone comes along and shows them the way a real waiter secures a man's wages, the poor boobs tremble for their "dignity." If I had a million dollars I would cheerfully bet that sum of money to a worn-out hay-seed that if you took an army of these spineless, crawfish-ing, vacuum-headed clods and thoroughly combed them with a fine tooth comb, you could not extract as much dignity from the bunch as the most inferior of our union waiters display through the mere circumstance of carrying a paid-up membership book.

With a fine assumption of pensive local pride, one of the Vancouver newspapers said the other day: "The new central recruiting depot on the old courthouse site has been in existence just twenty days and in that short space of time it has established the fine record of six hundred men enlisted for active service" (the italics are mine). Think of it! Six hundred men in twenty days, and ninety per cent of them single and eating in cafes, then conjure up in your mind what that means to the restaurant business of this city in the present chaotic condition of the industry. It would not be so bad if that newspaper item represented all the patronage our local restaurants have or will lose since war was declared, but when you take into consideration the fact that recruiting, more or less actively, has been going on for exactly twelve months in this city and is continually increasing rather than diminishing, the acute seriousness of the situation, insofar as Local 28 is concerned, will be apparent. During the early months of the war the only recruiting depots we had were those established at the various local militia headquarters; now, however, the authorities have set up recruiting stations all over the down-town district so that the would-be disciple of Mars need not have so far to walk in order to accomplish his grim desire to enact his little role in the inhuman carnival of butchery, which is being staged over in "yurrap" and where thousands of his kind are straining every effort to exterminate other thousands of their fellow-creatures. It is to shutter; there is no use disguising the unpleasant fact, as unpleasant as it is apparent, that we, as an organization, and, indeed, as individuals, are facing a terribly serious situation, more so than most of us care to contemplate—so serious in fact, that one does not require to be the seventh son of a seventh son to foretell the outcome, nor can any of us be accused of exhibiting any undue haste should our suitcases require nothing but a toothbrush and a comb to be ready for the road.

"Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia next!" Ever since the prohibition party in Alberta, our provincial next-door neighbor, won their sweeping victory at the late election, a victory which places Alberta in the dry column on and after January 1, 1916, the foregoing announcement, printed in heavy black type and displayed between paragraphs of pure reading matter in the columns of the daily press of this city, is an eloquent reminder to the liquor interests, employer and employee alike, that their day of reckoning is at hand. I say "day of reckoning" advisedly because if ever a business courted disaster and annihilation, absolute and complete, it is the liquor trade of British Columbia. If the prohibition movement were a local innovation or confined to British Columbia, it might be possible to discern some reason for the laxity and unpreparedness of the men who manufacture and sell the cup that cheers and sometimes inebriates, but with the amazing record of sumptuary liquor legislation enacted in the neighboring provinces of Canada ever before them and possessed of a full knowledge of the undeniable success which has so far crowned the efforts of the anti-saloon people across the line, the position taken up by those in British Columbia who are most vitally interested in a continuance of the means whereby they live and move and have their being, is something which is truly beyond all comprehension. And in all conscience they can hardly say that they have been taken unawares because for a very long time past not only the brewers and the hotel men, but their employees as well, have been warned and advised and pleaded with to protect their interests, to safeguard their bread and butter with at least a fraction of the energy and the determination which has been and is being expended by those temperance cranks and moral reform shysters who propose to revolutionize human nature by an act of parliament and a soda fountain diet. Yet every effort which has been made to arouse the men who are dependent upon this industry for their livelihood to a realization of their danger, has been met with utter indifference and the most criminal apathy. Even today, with their businesses facing absolute extinction, the hotel men of this city and province can not or will not realize that by employing voteless Orientals to the exclusion of white men who have and would exercise the franchise, they are deliberately playing into the hands of the prohibitionists, who, whatever may be said of them, either as a party or as individuals, certainly appreciate the value of a vote. No; our hotel men evidently live in the immediate present, the protection and the continuance of their business in particular and the industry in general has been sacrificed in order that a few dollars might be saved in the wages paid their Asiatic help, a saving which is really only apparent and is never justified by results. Whatever mental equipment nature provided them with has become atrophied by their senseless passion for cheap Oriental labor and their absolute disregard for the rights and liberties of their fellow men. They have pursued this pitiful penny-wise-and-pound-foolish policy so long that it has obliterated whatever instinct of self-preservation they ever had, and to them the handwriting on the wall conveys nothing and will continue to convey nothing until the day after election. Not only have they lost the support which the votes of white employees would have secured to them, but by their slavish adherence to an illogical policy they have alienated the sympathy and lost the support of the best element in the labor movement in this province and it is the working-class vote in British Columbia which will decide this question one way or the other. Whether British Columbia goes dry or remains wet, I am firmly convinced in my own mind that if the anti-prohibition party displayed anything like the energy, the determination, the methodical, business-like get-there-or-perish spirit which characterizes the efforts of the anti-saloon forces, there would be no such thing as a prohibition movement in the country. And until the liquor industry and those directly connected with it take a leaf or two from the prohibition party's book and begin to fight the enemy with the enemy's own weapon (the vote), there can only be one result, only one outcome in this struggle between progress and retrogression, and that outcome will be nation-wide prohibition.

With best wishes to yourself and the general membership, I am,

Fraternally yours,

JOHN CUMMING,
President, Local 28.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Just a few lines to inform all brothers that Milwaukee is a dead one. About two months ago, some weisenheimer by the name of Basshard, senator from the northern woodlands of Wisconsin, introduced the anti-tipping bill; altho we were ably represented, the bill passed both houses by a big majority. Nothing else could have been expected, as most of our law-makers come from small country towns and know very little of city life and working conditions, but to their sorrow, our governor, the Hon. E. Phillips, vetoed said bill. During the time this bill was pending, our boys reported a decrease in their earnings as some people who are inclined to "sluff" the waiter, took advantage of it before said bill became law. The climax came a week ago when our chief of police, who had been given authority by the governor to act in conjunction with the license committee, closed all cabaret palm gardens in the down-town district with the exception of the largest unfair house in the city—the Schlitz—all the little fellows had to go, including three union houses, which threw about twenty-five of our boys out of work. This is the rawest deal ever pulled off in our city. Many of our business and professional men have taken up the matter now and the people in general are disgusted with the actions of our city fathers. and I am sure we will have cabarets again after the next spring election when there will be a general house-cleaning at the city hall.

Now, boys, stay away from Milwaukee, she is a dead one. The people from the surrounding cities do not come here any more, therefore business has fallen off considerable.

Hoping that our city will come to life again sooner than expected, I remain, with best wishes to all locals and greetings to all ex-members of Local 59.

Yours fraternally,
A. SIBILSKY,
Business Agent and Secretary.

EL PASO, TEXAS.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Tuesday, August 17, your humble servant had the honor of being an invited guest at the first annual banquet given by Local 26 of the Liquor and Malt Dealers' Association of Texas. While this is in no sense of the word a union labor organization, it is facing at least one problem in which the working men are equally interested, and its friendship for organized labor was shown at this banquet by the invitations sent out to attend. This feature of employer and employee fraternizing on the common ground of their mutual interests is what appealed most vividly to me. If such a spirit could be developed throughout all the industries of our country, the labor problem would cease to be the foremost obstacle to our national progress. There will always be disputes arising from the points of their divergent interests, but if a mutual spirit of friendship and a proper understanding of each other's needs and wants could be fully developed between employer and employee in all industrial lines, based upon a correct appreciation of their common interest in many things, the just solution of the little contentions that must arise between them would be a comparatively easy matter.

But while this is not a union labor organization, still the influence of union labor is strongly felt in its councils. For secretary and business agent they have secured the services of the Hon. Edwin V. Brake, who served two terms as labor commissioner of the State of Colorado, and was for several years chairman of the legislative committee of the Colorado State Federation of Labor. In his opening address to the meeting, Brother Brake (he will always be a union man no matter what his vocation in life may be) spoke very impressively upon the value to both, of establishing and maintaining friendly relations and a mutual understanding between employers and employees. I picked up one valuable pointer in Brother Brake's address that we might use to advantage: He presented a tabulated statement of the tangible results accomplished by this local during the first year of its existence, with the exact cost of producing these results. The exact knowledge of just what an organization has done, and what it has cost to do it, will always prove a valuable aid in laying the plans for the future. They show a big increase in the majorities that have been returned at the local elections during the past year on the questions in which they are interested. If the prohibition campaign develops as scheduled in this State next year, we will all have good use for these increased majorities.

Victor Benedetti, chairman of their executive board, is another old union labor man who is exercising a strong influence in the management of their affairs. In the days when he had to work for a living, "Vic" carried a theatrical stage employe's card for seven years and his heart has never changed in this respect. Last, but by no means least, it should not be forgotten that our own brother, Paul Steffler, is the secretary of their State organization. All in all, one gains the impression that experience in union labor matters is a valuable training in any walk in life where organized effort is required and that organized effort is required to get results, no matter where our sphere of activities may be placed.

The serious business of the meeting was enlivened by a number of well rendered, comical songs and recitations and there was an "elegant sufficiency" of solid and liquid refreshments. Altogether we spent a very enjoyable three hours during which I felt that I had learned many things of great value to us.

Yours fraternally,

E. D. SKINNER.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—At our regular meeting Friday, August 20th, we had with us International Organizer Brother John J. Henley, who is doing some good work in our city. Brother Flore was also present, and they spoke to the brothers and told them how to make Local 175 one of the best in the State. We had a large meeting, with nine applications and some reinstatements. Here are where some of our brothers are located: Tom McCormick, Imperial Hotel, Niagara Falls, N. Y.; Chas. Hofle and Geo. Wild at the Stein Buffet; F. Meyers and W. Peters at Nickolson's; L. Delinger and J. Schwartz at Schmans'; J. Riley and J. Donnelley at Walter's Cafe; J. Dewes at Lyon's, Terrytown; Geo. Wolf at Garvis', Michigan avenue; C. A. Marshall at Schutt's Hotel, Austin street and Military road; Chas. Schirra and J. Daugherty at Mageslie's Hotel; M. J. Crosson, Lynch's Cafe; J. Taffa at Jacobson's Cafe, S. Division street; Ellicott D. Reibold, Jr., at Havers' Cafe, Genesee street; W. Wackter and Al Bentzan at the Bagg's Hotel; W. Deredenger and T. Murphy at Arlington Hotel; E. E. Maska at O'Brien's, 477 S. Division street (twenty-four years with O'Brien and rooming mate of A. M. Wands); Geo. Frey with J. Kohabka, Teutonia Park; G. Frazer at Gayety Cafe.

A. W. Killinger was elected a trustee Friday evening. With greetings,

Yours fraternally,

FRANK BROWN,
Press Agent and President Local 175.

PITTSBURGH, PA.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The non-appearance for several months of any communication in THE MIXER AND SERVER from the Pittsburgh Waiters and Cooks' Union, Local 209, should not cause any one to think that this organization has gone the way of its several ill-fated precursors. On the contrary, this organization just now is throbbing with an unprecedented amount of life and energy.

For many months immediately after its creation, about one year and a half ago, Waiters and Cooks' Union, Local 209, enjoyed but an extremely precarious existence. More than once during the several ups and downs of this organization, its staunchest pioneers—those who had served it with unswerving devotion—gradually felt their hope petering out and saw themselves face to face with apparently certain failure. But the very sacrifices that they had made, the memory of the hopes that they had cherished, despite so little encouraging a surrounding as that presented by the naked and dingy walls of two small, ill-ventilated and dismal rooms on Webster avenue. These and several other circumstances combined to inspire the pioneers of this organization to efforts that only now begin to bear fruit. By way of encouraging our toiling sisters and brothers in other cities, we may be permitted in this connection to call your attention to the fact that any effort at organization is never entirely lost, even though it reap apparent and temporary failure. Urged on by the growing need for organization, the experience gained from miscarried efforts supplies the material out of which we construct the bridge that leads to ultimate success when the immaturity of conditions shall have ceased to be a handicap.

But to say that Local 209 is in a fair way to success does not mean that it has reached its goal. We have as yet but little more than two hundred members, and about twenty-five of these have been acquired during the past several weeks. But the sentiment among waiters and cooks is growing in our favor. The very men who several months ago evinced a lack of confidence in our organization now come to wish us well and voluntarily promise that they will soon be with us, and they more often keep than not keep their promise. Those who hesitate are ever encouraged by the growing number of our active members, who may be found distributed over all parts of the city, and each one of whom works as seriously as if the responsibility for the success of this organization rested wholly on his shoulders.

Several so-called waiters' clubs have been looked upon by many of us as an obstacle to the growth of this organization. But the difficulties presented by them are less serious than we once had reason to think. In order to take the film from the eyes of the oft-deceived members of one of these so-called waiters' clubs, it is essential only that we point out to them the self-evident fact of its having been conducted in the past not in the interest of those who supported it with their hard-earned dollars, but for the enrichment of a few selfish and unscrupulous individuals who fastened themselves like leeches upon it. But signs are not wanting that the mass of waiters and cooks in this city have ceased to hope for any improvement of their conditions from an organization that keeps aloof from the labor movement as something to be shunned and to the prejudiced minds of whose leading spirits the very mention of "union" is suggestive of celluloid collars and a townly skin.

Unable to hold out to its members any prospects for future material benefits (its functioning as an employment agency can hardly be regarded as a blessing to its members), this waiters' club has been trying to justify its existence on the ground that it has a death benefit and that it offers opportunities for social pleasures. But even this argument has become invalidated since Local 209 installed a sick benefit in addition to the death benefit which we enjoy through the International Union, and since it opened its conveniently located clubroom on Wylie avenue.

which in every respect is second to no other of its kind in Pittsburgh.

Yours fraternally,

OTTO SCHATZ,
President Local 209.

HELLO, BROTHER!

I've answered to Hello, Lunsman! from the fellows on the job;
I've been greeted with Good morning, comrade, too;

And to the title, Fellow Worker, I've responded with a nod—

I suppose I've got them all the same as you.
But the greeting that appeals to me far more than all the rest—

The one I hold more sacred than another—
Is the good, old-fashioned title that for years has stood the test,

The joyous, gladsome sound of Hello, Brother!

There's a real good-fellow feeling in the meaning of the word,

There's a sort of thrill and rapture in the tones; To rouse a fellow's spirit it's the best I've ever heard—

As a mark of honest friendship it's alone.
And when you're up against it and things look dark and gray,

And each day's luck seems tougher than the other,

You meet an old acquaintance who drives dull care away

When he greets you with his cheery Hello, Brother!

It has the ring of honest candor, the grip of honest heart:

It's a greeting that is free from guile and sham:
And in this world of strife and struggle it plays its little part

Toward the unity and brotherhood of man.
And though it sounds the message of good will and peace to all,

And there's a quiet, calm, contentment in its tone,

Yet it rouses us to action when we hear its urgent call

To arise and fight for livelihood and home.

It's then the Hello, Brother! that awakes the toiler's cheers

As it spurs us on to victory in the fight;
Our aid in by-gone battles, our hope in future years,

Our doctrine in defending Labor's right.
It fills us with new vigor, it gives to us new life,

It's the slogan that awakes us from despair;
'Tis the watchword that unites us in the time of stress and strife,

It's the rallying song of Labor everywhere.

Local 209. JAMES P. HAYES.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—In these war-like times, when invasions and drives are so popular, we looked around us and saw the slumbering, tranquil city of Ft. Worth unorganized in the waiters' craft and a constant menace to other cities that were, whereat we conceived the plan of invading our sister city under the banner of unionism and the battle cry of labor. We sent our very able president, David Lynch, to make the first attack, and the next Sunday as many as could go made the trip, and going from cafe to restaurant with hard work we succeeded in capturing Ft. Worth and placing a local in that city. Did we quit then and leave this new local to struggle along the best it could? We did not. One day a week our capable business agent, Brother Glauburg, works in the city of Ft. Worth, meeting with them, helping and aiding them, and smoothing out the rough spots, and in his efficient manner placing, as far as he is able to do, Local 748 on a firm basis. We have a few years start over here in Dallas, and it looks as if we will need them; for if present indications amount to anything, Local 748, Ft. Worth, is going to step up in the front rank very soon; and that is all the good news there is to send you.

Conditions in Dallas never were worse, and this winter's prospects are very bad. If there is anyone who reads this and contemplates making the Dallas Fair this year, please don't do it; you will only bring misery on yourself. We have more idle men in Dallas than ever in the history of our local.

RICH. MEANEY,
Press Secretary Local 659.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—No doubt you will be surprised to hear from Local 815, but owing to the fact that I have been busy at one of the summer resorts all of the season I had not the opportunity to communicate with THE MIXER AND SERVER to relate the conditions that exist in Salt Lake, much to my sorrow. I will state that about all of the boys have been working all season, and also that we had quite a number of the boys from other locals passing and anchoring in the city. We took care of them the best way we could possibly do so, and I think that none of them were very much disappointed.

Sorry to relate that we lost two of our most loyal members by death here recently, and I know that the members of other locals throughout the country who knew the brothers will cast their most heartfelt sympathy for them, as they sure helped local 815 to progress with all their power. They were Brother Frank (Mickey) Foster, the waiter, and Brother Roscoe Hurt, the cook—two of the boys whose death left a sad void in the craft. So let us hope that none of us will go the same route very soon.

The results of our election proved to be one of our most successful ones, as we elected some live wires who have a perfect backbone in them, starting off with Jack (Papa) Farrell, with four healthy children and always on the job, doing the presidential work; for vice-president we secured Chas. Johnson, one of the oldtimers, followed by Chas. McKee for business agent and financial secretary, the boy that overlooks none of them and is always on the job hustling. Then comes Pat Owens for recording secretary (the same old chaw); Old Man Kelly for inspector, and Hugh (Speedy) Aumiller for sentinel. For trustees are live ones such as D. Beauchamp, J. S. Dixon, Orie Ellison, Roy Meyers and W. O. Stanley; and the war horse, Joe Ward, for treasurer. So the boys throughout the country can expect some fine results from Local 815 this ensuing term.

I will also state that we expect to be in a far better position soon, as we have had a fair season; but owing to the fight that we had last winter, it has kept us busy trying to get on a better paying basis, but every member, or at least the majority, has all the confidence in the world that it will be a very short time before we will be the superiors and dictators of Salt Lake City.

Now, Mister Editor and Conquerors of Segregation, including members of all other sister locals, I appreciate the time that you have given Local 815 in regards to looking over this bit of information, as I have said about all and will close.

With the best of luck, success and prosperity to all other locals, I beg to remain as ever,

Yours fraternally,

PATRICK T. OWENS,
Recording and Press Secretary Local 815.

CHICAGO, ILL.

DEAR SISTERS AND BROTHERS—Not since 1894-5 have there been so many unemployed as exist right in the middle of this summer. The only prosperous business is the employment sharks, who sell jobs to the highest bidders. There are two hundred and fifty private employment offices in Chicago's Telephone Directory, and every one of these is crowded with unemployed women and men. Yesterday one shark sent twenty cooks and forty women workers to a neighboring city to open a new clubhouse. Two-thirds of the crew will be discharged within a week and will be at the mercy of labor unions and charity organizations in a strange town.

It is commonly understood among cooks that all good jobs come in to some employment office now, and that the man who pays the most cash for it gets the job. The employment shark alone gives enough reason for cooks to organize and handle their own jobs, but it seems that the vampires have been hypnotized and that cooks have more confidence in a job after he has paid $15.00 to $50.00 for the same.

Hundreds of cooks are being sent out of Chicago every week on wild goose chases. Thousands of other workers are paying to keep these two hundred and fifty sharks in business every day.

There is absolutely no reason why the State should permit anybody to charge a man or a woman for a job or for any information as to where employment may be had. There are trade organizations in existence to cater to all the needs; then the State free employment offices are able to take care of the rest. An employment agency is nothing more than a State helping and taking part in robbing an unemployed of his last cent. No form of robbery is lower than when a person has no job and then is legally robbed and his last change taken away from him. It is safe to say that an ordinary porch climber would return the change nine times out of ten if he found out that it was robbing children, women and men of their last piece of bread.

A sea robber never takes the food belonging to the crew which enables them to reach shore.

A train robber always confines his robbing to the safe or passengers. He never robs the employes.

An employment agent in Chicago takes it all. He sells the job for money the same as the butcher sells ham by the pound.

The hotel managers or stewards who split with the sharks are still lower than the sharks themselves. Those managers who discharge employees in order to divide up with the sharks in Chicago and keep on doing this for side money should be in Federal prisons.

Frank P. Walsh and the Industrial Commission will, no doubt, make some valuable recommendations to Congress. In behalf of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes, we hope a law will result from his recommendations which will forever abolish all forms of job selling, vampirism, corruption and grafting on the unemployed, and also on the men when employed.

The Illinois Legislature passed a tipping trust bill which prohibits agents, employers or other grafters to take the tips away from any person whom the tip was given to. This bill is a beginning to the elimination of graft, but the Honorable Courts are now assisting the tip trust by an injunction which prohibits the State from stopping this graft.

The Anti-Saloon League is now invading the trades unions with their dry Chicago campaign for April 1916. They are well organized. Whether or not the organizations of the Bartenders, Hotel and Restaurant Employes, Saloon Keepers and Brewery Workers are able to meet these drys is a question which depends entirely whether they will unite and organize themselves in order to form powerful united labor organization.

Hoping for the best, I remain

Yours fraternally,

FRED EBELING,

Secretary Chicago Cooks and Pastry Cooks' Union. Local 865.

KENOSHA, WIS.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Just a few lines from Bartenders' Local 523 of Kenosha, Wis.

Arrived home from the convention on July 7th, and the first news that I heard was that the local had cleared $255 on the twelfth annual picnic June 27.

Our annual family picnic (for members only) was held August 11—we call it Bartenders' Labor Day. Every one reported having a fine time. The big feature of the day was a ball game between the married men and the single men, the single men winning 21 to 10. Dancing and other games helped to pass the day; dinner, supper and plenty of liquid refreshments were furnished by the local. Brothers Jos. Dosemagan, Frank Burt, Ed Thelen, Joseph Knipper, and the writer, came very near staying all night. Johnny Loef was the little drummer boy; Brothers Sourweid and Robinson of Local 64 were in on the finish.

Work is not plentiful at present and would advise traveling brothers not seek Kenosha if they can only tend bar.

Yours fraternally,

L. S. KIMBALL,

Financial Sec'y and Business Agent.

FRESNO, CAL.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Fresno, famed for its raisins and as the real certified geographical center of the State of California, is soon to become the center of more dubious notoriety, according to latest reports, those eminently esteemed cankerous Christians who delight in stirring up things being due here in the fall with a view of making this city their headquarters to put the kibosh on the liquor interests.

In this progressive age and country, where we are making by no means a futile effort to get recognition for a more liberal practice of the "Golden Rule," it seems strange that those very people who, at least, pretend to accept the teachings of the Man of Nazareth should be the most prone to violate that tolerance with which He viewed material things, even to rendering unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's. Of course, there will be donations solicited from the brewers and distillers to defray the expenses of the necessary picnics and outings of the Prohibition party, and salvation lassies will collect dimes and nickels in the saloons in order to buy a new prayer drum to down the liquor interests with.

Local 62 is close to a 100 per cent organization; excepting two houses, we have everything in town. Said two houses not being accessible to direct attack, we are attempting to outflank them, and our aggressive secretary, who seems born to the job, has already got a small wedge in that will soon result in their capitulation. Not that we are anxious to get a house card in (those kind of houses always refuse), but we count it a victory when we have the house unionized; and diplomacy and tact will often win where brute force (?) more effective in the counter houses fails.

As usual, the weather has been very warm, which, probably, accounts for so few unemployed in our craft being in town. The heat, moreover, causes a number to lay off more than one day in seven, and that helps some. Our finances, however, are our hardest task, for though we are able to rub along in a fashion, we are handicapped by the accumulated debts of former administrations which it seems impossible to liquidate; wherefore the lot of a secretary-treasurer is not a happy one. Otherwise we are a happy family, and who knows but that if we had a little more affluence we might not be more successful?

I enclose a few rhymes which you may deem fit to use.

With kindest regards, I remain

Fraternally yours,

JULIUS BECKER.

Our umbrel' is old and worn,
Weather beaten, fragile, torn.
Yet we missed it t' other morn.
(Guess I know who's got it.)

Where's that dime full-fledged Cannuck,
That adorned our purse for luck.
Wonder who that dime has struck?
(It's not now in my pocket.)

Once we had a jacket frayed,
In our locker long it stayed.
Now 'tis stolen, lost or strayed
(For we have not got it.)

Where's that black tie with a loop.
That once fell into the soup?
Bang, it went at one fell swoop,
(I have ne'er forgot it.)

Yes, that corkscrew was a friend,
Always knew the business end,
Never borrow, never lend.
(Yes. I know who's got it.)

JULIUS BECKER.

JUNEAU, ALASKA.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—As you have not heard anything from Local 871 in a long time, and though there is but little to write of, yet that little may prove interesting to members of our organizations.

In accordance with an old-established custom, I must begin with a few remarks as to weather conditions, and I am very glad to state that the past season has been all that could be desired, and the present summer, the "oldtimers" tell us, is the first and only real summer ever endured here in their memory, and it is so far delightfully pleasant, and, in fact, the population is rapidly increasing. But that brings me to the question of labor conditions and employment. While there has been, and still is, considerable activity in the mining business in and around this immediate vicinity, it is quite dull here for persons in our lines, for the reason that most of the companies attempt to and do, in a great degree, supply all their employes with board, indoor amusements and athletics on their own grounds; and most of these being some distance from this town, it is not often that the men visit the town, and that accounts for the small number of our class that is required to serve the town, except on holidays, and so there are always too many unemployed of our members here.

Local improvement is now at a standstill compared to a year ago, and that leaves a number of all classes still awaiting for something to "turn up," as they are led to expect by newspaper reports; but many are thinking of getting away as soon as they can do so comfortably or hear of some other developing locality.

I note in the June number of THE MIXER AND SERVER the word "Bohunks," and I fail to find any such in the dictionaries; but find that it has reference to a race of people now in America which has often been referred to by numerous publications throughout the United States as one of the most desirable of people to become citizens. The word "Bohunks" what has to do with Mr. Wm. L. Thomasson, of Spokane, any man or woman with any sense of fairness who reads Thomasson's article in the June issue will be against. Wishing all members of our International success and prosperity.

I am yours fraternally,

JOHN JURIJA,
Financial Secretary Local 871.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

This warning is given to waiters, who are contemplating visiting Cleveland, in the hope that they may profit thereby by giving it a wide berth. We have at the present time a large number of unemployed members and the prospects for the coming winter are anything but bright. We will not permit waiters without union cards to work in this city and this is directed particularly to the men working at the craft in the city of Detroit who apparently will not take advantage of the opportunity presented to organize and by their lack of spirit and backbone permit the abuses to be heaped upon them by the employers of that city. Local 106, after years of unceasing toil and effort, have succeeded in obtaining conditions which while far from being ideal, are such that its members are enabled to make a decent living and they will not permit others, who have not given any support, morally or financially to this organization, which has always had a kind invitation extended to those who work in this line of employment, to joint with us and obtain the benefits that can only be obtained thru labor organizations, to come into this city and deprive those who have labored faithfully to obtain these conditions, of their right to the employment which they have created. The activities of these particular individuals seem to be confined to the joining and boosting of the bosses organization, better known by the name of the Geneva Association, and I think it is high time the members of that organization demanded some real assistance from them in the line of decent hours, living wages, etc., which, by the way, has never been given them thru any efforts on the part of the aforesaid Geneva Association. As charity begins at home, Local 106 proposes to extend whatever favors it may be in a position to distribute to those members who have stood loyally by their International union and all others will have to pay the penalty for their obstinacy and shortsightedness.

EDW. A. WHISSEMORE,
Business Agent, Local 106.

AUGUSTA, GA.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Local 870 of Augusta, Ga., is still growing, and our members are most all working; business is quiet here and we are having a hard fight to keep the prohibitionists from presenting a bill to the legislature, which will be called during the month of September, 1915, that will put us out of business; we are fighting hard to save our charter. We are about 60 per cent organized and are getting new members every meeting with some reinstating thru the general office, which we want to thank our general secretary-treasurer, Jere L. Sullivan, for the kindness which he has shown us in the matter.

The central body of this city have succeeded in organizing a Women's Union Label League. Now brothers and sisters, take it from me this is some league; they have made good in making the merchants handle union labeled goods, and I am proud to say that they have done more for the labor forward movement in this city than has ever been done before and we wish them continued success.

Yours fraternally,
J. W. BROOKS,
Recording Secretary, Local 870.

CASPER, WYO.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—As you have not heard from Local 842 for some time, will say that we are still existing and trying to progress as rapidly as possible. We have twenty members in good standing and five houses to work from. As we have no Business Agent, Brother T. B. Browne is acting pro tem, and he and Brother W. P. Walters, who is our worthy President, have been doing all in their power to keep things on the move, and much credit is due them.

Tonight was meeting night, but there were not enough brothers and sisters present to conduct one, so our time was spent in going over the books, and much was accomplished, and I think we will get there with a little perseverance.

We have a new brewery here, which has just put its beer on the market, and, according to the bar boys, it is some brew.

Times are rather dull now, and would advise members coming this way to bring their lunch with them.

We noted with pleasure the results of the Eighteenth General Convention, and we are with you, one and all, and wish you and all the membership health and prosperity.

Fraternally yours,
EUGENE E. SULLIVAN,
Local 842.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Just a few lines for THE MIXER AND SERVER, Local 296, thanks to organized labor in New Bedford, is progressing fine. Brother Louis Paradize, President of Bartenders' Local 100, has done excellent work for this organization. Mainly through his efforts the north end of this city has been unionized. President Harriman of the C. L. U. has never failed any of our committees when called on to help unionize this craft. We take this means through our journal to thank those staunch union men for their assistance. By the next month's journal we will have gone by the 100 mark. Our slogan is now: "Two hundred members or better."

Yours fraternally,
EDW. T. SMITH,
Press Secretary, Local 296.

CLEVELAND, O.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The annual election of officers of Local 106 resulted in the re-election of Thos. S. Farrell, president; George Fitzpatrick, vice-president; Edw. Whissemore, financial secretary-business agent. Arthur Just continues as chaplain, and Louis Kappel as trustee. The new officers are: Arthur S. Loeb, press secretary; Frank Aichen, recording secretary; George Ames, sergeant-at-arms; George Cairns, inspector; Walter Smith and Amos Benoit, trustees.

Local 106 abolished the office of secretary-treasurer, and elected Frank Burkley to fill the office of treasurer.

Never in the history of Local 106 has work been so slack as at present. Our business agent finds it very difficult to supply our oldtimers with enough work to keep the wolf from the door. I would advise all our craft to shun Cleveland as they would a pestilence.

Yours fraternally,
ARTHUR S. LOEB,
Press Secretary, Local 106.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Local 150 held its annual election of officers on August 13th, and a new set of officers was elected. Bro. Timothy Sullivan, one of our charter members, was elected president; Old Si Miller, vice-president; James Nulty, financial secretary and business agent; Harry Thomas, treasurer; Joe Baker (re-elected), recording secretary; Art Forant, inspector; Thomas Casey, inside guard, who received the vote of every member voting.

We still are fighting the Yates Hotel in conjunction with the bartenders and cooks and expect to win within a short time.

We have been keeping all the boys, on the out-of-work list, busy with extra work this summer, and have had days when we could not supply enough men, but the powers that be have closed all cabarets in Syracuse and this has put quite a few more men on the extra list.

Our fourth annual picnic will be held Thursday, August 26, and we expect to have one of our old crowds.

With our membership growing every week and wishing the same to every other local, I remain,

Fraternally yours,

JOE BAKER,
Recording Secretary and Press Agent.

Table of Statistics Similar to Those Used by Leading Life Insurance Companies.

Life insurance companies are becoming more and more strict in their physical requirements of those who would take out policies. Any material falling in weight from their table or normal weight statistics is in itself sufficient to cause them, in most cases, to regard the applicant as an "undesirable risk." The following table of normal weights enables both men and women to know exactly what they should weigh to conform to the average for various heights:

Height	Men	Women

WHAT THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT LOST IN WISCONSIN.

The following article from the Duluth (Wis.) Labor World will no doubt prove interesting and instructive reading to our readers generally, but particularly to those resident and employed in that State:

"The prohibition wave cost Uncle Sam approximately half a million dollars last year in revenues from Wisconsin alone.

"The nation-wide agitation for prohibition and the fact that so many States already have prohibited the sale of intoxicating liquors within their boundaries, cost the government last year over $20,000,000, according to reports from Washington.

"Records of the two internal revenue districts of Wisconsin show that the income the government derives from the manufacture of spirits and fermented liquors has fallen off considerably. It is only the additional 33½ per cent war tax on beer and the increased tax on spirits, in effect since October 23, 1914, that has kept the income near to that of former years.

"Despite the added war emergency tax on spirits, the revenue from this source fell off $150,000 in 1915 compared with the 1914 revenue collections. The 1915 collections from this source were $2,429,529. This is for the fiscal year ending July 1, 1915.

"The revenues from the manufacture of beer in the eastern district of Wisconsin, for the fiscal year ending in 1915, were $5,013,873. During eight months of this year the government collected a tax of $1.50 instead of the regular $1 tax. Despite this added tax of 33½ per cent, the increase in the income from this course was only $600,000 out of a total income from beer of $5,013,873."

14,398,000 MEN LOST IN THE WAR.

Astounding Figures of Dead, Wounded and Prisoners Compiled by the French Government.

Paris.—The losses of Europe in the war up to May 31, as compiled by the French ministry of war, are as follows:

	Killed	Wounded	Prisoners	Total
France	460,000	660,000	180,000	1,800,000
England ...	181,000	200,000	90,000	471,000
Belgium ...	49,000	49,000	15,000	113,000
Russia	1,250,000	1,680,000	850,000	3,780,000
Germany ...	1,630,000	1,880,000	490,000	4,000,000
Austria	1,610,000	1,865,000	910,000	4,385,000
Turkey	110,000	144,000	95,000	349,000
Totals ...	5,290,000	6,478,000	2,630,000	14,398,000

This table was prepared for publication early in June, but was withheld because the French authorities feared the enormity of the figures might have a bad moral effect on the people. The computations, while probably not exact, may be considered the most complete record of losses so far put together. The losses of Serbia are not available, but as that country has suffered from plague in addition to war they must be large.

The largest total loss is charged to Austria-Hungary, the largest proportionate loss to Belgium. Enough persons have been killed to populate a country like Sweden.

Since May 31 there have been many violent battles to swell the totals given—the French offensive north of Arras, where 15,000 are said to have been slain, the Austro-Italian engagements, the great battle in Galicia and the German offensive in the Argonne.

The most astounding feature of this table is the ratio of killed to wounded. In previous modern wars the number of wounded has been to the number of dead as four or five to one. Here the two categories are much more nearly equal. Many of the wounded have joined their regiments, but many are crippled for life. The sick, who have been numerous in all the armies, are not listed here.

EMPTY BENCHES GREET SULLIVAN.

Only 275 Hear His First Total Abstinence Lecture.

Asbury Park, N. J., August 9.—Yours truly, John L. Sullivan, stepped jauntily out before 3,725 vacant chairs last night at the Beach auditorium—there are 4,000 seats in the auditorium and 275 of them were occupied—and delivered his first lecture on the merits of total abstinence. It was a sort of try-out, and if business picks up Mr. Sullivan will tour the country, reforming as he goes. Mr. Sullivan, according to his manager, D'Arcy O'Connor, was to have begun his address at 8:10 o'clock. He didn't. Mr. Sullivan waited for a spell and finally mounted the platform half an hour late.—Associated Press Dispatch.

The Anti-Saloon League which, no doubt, is financing John L.'s water-wagon tour may discover that the popularity of the Boston boy as a fistic gladiator does not extend to John L. in the role of moralizer and abstinence advocate.

CHEER UP!

DON'T give old General Regret a chance to "sign you up," for if he secures your enlistment you may as well begin to think of the tall man in black, whose place of business you seldom pass without feeling an involuntary shudder. There is nothing in this good old world to beat a pleasant word and a perpetual smile; of course you must stow the smile away when attending funerals, but that is an exception which, thank goodness, does not occur so frequently as to become a habitual every-day occurrence. You may think that you are the only soldier fighting the battle against tough luck, but pshaw, there are hundreds of thousands doing that stunt who never let on that they are worried the least bit; they just wade in, day in and day out, knowing full well that the law of averages will balance things one of these days and then they will be eating peaches and cream just the same as if they had never missed putting their number twelves under the table regularly.

Put in a requisition for a full supply of ambition and partake of it generously. Think of pleasant things, get that morgue view-point and choke it, lay it down and tie it so that it cannot arise to harrass you. Make it a daily habit to say, "Hello," to your friends and acquaintances; don't cut off the "o," for if you do, it's dollars to dough-nuts that is how you will feel and force others to wish you in that sultry spot. Hello is a pleasing salutation if given right. If you are a married man, hug the wife, make love to her; probably she will think you need the service of the doctor, but persist and you will get out feeling a whole lot better than if you just leave the house as usual, with that eternal frown on your unsmiling face. If unmarried and you have a Dear Old Mother at home, just give her a couple of good bear hugs and kisses; make her feel that her cute little kid, the hope and joy of her heart, has returned; she will not look at you as the great big burly cub, which you are, her eyes see you as her boy and your embraces and kisses may remind her of sweet days, when she nursed you to strength and sturdiness. Love makes the whole world go around, you have some of the spark left in you, fan it into a healthy blaze and you will throw off the weight which bears you down. Happiness is not the sole possession of those who have money; you can bring a heap of it into the world if you only believe in yourself. Don't step on the toes of the barefoot kids; smile at them, say "Hello," pat 'em on the head and see them pay you back in coin which only nature mints.

Even when you are in a hurry it is possible to be fine and manly, to be careful of the wants and wishes of others, to help that weary woman with her child in arms to board the street car, to take time to cuddle the youngster under the chin, while you see that her bundle or basket is cared for. Slip a small bit of change to the unfortunate when you have enough to rattle in your own jeans; keep sweet and wholesome by trying to make the other fellow's burdens a part of yours. Chase unselfishness off the map, make him get away back where there are no seats; he will get discouraged and fly the coop. Enlist in the army of hope; sign no other papers and let this be your slogan—CHEER UP.

Every member of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League being interested in its welfare, inasmuch as the proceeds are part of the International funds, it therefore follows that, being the "servers" of condiments, liquors, etc., their good will would be of marked advantage to purveyors of articles of consumption either in Hotels, Clubs, Cafes, Buffets or Bars. The membership of the International Union consists of the very highest class of bartenders, cooks, waiters and hotel employes generally.

We know of no class of citizens which pay more or stricter attention to genuine civic progress than the members of our local unions in their several municipalities, nor are we acquainted with any body of voters who are so unselfish in their activities for the good of the commonwealth in general. Observers having noted the vim and vigor with which our membership invade any campaign which involves the questions which truly affect our lives as breadwinners carry the impression that our activities are confined to those questions, and that when other civic matters are being considered or proposals which may affect civic welfare are up for disposition that our members are conspicuous by their inactivity and absence.

Our organization has probably exercised more influence in its quiet way than almost any labor organization of which we have knowledge; for, from the very moment a candidate has been invested with the title of brother, he is taught to become a better worker and a better citizen, and it is without any intent to boast of success along those lines we say with emphasis, that our students show marked advancement and fine discerning powers, for with so few exceptions that they are almost negligible; our members develop into active citizens and consistent workers for whatever advances the well-being of their city, county or state.

There is no explanation necessary for this condition of affairs, for as intimated, the new members are urged to keep in touch with what is occurring in their own towns, and it naturally follows that the needs of all municipalities ultimately spread to the county and thence to the state lawmakers, and in this manner local interests spread to include the commonwealth.

Our members are naturally interested in legislation which affects them; yet no measure, no matter what its intent, but will find our folks engrossed in the subject and quite as willing to devote time, energy and whatever they may be able to spare financially to bring about laws beneficial to the butcher, baker, carpenter, and all those who work with brain or brawn. It should not be understood that they confine their agitational work to skilled workers, nor that they are unwilling to enter the list in advocacy of measures which will legitimately enable employers to conduct their business at a reasonable profit—our folks draw no appreciable line, providing the proposal is beneficial to the community, for they calculate and wisely, that whatever helps the employer to continue doing business, aids the other trades and callings in retaining employment.

In the past few years many of our local unions have become deeply interested in the subject of good roads; they have contributed their services and engaged in the local campaigns for better highways with results which were both pleasing and gratifying to all concerned. And while on the subject of better roads, we could make mention of at least two of our members who were selected as commissioners in their respective counties, and who brought to their labor such unexpected enthusiasm that their colleagues on the commissions selected them for executive positions, which they filled with unqualified success, proving to the community which had selected them that no mistake was made. One of these members, acting on a road commission, was importuned to remain a member indefinitely, but modestly declined, being content to have aided in constructing one of the most durable and beautiful drives which the United States can boast of (and whisper) at such a reduced cost that the citizens were astounded, but immensely pleased. In fact, they were not backward in declaring that in comparison, in cost, time devoted, and material and labor used, that bit of highway was the model of economic efficiency. To us the results meant a union man directing union workers and securing the products of both to the last degree.

We have reason to feel proud of the achievements of our boys and girls—they are never backward in civic betterment—you will find them in every live city in America working and agitating for better laws, for any measure which means the city beautiful, for any measure which will eliminate the woeful waste of childhood, for better schools, better housing, breathing places for the people, for laws which spell humanity and its protection.

Thoughtless persons may imagine that our activity has another purpose in view, but such would find fault with angels. We are satisfied to do our level best to make this good old world a better one to live in. We allow the preachers to do the hustling for the one to come. We are sincere believers in more flour to the live member and his family now; and not more flowers after he has been prepared for his last resting place. That, in a few words, sums up our aim in life, and hope to keep going on and on doing our share to bring a smile to the face of the downcast, to help bear the burden over the rough spots of life's highway.

BETWEEN OURSELVES.

Several years ago there was formed an organization of catering industry employes under the title of International Stewards' Association; among other things which it advocated was the establishment of a Training School for catering industry workers and the organization really devoted considerable thought and effort to found such a school. At one of its earlier meetings or conventions a prominent hotel man delivered an address and among other things of interest said: "Much of late has been said of the establishment of a school of cookery. Whatever may be the outcome of your deliberations on this important question, one thing you may feel assured of in advance and that is, all hotel keepers would hail the day when you send forth to the culinary world your first graduates as competent cooks."

Continuing, he said: "This is not, however, the only way in which you may aid the hotel keeper and restaurateur for the good of the business. You may be of great assistance in a political way by co-operating with them to protect their business and property against unjust and dangerous legislation."

The hotel man who made that address in the month of September, 1908, was the President of the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association, and so far as we have record, the first officer of that organization to recognize what the Mixer and Server had been preaching for years previous to that time, that the employes of catering establishments were not only required to be skilled workers, but in addition they should be citizens of the country in which they were employed in order to protect the industry from "unjust and dangerous legislation." The writer is unable to advise the readers of the Mixer and Server whether the referred to hotel proprietor practices what he preaches, that is to say, makes it his business to see that all those who are employed in his hotels—for he is interested in several now and has been for years—are registered voters and in a position to do what he urged the I. S. A. in 1908 to do—vote to protect the industry.

Referring back to the printed story from whence the quotation is taken, the writer notes several other prominent hotel owners as invited guests and speakers, six names from that list are the recognized leaders of the hotel business of New York City, and at a rough guess even at that early date represented close to fifty millions of hotel investment and surely their property possessions and that which had come under their control and direction since has pushed the figure up to double the amount mentioned above. And yet, we venture the statement that out of their hundreds, probably thousands of employes the percentage of non-citizen, non-voting employes approximate fully 85 per cent and that calculation does not include the women workers, who if suffrage prevailed in the Empire state would perhaps be quite as lacking in voting abilities as the male contingent referred to.

In the address of one of these hotel men to the I. S. A. he said: "Brains are at a premium the world over; good money stands waiting for the man with ideas and ability, at all times, everywhere."

Despite that statement, an evident recognition of a well known fact, that hotel man seems to conclude that the average voter in his state is minus a thinking apparatus, for if he used that which he undoubtedly possesses himself—brains—he would face the unquestioned conditions which prevail right at this very moment and break the speed limit to get from under the proposed avalanche which the Anti-Saloonists of the Empire state are preparing for the catering industry. Anyone who pretends to know what is taking place in New York will inform you that the combination known and parading under the title of the "Church in Action" is pleased beyond expression over having such a fine morsel for argument. "That the industry returns but a very slight percentage to the voters, that in the main the income is dissipated among very few so-called Americans, that immense profits are made by hotels and cafes handling intoxicants and that they ignore the citizen voter by refusing him employment, and that therefore the Americans will lose nothing by casting their vote in favor of the elimination of the beverage end of the catering industry from hotels and similar institutions."

New York City with its cabaret, Cafe and night life Restaurant are rolled into one gigantic bundle by the shouters against the liquor industry, as they call it; they are unlike the representatives of the Hotels who went up to Albany a few years ago seeking to have a distinction made between the hotel beverage vendor and the saloon beverage vendor in that they class all such establishments as "Depots of the Evil One," and therefore they must be eliminated. The Hotel fraternity, especially needs to wake up, it is permitting greater liberties under the guise of entertainment for guests than is being, or for that matter was ever allowed in legitimate saloons, and that very license is building obstacles which it will be decidedly difficult to overcome; but the smug sky pilots in the employ of the Anti Saloon League are saying nothing and doing less to put a stop to it at this time, they are allowing the evidence to accumulate, they are making careful memorandum of what they can use, they are storing away "munitions" to be used when the catering industry is forced out of its trenches and must fight for its existence. The voters in New York state have been appealed to for years to rally to the flag of personal liberty and they have responded finely, but, and this is no sleep-walker's hallucination—the voters are going to be told the plain, unvarnished facts; they are going to hear the results of an investigation set on foot by a presumed sociologist aggregation, but which in reality was financed by "Dri-Bill" Anderson for the Anti Saloon League of that state, and which went into the subject so thoroughly that it even astonished old and seasoned veterans in the political field; they admitted without exception that the investigators had "dug deep."

And that fact is going to be driven home with powerful logic when the proper time comes; the voter is going to be shown that in the Empire State the hotel industry which employs approximately 40,000 cooks and waiters and almost as many other male employees, not including several thousand bartenders; that something like 1,000 performers in Cabaret Cafes and fully double that number of musicians are only about 15 per cent registered voters, and that the appeal for Personal Liberty is mainly to keep these employees and their employers in business, they are probably going to do a bit of serious thinking stunt and arrive at the natural conclusion that if these men with hundreds of millions invested are so indifferent as to fail to employ voters when they are giving out work; they can look elsewhere for voters to protect their investment, they can in fact look to their "imported orchestras, foreign garcons and artistes culinaire and their European novelty artists" and seek their voters for the protection of their business. And while on the thought it may not be amiss to say that the saloon and cafe men who make no pretense to be extensive caterers, yet whose permission to sell intoxicants is given them by the power which the voters elect are quite as indifferent in the matter of employing men with votes and who can exercise their voters right when the time comes.

It is said that the Heavens forecasted the war in Europe, there is little need to seek for warning in the clouds so far as the catering industry is concerned—the warning has been given—if that is not clear enough to be understood, just look at what the Antis piled up last November. We need schools for catering industry workers, we are willing to admit that fact, but we amend the plan by submitting the suggestion that the first lesson to be taught both worker and employer is, make the boat seaworthy first before asking any one on the outside of the industry to furnish us with oars—in other words, if you need the support of the voters of America, show that you are entitled to their co-operation and support by putting in your establishments men who can help protect the industry by going to the polls on election day; to the workers in the industry who are without the right to vote, we say, and quite as emphatic as language permits, your future bread and butter as well as ours depends on our combined vote. If you have been in this great big land of America long enough to secure citizenship and have failed to make the effort, then the teachings of unionism have fallen on barren ground; if you are hiding behind your alleged loyalty and patriotism for your Mother country and use that as an excuse for non-citizenship, let this little line or two sink in and sink in deep. You are on the wrong side of the big pond, you should show your patriotism and loyalty in your Mother country toting a gun along with the rest of your countrymen, and the longer you remain on this side and decline to become a citizen the yellower becomes your streak and the bigger quitter you proclaim yourself. Citizenship is a real essential to retain membership in our organization, for even a child in the primary grades recognizes the fact that the catering industry worker without a vote to protect his pay envelope is about as useless as a cart load of blank cartridges to the soldiers in the Argonne. By all means let the experts of the catering industry teach the workers at the industry the fine points of the game, but at the same time that they are teaching students the art of preparing and serving food and drink, teach them that their one vote will offset a vote cast by a fanatic and to even up and cast that vote CITIZENSHIP IS IMPERATIVE.

JERE L. SULLIVAN.

AN ENCOURAGING SIGN.

The Labor Day numbers of the labor press of America reached an astonishingly high mark of completeness in 1914, but this year they simply outstripped and overwhelmed all previous efforts with so few exceptions, that one can say, without exaggeration, that the Labor Day numbers of 1915 were unanimously good. Very few but what offered excellent examples of color printing for their outside cover, and all presented a symposium of ably written articles which prove to the observer that labor writers are keeping abreast of the times, and, in numerous instances, some distance ahead. The bestowal of advertising patronage by firms fair to organized labor was greater than we have noted in recent years, and the tastily arranged announcements should satisfy the purchasers of space that they were getting a "run for their money," something which they are not always fortunate in securing from the daily press. The most encouraging and pleasing sign, however, is the noticeable increase in readers, which seems to indicate a larger subscription list; therefore a larger reading clientele. We have persistently maintained that the labor press responds to the right kind of support, and that it will grow and widen its sphere of activity in proportion to the income its readers make possible by subscribing and patronizing the advertiser who seeks to place his announcements where the workers can read them. While the subject is in mind, suppose you give a moment's thought to your local labor paper: slip around to the office, salute the editor, and leave with him your annual contribution, thus making sure of getting your own publication at your home for the rest of the year. If you can not find time to act on the suggestion, your local union secretary will no doubt take the task off your hands and be glad to do so.

Section 141. All official announcements printed on the Official Pages of the Mixer and Server shall be read at the first meeting after the journal has been received by the Secretary and a copy posted at the local union headquarters for the benefit of all those who may have been absent from meetings.

Officers of local unions situated in towns or cities where we have more than one local union, invite delay and needless correspondence when they submit propositions for the consideration of the General Executive Board, which affects more than one local union in that city. The General Executive Board has made it a rule to decline to consider any proposal which seeks for financial assistance, or which solicits authority to declare strike or cessation of work unless such proposal has been considered by the Local Joint Executive Board of their city and bears its endorsement under seal.

The foregoing in substance has been printed in our official announcements time and time again; it seems, however, that some of our local union officers carry the impression that an exception may be made in their case, and that viewpoint results in unnecessary and uncalled for delay; time which no doubt is of immense value being lost in writing general headquarters and awaiting response from same. Any proposal which directly or indirectly involves more than one local union must be referred to the Local Joint Executive Board in the city where the union is situated. Advising headquarters that the Local Joint Executive Board does not meet regularly, or that it has not had a meeting for a number of weeks or months, is not and can not be regarded as a legal and rational excuse. It is not the fault of our laws nor of the General Executive Board if such conditions prevail. The formation of Local Joint Executive Boards is a mandatory and imperative law and is so understood by most of our members; failure to establish such L. J. E. B. in a city where two or more of our locals exist, is inviting consequences which may prove annoying and troublesome when least expected.

CHICAGO, ILL., Sept. 14, 1915.

To Organized Labor—Greetings:

The officers of the National Women's Trade Union League of America hereby officially announce that the delegates to the Fifth Biennial Convention, in meeting assembled in New York City, June 7 to 12, 1915, voted to embody in the constitution, under Article X—Representatives, the following:

"Credentials bearing the national seal and the signature of at least one of the national officers must be presented by any representative of the National Women's Trade Union League of America appearing in its name."

May we ask you to request this qualification from anyone requesting a hearing before your organization as a representative of the National Women's Trade Union League of America, or our official magazine, Life and Labor.

THE FIRST THANKSGIVING DAY.

The first Thanksgiving Day celebration was held by the Plymouth colony in 1621, and the usage soon became general in New England. After the Revolution the custom gradually extended to the Middle States, and later to the West, and more slowly to the South. Since 1863 its observance has been annually recommended by the President.

Thanksgiving Day this year falls on Nov. 25.

Report of International Auditing Board

Hotel and Restaurant Employees' International Alliance and Bartenders'

International League of America.

August 31, 1915.

CINCINNATI, O., September 17, 1915.

To the Officers and Members of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League of America:

Gentlemen—Complying with Section 119 of your constitution, examination has been made of the books, records and accounts of your Secretary-Treasurer, in conjunction with your Auditing Committee, for six months ended August 31, 1915, and we submit herewith statements of Receipts and Disbursements, Cash Balance and Reconciliation of Bank Accounts, all of which have been duly verified.

Respectfully submitted,

Certified Public Accountant.

CINCINNATI, O., September 17, 1915.

To the Officers and Members of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League of America.

Fellow Members—In accordance with Section 119 of the International laws of our order, we have, with a certified public accountant, representing the bonding company, made an examination of the receipts and disbursements of the Secretary-Treasurer for the six months ended August 31, 1915.

Receipts from locals have been checked in detail and have been properly entered on the books and deposited in bank.

All expenditures have been carefully examined by us, and the statement as submitted, in our opinion, correctly shows the receipts and disbursements for six months ended August 31, 1915.

We wish to commend the General Office upon the excellent condition in which the books and records are kept.

Respectfully submitted,

THOS. W. HOOPER, Local 20, St. Louis, Mo.
RICHARD W. GARRITY, Local 77, Boston, Mass.
RICHARD PIPPING, Local 115, Philadelphia, Pa.

STATE OF OHIO, HAMILTON COUNTY, SS:

Be it remembered, that on the 17th day of September, Nineteen Hundred and Fifteen (1915), before me, a Notary Public, in and for said county and state, appeared the persons who signed the foregoing document, and severally made oath that their names are Thomas W. Hooper, Richard W. Garrity, and Richard Pipping, and that the statements of said document are true, as they verily believe.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence.

DECISIONS OF COURTS AFFECTING LABOR.

U. S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, Washington.

The United States Bureau of Labor Statistics has just issued its annual review of court decisions affecting labor as its Bulletin No. 169. Approximately 265 decisions are summarized, dealing with the application and construction of the laws, or with the application of the principles of the common law to the rights and relations of the worker.

Decisions of outstanding importance which are reviewed in this bulletin include the final opinions of the Appellate and Supreme Courts of the United States in the famous Danbury Hatters' case, holding members of unions personally liable for damage from boycotts; the dissolution of the famous injunction in the case of John Mitchell against the Hitchman Coal and Coke Co. of West Virginia, and holding labor unions legal; and the Supreme Court's opinion in the Coppage case, overthrowing the law of Kansas which undertook to protect workmen in their membership in labor organizations. In the last named case the dissenting opinion, which defended the constitutionality of the act, is also given.

The largest group of cases on a single subject is that relating to the new form of legislation known as workmen's compensation laws. The decisions on this subject range from questions of constitutionality, decided adversely in the case of the Kentucky statute and favorably in other State courts, to the determination of definitions or of single points of dispute. In considering occupational diseases, for instance, the Massachusetts courts hold lead poisoning to be within the State act, providing for compensation for "personal injuries arising out of and in the course of employment," while the Michigan courts, under the provisions of a State law similarly expressed, hold that a case of lead poisoning is not entitled to compensation. An optic neuritis, induced by inhaling poisonous gases was also compensated in Massachusetts, while in New Jersey the court disallowed a claim on account of eczema said to be caused by acids used in a bleachery. Other decisions relate to the mode of computing benefits, the definition of the term "casual employment," what constitutes dependency, wilful act, incapacity, etc. Taken in connection with an earlier bulletin on the same general subject, the Bureau of Labor Statistics has here presented one of the most complete collections of cases on American compensation laws in existence.

Another important group of decisions in a related field is of those determining the application of the Federal liability statute to different classes of railroad employments. Several cases are found which turn on the nature of the employment of the injured person, i. e., whether in interstate commerce or not. The courts are not uniform in their construction of this statute, but among the employments found to be within the act were those of a blacksmith repairing cars used in interstate commerce, a telegraph lineman engaged in repair work, workmen installing block signal systems, a carpenter building an addition to a freight shed, a laborer carrying coal to heat a shop in which interstate cars were being repaired, etc. Employments, which according to the decisions were excluded, were workmen constructing cut-offs for shortening interstate trackage, a hostler killed by the explosion of the boiler of a locomotive whose last run was intrastate, and a switch engine fireman who was at the moment handling only intrastate cars, though his work regularly involved the handling of both classes of commerce indiscriminately.

Other classes of Federal laws that received considerable attention in the court decisions are those limiting the hours of service of railroad employes, and requiring the supply and maintenance of safety appliances.

Other interesting cases are one that grew out of the textile workers' strike in Massachusetts, in which the accountability of the collectors of a fund intended for the relief of strikers' families was affirmed; one connected with the bridge workers' campaign against non-union employers, involving the transportation of explosives in interstate trains; a murder trial growing out of the incitement of a strike leader urging his followers to prevent arrests in the hop pickers' strike in California; and a question of the validity of a sentence of a military court during the disturbances among the miners of Silver Bow County, Montana.

The power of an employers' association to enforce its rules is maintained in a case in which such an association was held by the court to be entitled to recover from one of its members the sum of $5,000 as damages for his defection in a struggle against closed shop contracts. In connection with this may be mentioned a case deciding the illegality of a combination in restraint of trade undertaken and carried on by an association of retail lumber dealers by blacklisting wholesale dealers who sold directly to the consumer.

The minimum wage law of Oregon is noted in this bulletin as the first law of this class to receive judicial consideration, being upheld by the Supreme Court of that State. From this decision an appeal has since been taken to the United States Supreme Court.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Sept. 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—At the close of my last monthly letter the New York State Federation of Labor was holding its session in the city of Buffalo, N. Y., and the following members of our International Union were delegates at that convention: Emanuel Koveleski, representing the Rochester Trades Assembly; A. Toby, representing the Bronx Labor Council; George Hale, Local 2; Maurice DeYoung, Local 70; Joseph R. Michaels, Local 76; M. G. Roberts and John Shea, Local 120; John J. Rits, Local 171; Peter F. Wach, Local 173; Edward Flore, Local 175; Michael Healey, Local 196; F. W. McConnell, Local 204; Richard Nolan, Local 228; Fred G. Madill, Local 320; Joseph C. Fitzpatrick, Local 438; John Henley, Local 763, and W. K. Young, Local 812. Fifteen local unions were represented out of fifty in the State; not a very complimentary showing for our International Union. The day it at hand that our membership must realize that unless they are going to take an active interest in the State Federations of the various States, they will find those bodies going over to the control of men who are opposed to the business that we are engaged in and will place said bodies on record in opposition to our interests.

The New York State Federation passed a resolution, introduced by Delegate Koveleski, of Rochester, placing the said federation on record in opposition to prohibition, local and county option legislation in any form. Delegate Toby introduced a resolution making a demand on all employers' associations of the liquor and brewery industries to employ none but members of their respective trades and organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor in all the establishments controlled by them, and to purchase and offer for sale only such products as are produced under union conditions and bear the union label. The resolution was adopted.

Bro. Emanuel Koveleski was unanimously re-elected vice-president of the federation.

The Trade Union Liberty League held its session prior to the opening of the State convention, and transacted considerable business of importance to the men engaged directly or indirectly in the liquor industry. Brother DeYoung, of Local 70, Brooklyn, was elected to the presidency of the league, and Brothers Toby and Nolan were elected as members of the board of trustees and vice-president respectively.

The delegates representing our International Union held a session at the headquarters of Local 175, and a number of matters of interest to our organizations in the State were discussed. A buffet lunch was served in honor of their visit.

We were honored with a visit from Bro. Michael Goldsmith, secretary of Local 108, Cleveland, during the convention. "Mike" was called on to address the delegates, and he delivered to them one of the most sterling and aggressive talks on the question of prohibition, closer affiliation of the toilers and the elimination of all "isms," that it has been my pleasure to listen to in many a day. His talk was well received.

During the month I visited the general office and took up several matters with the General Secretary.

On the 10th I visited Toledo and met with the Local Joint Executive Board in order to adjust some matters that were pending before that body.

Several reports have been received in this office from organizations that took part in the Labor Day parades. Some of our locals were the recipients of prizes for the best-appearing men in line. In all, our locals who participated in the Labor Day parades in their respective cities are to be congratulated for the interest that they displayed in taking part in the same.

The following is my expense account for the month:

To Cincinnati	$10 50
Pullman	2 50
To Toledo	4 05
Pullman	2 00
To Buffalo	7 25
Pullman	2 00
Postage	7 00
Car fare, checking and telegrams.....	92
Traveling expenses	9 00
Total	$45 22

Respectfully submitted,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 630.

AUGUST 28, 1915.

MR. LEONARD SMITH, Secretary Local 300, 69 Richmond street, E., Toronto, Ont.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me your request for a decision on the following:

"Do agreements renewed from year to year, where no changes are made in the same, have to pass through the L. J. E. B.?"

Where agreements are renewed from year to year and no changes are made, the original endorsement given to the same holds good, and they do not have to be resubmitted to the Local Joint Executive Board or the General Executive Board for re-endorsement.

With greetings. Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 631.

AUGUST 30, 1915.

MR. GEORGE H. McCUNE, Secretary Local 682,
507, Grier avenue, Elizabeth, N. J.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of the 26th, wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"Can a member in good standing, who is not working steady at the craft, being employed steady at some other kind of work in a factory or shop, consider himself in line for any extra work at dances, picnics or excursions?"

"Section 10. No member of our International Union holding a steady position other than covered by the jurisdiction of our International shall be allowed to work at any of our allied crafts at one and the same time."

If the member is holding a steady position in a factory or shop, or is engaged steady in any position other than that covered by the jurisdiction of our International Union, he shall not be allowed to work at any of our allied crafts, steady or extra, while so employed.

With greetings. Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 632.

SEPTEMBER 1, 1915.

MR. BERT CLANCY, Secretary Local 680, Box 774,
Miami, Ariz.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me your request for a decision on the following:

"Bro. J. Karapatas transferred to Local 380 last year; worked there a while and allowed himself to fall in arrears for dues. Later he returned and they allowed him to work a month, and when they requested him to reinstate himself he refused and quit his position and came to Miami. We wrote to Bisbee in reference to his reinstatement and they advised us that they had placed a fine of $5 against him for violating a section of their agreement with their employers, in that he quit in the middle of his shift. We are holding the amount of the fine in escrow pending your decision as to its legality."

Brother Karapatas submits the following affidavit:

"Gus Karapatas, first being duly sworn, deposes and says that during the month of May, 1915, he was employed by William Truax, in Bisbee, Ariz., and while in his employ as waiter, he gave his employer notice that he intended to resign his position as waiter the following day.

"Affiant further says that he did not leave the above position in the middle of his shift without notice."

Local 380 submits the following affidavit, signed and sworn to by the secretary and the chef who was employed in the restaurant and was present at the time the interview between the secretary and Brother Karapatas took place and when he quit his position:

"John Tyler and John Radovich, first by me being duly sworn, depose and say that on or about in the month of May, A. D. 1915, that Gus Karapatas was working in the English Kitchen Restaurant at Bisbee, Ariz., and did quit work on a certain date—the exact date to us of which is unknown—at 10:00 a. m., having worked but four hours of a ten-hour shift, when told that he would not be allowed to work longer without paying his dues. He made use of an oath and said the union could go to hell."

In reviewing this case I am giving some consideration to the statement made to you by Brother Karapatas, giving as his reason for refusing to pay his reinstatement fee to Local 380, that a former secretary of Local 380 had spent some of the funds of the said local. Had Brother Karapatas been a good standing member of the local union, he possibly would have had cause to grieve over the loss of this money by the local, but under the circumstances I am forced to conclude that the defiant attitude that he displayed towards Local 380 while working in their jurisdiction, and his refusal to reinstate himself to membership, was not due so much to the reason that he gives, but more in an effort to evade the payment of his reinstatement fee and monthly dues to Local 380.

While he submits in his affidavit that he gave his employer a day's notice, and that he did not leave in the middle of his shift, the secretary and chef who was present at the time certify that he used vilifying terms towards the local union and did quit his position after having worked four hours out of a ten-hour shift, which was a violation of the laws and regulations of the said Local 380.

In consideration of these facts, I do hereby sustain the action of Local 380, and you are requested to remit the amount of the said fine ($5) now held by you in escrow to Local 380.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,
EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 633.

SEPTEMBER 2, 1915.

MR. LARRY L. CHASE, Secretary Local 403, 11 El Dorado street, N., Stockton, Cal.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me the charges filed by Locals 403 and 572 against Local 30, which are as follows:

"We, the undersigned members of Locals 572 and 403, of Stockton, Cal., do hereby prefer charges against Local 30, of San Francisco, for violation of our International Constitution by sending members of Local 30 to work in the Stockton Hotel when they were instructed that said house was on the official unfair list. We will state the members that were working in the Hotel Stockton between the years 1913 and up to the present time are as follows: Fred Cledanials, Mike McGary, O. K. Peterson, Jimmie Ford, Joe Hall, Ben Gordon, Tony Cornelius, Ray Merrill, Harry Wells, Johnson, Bartlett and Garfield. Will say that since then Tony Cornelius and Harry Wells transferred into Local 561, and when Local 561 was notified that they had scabbed at the Hotel Stockton, they took action against them and they were expelled by Local 561."

The following statement was submitted by Local 30:

"I received yours of the 6th inst. today, and was much surprised to understand that the matter of the Stockton charges is still pending, as I believed that the explanation given by me to the G. E. B. in session here would be sufficient to dispose of the matter.

"However, I will repeat the statements made before the G. E. B. as briefly as possible:

"It is true that we received a communication from the secretary of Stockton in regards to the Stockton Hotel, and it is also true that said communication was on the blackboard in our headquarters for nearly a year. The names that were mentioned in said communication were compared with our membership roster and all cards of the members in good standing, as well as suspended. The names of those mentioned were noted, to the effect that the members were reported scabbing by Stockton local, so that when they reported for reinstatement the matter could be taken up. Now three of the men reported in said letter have appeared before the board for reinstatement, namely Fred Clendaniel, Tony Cornelius and O. K. Peterson, and the cases of these members were considered by the general body and, upon evidence submitted, the body decided to reinstate said members, as there appeared to be some dispute as to the facts, as claimed by said members, that ex-Secretary Hanson, of Stockton, who you probably remember absconded with the funds of Local 572, had collected dues from said members while working in the Stockton Hotel, telling them that he would fix this matter up. Now this statement was made by those men separately, on separate occasions, and as we had no means to either verify them or have them contradicted, inasmuch as Hanson was missing, we had to give them the benefit of the doubt, thinking that it would be much better for the future discipline of the organization to have the men within our folds than without. The men in question were reinstated, but all of them, except Fred Clendaniel, who is still a member here, took traveling cards and do not now belong to Local 30.

"I have submitted to the G. E. B. the original cards of the men in question, showing you that these cards were really marked as claimed by me, and that we have done all we could to fix up this matter in a just manner, but we do not believe that revenge is the proper thing for a labor union to pursue; rather a little leniency and a good calling down would have the effect to make these men useful members of the organized labor movement. While the men are decidedly wrong, we believe that a little mercy is the better cure in this case than severity, inasmuch as there was some dispute as to the facts in the case.

"Brother Redenbaugh has admitted to you in my presence that Local 30 has at all times done its level best to help Local 572, and we do that with all other locals. As to Brother Chase, the less said the better. He has not been connected with the Stockton local long enough to know the ins and outs of the case, and I believe that if it was not for some momentary inspiration of Brother Chase this matter would never have come up, as Local 572 has never had any cause to complain of our actions.

"I hope that you will see your way clear to dismiss these charges, inasmuch as I have, I think, clearly shown that we have at all times acted in good faith and in the only manner possible, and we do not desire to have the good feeling existing between the locals disrupted. In this expectation I beg to subscribe myself."

The representatives of the interested locals appeared before the General Executive Board while they were in session in San Francisco and, after hearing their statements, the board concluded to refer the matter to this office for further investigation and consideration.

The points brought out by the evidence submitted are: That Local 30 had full knowledge that the Stockton Hotel was on the unfair list, and that they posted said notice on the blackboard at their headquarters. While the charge is made that Local 30 sent their men to the Stockton Hotel after they received the above notice, yet there is no positive evidence that they did, and in the absence of that evidence Local 30 is entitled to the benefit thereof. However, Local 30 did have knowledge that some of their members were working at the said hotel, which was a violation of their oath of membership and all principles of trade unionism. It is charged that Local 30 accepted the dues of some of these men, but it was argued by the representatives of Local 30 that if they did, that they had no knowledge that they were working in the said hotel. A large majority of the men who worked in the said hotel allowed themselves to become suspended. However, when these men returned to the jurisdiction of Local 30 they made application for reinstatement and the action referred to in the brief filed by the secretary of Local 30 was taken.

It is my judgment that the reinstatement of these men for the reasons given did not serve the best interests of the trade union movement or the principles that it represents. Nor did it carry with it the thought that Local 30 was entirely blameless in the premises. I believe in leniency, maybe in just as large a measure as any one else, but when the very foundation upon which our structure is built is undermined and members deliberately scab on a sister organization and then try and hide behind the cloak of some untrustworthy official, they are entitled to more severe discipline than the word leniency implies. When Local 30 first received knowledge that any of their members were working at the Hotel Stockton, whether they were active or suspended, they should have proceeded against them in accordance with Sections 169 and 170, and expelled them from membership. Had they done that, they would have done their full duty to the principles that they represent.

In conclusion, I desire to say that while I do not find Local 30 guilty of the charge of sending men to the Stockton Hotel while said hotel was on the unfair list of a sister organization, I do find them guilty of making a serious error in accepting the reinstatement of the men mentioned. I desire to compliment Local 561, of Sacramento, for the prompt and aggressive action they took when the matter was brought to their attention. There is only one punishment for a traitor to the cause that he represents, and that is his expulsion from the society of other men.

With greetings. Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 634.

SEPTEMBER 4, 1915:

MR. HUGO ERNST, Secretary Local 30, 14 Seventh street, San Francisco, Cal.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of the 30th ult., wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"A man owns his team and does some teaming during the week, sometimes for six days, and on Saturday and Sunday nights he works at balls and dances selling drinks; he is a member in good standing and has been so for a number of years; is he entitled to work Saturdays and Sundays at our craft, or have we the right to stop him?"

"Section 10. No member of our International Union holding a steady position other than covered by the jurisdiction of our International shall be allowed to work at any of our allied crafts at one and the same time."

If a member is holding a steady position or working steady at some calling other than that coming under the jurisdiction of our International, whether it be for himself as owner, or for some one else, is immaterial. The fact that he is steadily engaged in following some other occupation disqualifies him from engaging in either steady or extra work at any of our allied crafts.

The member that you refer to above is not entitled to work at any of our allied crafts an Saturdays or Sundays while he is engaged at some other occupation during the balance of the week.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 635.

SEPTEMBER 13, 1915.

MR. JACK GILLAN, Secretary, Local 339, 205½ First street, Portland, Ore.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of the 6th, wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"Two members of our local became proprietors on the first day of July, 1915. On the same day they became suspended for non-payment of dues. Later they applied for reinstatement, and they were charged a fine for non-attendance at meeting in July, which they paid under protest.

"Can passive members be fined for non-attendance at meetings? Can any member be fined for non-attendance after he has become suspended? Did the local do right in insisting upon the payment of the fine by the above referred to passive members?"

Passive members are not entitled to a voice or vote in the affairs of our local unions, and a local union has a right to deny to passive members a right to attend meetings. Under these conditions it is hardly fair to assume that a local union can force a passive member to attend meetings. Therefore the action of Local 339 in penalizing the two referred to members for failing to attend a meeting in July, when they became passive members on the 1st day of July, was illegal, and the members referred to are entitled to the return of said fines.

In the matter of penalizing suspended members for non-attendance at meetings while under suspension, I desire to say that, in so far as our laws do not permit of a suspended member attending meetings of our local unions, the act of fining them for non-attendance can hardly be construed as being consistent or legal. Therefore my decision is that local unions can not fine a suspended member for non-attendance at meetings while under suspension.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 636.

SEPTEMBER 14, 1915.

MR. R. MARDOCK, Secretary Local 35, 167 N. La Salle street, Chicago, Ill.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of the 7th, wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"Bro. William Weeks deposited a withdrawal card on March 22, 1915, and on September 7, 1915, he was nominated for the office of secretary. The president ruled that he was not eligible to run for office, as he had not held membership for six months prior to nominations, as provided for in Section 6 of Article IV of the by-laws. The last day of nominations is September 14, 1915."

"Article IV, Section 6. A member, to be entitled to hold an elective office, must have been a member of this local in good standing for six months prior to nomination."

"Brother Weeks holds that, having paid his dues for the month of March, that the time of his membership starts from the first day of that month instead of the 22d, the day on which he deposited his withdrawal card."

The date from which Brother Weeks' memberships starts is the day on which his withdrawal card was accepted by the local union. The fact that he paid dues for the month of March at the time did not date his membership back to the first of that month. The six-months period provided for by your local by-laws would not expire until the 22d day of September, 1915. If nominations are acceptable under your laws after that date, then he would be eligible to be nominated, but if the last day for nominations was on September 14, as stated in your letter, then Brother Weeks would not be eligible to be nominated.

Assuming that Brother Weeks deposited his withdrawal card on March 22, 1915, and the last day for nominations was September 14, 1915, under Section 6 of Article IV of your local by-laws, he would not be eligible for nomination to an elective office within the gift of the local union.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 637.

SEPTEMBER 15, 1915.

MR. THEO. LASK, Secretary Local 376, 3101 E Ninety-second street, S. Chicago, Ill.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me the complaint filed by Local 141 against Bro. Eugene Sullivan for failing to deposit his traveling card with said local when working under their jurisdiction, having held a withdrawal card from Local 376 at the time. He has since been reinstated to membership by Local 376 and at the present time holds membership in the said Local 376, and Local 141 now demands the penalty provided for in Section 13.

I find the claim of Local 141 legal, and do hereby direct Local 376 to collect the penalty of $5, as provided for in Section 13, from the said Bro. Eugene Sullivan and transmit the same to this office. And the said Eugene Sullivan is hereby suspended from membership in this International Union until the said fine is paid. Local 376 is further directed to make note of this suspension on their next monthly report to the International Union.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 638.

SEPTEMBER 15, 1915.

MR. THOMAS GERRAUGHTY, Acting Secretary Local 77, 183 Court street, Boston, Mass.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me the protest of Local 77 against the membership of Paul J. Urbsho, who was elected and initiated into membership by Local 256 in violation of Section 11.

Local 77 contends that Mr. Urbsho was a resident of their city for eight years prior to his leaving there about six months ago. That he left the jurisdiction of Local 77 for the purpose of becoming a member of the International Union and transferring back to Local 77. He worked as a bartender for about two months in Bridgeport, joined Local 256 and took out a traveling card and presented it to Local 77. They protested his membership on the grounds that Section 11 was violated, in so far that the consent of Local 77 was not asked or received.

I requested Local 256, under date of August 16, and again under date of August 31, for a statement in reference to this matter. Both communications were ignored and no statement filed. This action on the part of Local 256 forces me to accept their silence as an admission of their guilt, and do so construe it.

I do therefore sustain the protest of Local 77, and do hereby cancel the membership of Paul J. Urbsho in this International Union, and do further declare the traveling card issued to him by Local 256 null and void.

I do further find Local 256 guilty of a violation of Section 11 of the International Union constitution, and do penalize them in the sum of $5, which amount shall be remitted to the general office within fifteen days from date. Failing to so remit, said local union will stand suspended from all rights and privileges of the International Union until further notice.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,
EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 639.

SEPTEMBER 20, 1915.

MR. HARRY OVERMYER, Secretary Local 216, 520 Adam street, Toledo, O.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me the claim of Bro. James F. Miller, a member of Local 216, for sick stamps from January 1, 1915, to date. Upon investigation I find that on December 1, 1914, Brother Miller became a suspended member, and that on the 10th day of December, 1914, he paid his dues for October, November and December, 1914, and became reinstated to membership, and that he was not in benefit standing with Local 216 at the time that he reported sick. He, however, had reinstated himself prior to becoming sick, hence was a good standing member of the International Union and entitled to his rights to sick stamps, as provided for in Section 165, during the said illness. I find that Brother Miller was taken sick on December 29, 1914, and was operated on in a hospital on January 9, 1915; left the hospital March 22, but was unable to follow his usual vocation. On July 1 he accepted light employment, but on July 25 he had to return to the hospital. On August 25 he was removed from the hospital to the home of his sister, and is still unable to follow his usual occupation, but expects to be able to resume work about October 1. (The above data is taken from a statement of Brother Miller's.)

In view of the above facts, I do find that Bro. James F. Miller, having become sick on December 29, and having reported the same to Local 216, and they having knowledge of his financial condition, that he was entitled to privileges accorded him by Section 165, and Local 216 should have credited him on the first day of each month during his illness with his dues for the said month, the same to be regarded as a loan to the said member, to be repaid within a reasonable time after said member is enabled to assume his regular occupation. It is my judgment that the effort made by Brother Miller to resume work in July, after which he had to return to the hospital, should not be counted as having released him from his right to sick stamps, and I therefore direct that Local 216 do credit him with his dues, in accordance with Section 165, from the first day of January, 1915, to the first day of October, 1915, and to issue him a traveling card, if he makes a request for one, upon the payment of ten cents, which is the cost of the said card. This card to be issued conditionally: that as soon thereafter as he is able to resume work, that he remit to Local 216 the amount of money loaned to him for the payment of his dues for the months noted above.

The above decision does not hold that he is entitled to any sick benefits from Local 216, as at the time of reporting sick he was not a good standing member of sufficient length of time in accordance with their by-laws to entitle him to such benefits.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,
EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 640.

SEPTEMBER 20, 1915.

MR. JOHN B. THIERY, Secretary Local 4, 1314 Hudson street, Hoboken, N. J.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of the 16th, wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"Is it necessary for managers and headwaiters in union establishments to be active members of the International Union?"

While our law says that managers and headwaiters shall not be issued withdrawal cards, it has been held that where an employer engages other than a member of our International Union to manage his establishment, and where the said party, in his capacity as manager, does not perform any of the functions coming under the jurisdiction of our allied crafts, that it is not compulsory for him to become a member. However, if he in any manner, temporary or otherwise, performs, or attempts to perform, any of the functions coming under the jurisdiction of any of our allied crafts, then it is necessary for him to become a member.

In the case of headwaiters, they are under the jurisdiction of our International Union, and must become members of our International Union in order to enjoy the privilege of working under union conditions.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,
EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

SEPTEMBER 22, 1915.

MR. ROBERT BOYLE, Secretary Local 543, 710 Commercial street, Danville, Ill.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me the protest of Local 543 against the membership of George Hermann, who was elected and initiated into membership by Local 767 in violation of Section 11, as well as Section 8.

I find that George Hermann made application to Local 543, May 16, 1915, and his application was rejected June 6, 1915. Under date of July 14, 1915, he made application to Local 767, and was accepted and initiated under date of July 21, 1915. On his application filed with Local 767 he fails to state what his business is and how long he has followed it, but gives his place of employment as Bill Keeting's foundry, and his former place of employment as Hammond, Ind.

The above action was in violation of Sections 8 and 11 of the International constitution, hence the membership of said George Hermann is not legal, and I do hereby cancel the same and I do further declare the traveling card issued to him to be null and void. Local 767 is directed to make note on its next report to the International of the above cancellation.

Local 767 being practically a new organization, I am condoned to allow this matter to pass with a reprimand, but should it occur again, I will have to administer the penalty provided for the said violation.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 642.

SEPTEMBER 22, 1915.

MR. HUGH A. MORAN, Westminster Hotel, Scranton, Pa.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me your appeal from the action of Local 134 in penalizing you the sum of $16 for a violation of their agreement.

It is held by Local 134 that you left the employ of Mr. R. P. McHugh without giving at least a week's notice, which is required by Article VIII of the agreement.

In your affidavit you certify that you went to your employer, Mr. R. P. McHugh and told him that you was going to leave his employment, and he told you you could go that evening and he would waive his right to a week's notice. You also submit an affidavit from Mr. McHugh certifying to the fact that you came to him and told him you were going to leave his service, and he told you you could go that evening and he would waive his right to a week's notice to which he was entitled by the terms of his agreement with Local 134.

In reply Local 134 contends that you had no right to violate any article of their agreement with Mr. McHugh, even though Mr. McHugh agreed to the same.

The agreement made and agreed to between Mr. R. P. McHugh as the party of the first part, and Bartenders' League, Local 134, as party of the second part, is a legal instrument, wherein both parties agree to abide by the articles of the said agreement for the term of one year, and no agent, employe or member of either party has a right to abrogate any part of the said agreement without the mutual consent of both parties to the agreement, the employer as party of the first part and Bartenders' League, Local 134, as party of the second part.

Had Brother Moran advised Local 134 of the fact that Mr. McHugh was willing to waive his rights to a week's notice, and it was agreed on the part of Local 134 to accept said waiver, then the act of Brother Moran, having been agreed to by both parties to the agreement, would not be considered as a violation of the said agreement. However, the party of the second part not having been consulted, nor its consent obtained, the act of the party of the first part can not be construed as absolving the member of the party of the second part from carrying out his part of the referred to agreement.

The appeal is therefore denied.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 643.

SEPTEMBER 23, 1915.

MR. D. P. SHIELNS, Secretary Local 609, 1201 Second avenue, S., Great Falls, Mont.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of the 20th, wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"How long is a local supposed to carry members who are out of employment? We have several members who are out of employment, and have been for the past nine or ten months, and some of them have put in claims for sick benefits."

Section 60, International Union constitution, says: "Any local or member being two calendar months in arrears stands suspended forthwith."

Article VIII, Section 4, of your local by-laws says: "Members unable to pay their dues, through sickness or lack of employment, may have the same remitted by a majority vote of the union; provided, that such sickness or inability to secure employment has not been brought on by intoxication or other excesses."

If a member out of employment and unable to pay his dues should appear before the local union and request the said local to pay his dues for the current month or month following current month, Local 609, in accordance with Article VIII, Section 4, of their by-laws, could, by a majority vote, pay the said member's dues for that month, and the same request would have to be renewed from month to month so long as the said member was out of employment. If the member failed to make his request each month and allowed himself to become more than two calendar months in arrears, he would become suspended from membership.

As to the length of time that a member may continue to make his request and the local union allow him his dues while out of employment, that is a matter for the local union to decide. Your by-laws place no limit on the time and, therefore, the local union could, at any time the request is made, refuse the same. But so long as a member's dues were paid (unemployed member) by a majority vote of the local union each month, that member would be entitled to all the rights and privileges, as well as benefits, accorded to a member in good standing.

With greetings, Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

WHAT A DIFFERENCE A FEW HOURS MAKE

Brown was unemployed, had been for weeks; he needed the money. He wrote for a job to a former employer in another city. The employer advised him to come to work at 8 o'clock the following Monday, and Brown was overjoyed.

Brown tarried to talk to an acquaintance, he arrived at the depot three minutes late—the train had departed. Brown departed on a later train, arrived two hours late; the job he was promised was given to another man. Brown was miserable.

Moral—Be on time: promptness is an excellent and paying habit.

WHAT OUR ORGANIZERS ARE DOING

SEATTLE, WASH., Sept. 26, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Find enclosed my report for the month of September.

For the first time in years the culinary workers have a chance to come into their own, as far as Omaha goes, for they sure have got a good start, and the last meeting was some surprise to those cooks and waiters who have said it can't be done in Omaha. Why, the very fact that the opposition went too far was the best card I could have. For when a bunch of props get together and tell a cook or waiter that it is a choice of their jobs or the union, nine times out of ten the boys will say "Union for them;" and that is what they are saving in Omaha.

Local 246 is up against the same proposition. The retail liquor dealers saw fit to lay the request of the Central Body on the table, and at the present time have their hammer out. I could write a long letter on the way they treated our local and the Central Body, but what's the use? Just going to mention that Nebraska has a State-wide fight on in 1916.

I received orders to proceed to Seattle, Wash., and report to Vice-President Heskett. Will take up the work here in my next report.

Find enclosed my expense account for the month of September:

Local car fare in Omaha.....	$2 00
Five round trips to Council Bluffs.....	1 00
Five trips to South Omaha and return.....	50
Transfer of baggage.....	1 00
Postage for month.....	50
Transportation to Seattle.....	59 65
Total	$64 65

CHICAGO, ILL., Sept. 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—My report for the month follows:

Aug. 28th, general work in the Loop District.
Aug. 30th, conference with liquor dealers.

Sept. 1st, attended conference of Liquor Dealers' Council.

Sept. 3d, attended meeting of the Roseland liquor dealers; large meeting; remarks well received.

Sept. 4th, attended special meeting of the Cook County Liquor Dealers' Association.

Sept. 7th, attended meeting of the Calumet liquor dealers.

Sept. 8th, worked in conjunction with Third Vice-President Foster and Organizer Lyons, relative to circularizing the members of the Liquor Dealers' Association.

Sept. 9th, conference with several of the officials of the Liquor Dealers.

Sept. 11th, conference with Mr. Halle, Secretary of the National Retail Liquor Dealers' Organization.

Sept. 13th, conference with M. J. McCarthy, State Secretary of the Illinois Liquor Dealers, relative to letter to be sent out to the members of their organization.

During the rest of the month I have attended meetings of the Stationary Firemen, Engineers, Plumbers, Carpenters, Bridge Tenders, Brick Makers, Cement Workers, Leather Workers, Painters and Sheet Metal Workers, besides several meetings of Bartenders' Locals 649, 507 and 456. I have also worked in conjunction with Organizer Hobby on the Chicago Waiters' Association's proposition, of which, no doubt, he will give full particulars.

My expenses for the month are as follows:

Car fare	$2 50
Postage	50
Stationery	30
Telephone	50
Total	$3 80

Yours Fraternally,

JERE F. McCARTHY,
International Organizer.

PUEBLO, Colo., Sept. 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month:

Aug. 26th, came to Pueblo.

Aug. 28th, to Denver, in connection with a case before the Industrial Commission over a house card; and we feel that there will be a great deal of good come from the case and consider it was time well spent.

Aug. 30th, to Colorado Springs. Visited most of the members while on duty and most all the proprietors, and I consider the outlook for Local 52 very good, although they are passing through their most critical period.

Sept. 2d, to Trinidad. I did not find enough culinary workers there to maintain a local, and the time is not yet right to attempt to put in a local there.

Sept. 14th, to Denver, to attend the annual convention of the State Federation of Labor.

On Sept. 17th attended meeting of Local Joint Board meeting of Locals 8, 14, and 18, and matters of much importance were disposed of, to the satisfaction of all concerned.

On Sept. 19th attended meeting of Local 8.

On Sept. 20th attended meeting of Local 14.

The rest of the week attended the convention.

I believe that the labor movement in the State will derive a great deal of good from the work that was done in that convention, and most especially the miscellaneous trades.

I have not organized any local this month. I refuse to work up an enthusiasm among a small number of craftsmen and put in a charter in a place were it will go defunct as soon as I am out of town.

I am not going to pretend to say whether I have done any good in my meandering over the State in the last month or not. I will leave that to others to judge, and the results will tell in time.

I find an apathy to exist and some misunderstanding in and between some of the locals in the State that must and, I believe, will be overcome soon.

The following are my expenses for the month:

Aug. 26—Los Vages to Pueblo.....	$ 8 90
Sleeper	1 50
" 28—Denver and return.....	6 40
" 30-31—Colorado Springs and return..	3 10
Sept. 2—Trinidad and return.....	4 90
" 10—Colorado Springs and return....	3 10
" 14-23—Denver and return.....	6 40
Transfer	1 00
Stamps	50
 Total	$35 80

With best wishes, I beg to remain,

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Sept. 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report:

Aug. 26th. Addressed the meeting of Central Labor Union of Hudson County.

Aug. 27th. Afternoon in New York City, working in the interest of Bartenders' Local 118; evening to Essex Trades Council, Newark, N. J.

Aug. 28th. Jersey City, in conference with James Muldoon, the new Business Agent of Bartenders' Local 488.

Aug. 30th. Attended meeting of Joint Board, New York City.

Aug. 31st. At meeting of Local 488.

Sept. 1st. At meeting of Bartenders' Local 244, New York City. Evening to meeting of downtown Bartenders' Local 118, to install the newly-elected officers.

Sept. 2d. In Jersey City, in conference with representatives of bartenders and culinary workers.

Sept. 3d. To Hoboken, to headquarters of Local 10, to hear grievances against Local 575, Jersey City Sister local. Amicable adjustment.

Sept. 4th. To home of Local 118, New York City, to carry out instructions of President Flore and General Office. Report sent in on same.

Sept. 6th. Attended picnic of C. L. U. and Building Trades Council at Grand View Park, Jersey City; grand success.

Sept. 7th. To Paterson, N. J., to meeting of bar boys at Labor Institute. Some dissatisfaction here among the members, but found a solution for the problem which, I believe, has overcome some of the obstacles in the way.

Sept. 8th. To meeting of Local 118, New York City.

Sept. 9th. With Sister Donner, of Waitresses, New York City. Addressed the Central Labor Union of Hudson County, N. J.

CHICAGO, ILL., Sept. 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of September:

On Sept. 2d, attended the meeting of the L. J. E. B. Vice-President Foster informed the delegates in attendance that he had detailed Organizers Hobby, Martel and Brady to look after the interests of the culinary workers, and Organizers McCarthy, Lyons and Foster to look after the interests of the bartenders.

Sept. 3d, we held a conference in Vice-President Maloney's office with the official representatives of the culinary locals, and decided to work on the following places: The Henrici, Anderson and Marx restaurants. We made several futile attempts to locate Mr. W. E. Anderson, and we finally agreed to pass him up for a while, as he is a hard man to locate.

After several visits to The Henrici place, we finally secured an interview with Manager Collins; and after a most thorough review of his trouble with the local culinary workers, we found that he was a hard nut to crack, but we will try him again, however, in the near future.

On Sept. 21st we succeeded in signing up the Marx Company's places on Madison street, and this means a closed shop for these places after October 1. These three places employ about seventy-five people.

On Sept. 22d we visited the Knab place and talked with Mr. Knab for about two hours, and made arrangements for another interview on Sept. 28th. We hope to be able to sign up the Knab place on that date.

All the rest of our time was put in with the Grievance Committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor, working on the Chicago Waiters' Association; and the proposition that we submitted for their consideration was acted on favorably at their regular meeting on Sept. 13th, and all arrangements have been made for a special meeting of the C. W. A., to be held in K. P. Hall, on Sept. 29th. This organization has a membership of about 850, and the chances look bright for being able to swing them over into our International Union.

My expenses for the past month are as follows:

Local car fare for month.....	$5 60
Stationery and postage.....	1 10
Telephone service	80

HOUSTON, TEXAS, Sept. 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of September, including the last six days of August:

In my last report I told you something of the great hurricane which struck Galveston and almost wiped that city from the earth on August 16th and 17th. I had just been able to get into the city; and while I thought at the time the city was in bad shape, I learned later that I had not told the half. After wiring to headquarters the conditions I found in Galveston, I soon received aid from our General Secretary for our suffering members, with instructions to see after our needy members of Houston, Galveston and Port Arthur. Finding our people had not been hurt in Houston, I immediately went to Galveston and did my best to assist the most needy. And then to Port Arthur for me, where I found that our local in Beaumont had taken care of our people in Port Arthur; and to use the words of many of our members in Port Arthur, "What Beaumont Bartenders' Local 751 did not do for our members in Port Arthur could not be done." After finding that the members in Port Arthur had been taken care of, and after I contributed to a few who had lost practically all they had, I took the money I had brought to Port Arthur and went back to Galveston, where I distributed it to such members as needed it the worst, and notified headquarters. I soon received another check from the general secretary for $500, with instructions to take care of our suffering members the very best way possible with the limited amount of funds at my command.

At this writing things are moving along smoothly and most of our people are working in Galveston, but many of them have lost everything they possessed and the places where they were employed were washed away and their jobs are gone likewise.

On September 20th, Galveston got water connection, just five weeks after the great storm. The railroads have been able to move trains in and out of the city by means of a skeleton causeway, made by driving piling and laying track along this skeleton trestle; but it makes one feel shaky to cross over on this track, it taking something like an hour to pass over.

It is not necessary for me to try to tell all about this great disaster, as it would take hours to write it and pages of our journal to print it. It was awful. The water ran 18 miles inland and drowned all live stock in that part which was flooded. There are millions of fish lying along the railroad track dead and boats of every description for miles inland. No less than ten large ocean-going ships were blown and washed ashore and are still standing on dry land today. Thousands of homes were wrecked and torn to pieces and are scattered for 15 miles over the prairie inland, and every kind of household goods are to be seen. I saw a piano lying alongside of the railroad tracks fully five miles from the bay.

I hope it never falls to my lot to witness another such disaster. I am surprised, after looking over the ground, that there was a single person in Galveston saved. Think of a wind blowing from 90 to 125 miles an hour for 36 hours. The great sea wall saved the city from total destruction. There is not a crack in the sea wall, but if it had given way there would be nothing where Galveston now stands but water. As it was, the water stood from six to seven feet over every part of the city.

My expense account is as follows:

August 30 to September 2, Galveston and return via Texas City, and ferryage....	$3 50
Sept. 3 to 5—Port Arthur and return.....	6 00
6th to 8th—Galveston and return.....	2 50

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of September:

Brothers Hobby, Brady and myself, having been assigned to the culinary end of organizing, we went into the conference with the officers of the different culinary locals for the purpose of outlining an effective plan of action. We decided to send out promissory applications in postal card form, to be addressed to Bro. J. Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, who is ready at all times to give us a helping hand; we also had some circular letters printed and sent them out to the cooks. The work in getting the residence address of the cooks is a tedious one, but is necessary and it took up considerable time, but we hope it was not in vain and that good results will follow. We had a talk with Mr. C. Collins of Henrici's and Mr. Knab of Knab's Restaurants. Mr. Collins absolutely refuses to listen to organizing his place; Mr. Knab proved more conciliatory, although he would not commit himself one way or another; we will see him again on the 28th. We also had several conferences with Messrs. August and Henry Marx, proprietors of three saloon-restaurants; we were successful in convincing those two gentlemen that it would be to their advantage to unionize their houses and on the 21st of September they signed the agreement we had submitted; this means that 13 bartenders, 13 waiters, 8 oystermen and 4 women cooks will have to join the different locals here. Our next goal is the Berghof, also a large establishment.

On the 25th, Sister Maloney and I went to the Rogers Lunch Room and left the agreement with the owners, who promised to sign it. I will not dwell on the waiters' situation, as Brother Hobby, who is at the head of that committee, will no doubt give a full report of what was done in that field. There will be a big mass meeting for the waiters on the 29th of this month.

I attended all the meetings of Local 865, the Chicago Federation of Labor and the Local Joint Executive Board, and wish to report that our work is progressing favorably.

My expense account for the month is as follows:

Car fare	$ 5 00
Phone	75
Postage	98
Total.....	$ 6 73

CHICAGO, ILL., Sept. 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month:

I will only mention the most important matters taken up by myself and colleagues during the month as no doubt our work is being covered by them.

We have made an earnest effort to adjust the differences that exist between our International Union in this city and Henrici Restaurant Company, but have been unsuccessful so far, and I am of the opinion that it will be some time before we will be able to make an adjustment with that concern, as the management seem determined to continue to run a non-union business.

A considerable amount of time has been taken up with the chain of restaurants owned and operated by W. E. Anderson, but as yet we are not in a position to make a final report. We also had several conferences with George Knab. The chain of restaurants that he conducted at the time of the strike were taken over by the Delco Lunch Company, but he has recently taken one of them back and it is just possible that he will run them all again in the near future. This can be considered as unfinished business as we are still negotiating with Mr. Knab. We will hold another conference with him September 28th.

We were successful in signing up the Marx Lunch Company, managed by August Marx. I believe that this was a ten-strike on our part, as the three places run by him are located in the heart of the city, namely, 27 West Madison street, located in the McVicker Theater Building; 56 West Madison, corner Dearborn, and 64 West Madison street, corner Clark street. This will add considerable to our membership in the city as well as give us places in that locality where our union friends may find plenty of union bartenders, waiters, cooks and oystermen, to take care of their wants.

A large portion of our time was taken up in educational work with the officers and members of the Chicago Waiters' Association. The Grievance Committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor have held one or two meetings per week on this matter. They have been successful in bringing together a good, strong joint committee, as the enclosed letter to the Chicago Waiters' Association will show.

Chicago, Ill., August 26, 1915.

To the Officers and Members of the Chicago Waiters' Association, 115 W. Madison street.
Greeting:

Your Joint Conference Committee, having in view the importance of organization and unity of purpose among the waiters of Chicago, Ill., and recognizing the activity of those who are diametrically opposed to the catering industry (and other crafts as well), we therefore, the undersigned Joint Conference Committee, respectfully request the Chicago Waiters' Association to call a special meeting of their membership to consider the advancement of the waiters' interest in the city of Chicago wherein the undersigned members of the Joint Committee be allowed to participate.

Yours respectfully,

J. H. Walker, President; V. A. Olander, Secretary, Illinois State Federation of Labor.

A. A. Mayer, President, Waiters' Local Union No. 35.

John Fitzpatrick, President, Chicago Federation of Labor.

B. C. Dillon, C. D. Wheeler, Paul David, Grievance Committee, Chicago Federation of Labor.

Fred B. Hobby, Jerry F. McCarty, Josh Brady, International organizers of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League of America.

John H. Kennedy, President, Chicago Waiters' Association.

E. W. Parlee, Robt. L. Hall, Jos. P. Johnson, Chicago Waiters' Association Committee.

This proposition was acted upon by the Association at a regular meeting September 13th, favorably, and a mass meeting of their members has been called for Wednesday afternoon, Sept. 29th. The outlook is encouraging at this time.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Car fare	$ 4 75
Postage	1 50
Telephone	4 00
Exchange on checks.....	20
Rent for typewriter, July, August and September	5 00
Total.....	$15 45

CHICAGO, ILL., Sept. 29, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of September:

The conditions here have not advanced in an improved manner as much as the corps of organizers have desired since last report. We have a closed shop contract signed with the Marx Company and Aug. F. Marx, comprising three houses. We hope to report success on some other places in a short space of time. We have been ably assisted in our work by the Chicago Federation of Labor.

Visited Gary, Ind., September 26, 27, and 28 and found a large gathering of our locals in the State of Indiana for their meeting prior to the meeting of the Indiana State Federation of Labor, which convened Tuesday, September 29th.

My expenses for the month are as follows:

Local and suburban car fare.....	$ 4 50
Telephone (local)	3 00
Expense collecting cards, Local 702.....	7 00
Hall rent (Aug. 31).....	2 50

LOS ANGELES, CAL., Sept. 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of September:

Stockton, California, where the Merchants, Manufacturers and Employers' Association were under the impression they had vanquished organized labor, discovered very much to their own satisfaction that instead of a disrupted movement, organized labor was stronger and better than ever—the above was demonstrated on last Labor day. The parade was the best ever held, the spirit of the membership was a revelation to the M. M. & E. The picnic held at Oak Park was well attended. Andrew Furuseth, the one who has done so much to free the seamen from slavery, delivered the Labor day oration, and it was splendid and well received, not only by the members and sympathizers of organized labor, but many of the M. M. & E. were seen to applaud the speaker. The ball game between the bartenders and brewery workers was, to say the least, "some game." If the magnates of the big leagues desire some real talent, they better come towards Stockton; the result of the game was all one-sided, the bar boys winning the game by a score of 2 to 1.

Since my last report we have been able to sign up seven saloons and six restaurants, and the prospects are very good for the future.

August 31st, went to Santa Rosa, Cal., being called to that city by Bro. Tom Vitaich, organizer of the State Federation, to assist in getting together the bartenders and culinary workers, and after some strenuous work, Brother Vitaich sent for the charters.

September 10th, went to Los Angeles and assisted the business agents of Locals 17 and 284, Brothers Palmer and Hassel, and expect that in the near future we will have under our banner the largest and most popular cafe in the city. Attended the meeting of Waiters' Union Local 17, on September 16th and am glad to report that the local has improved wonderfully in the last few months. Attended the labor council meeting on the 17th, and the bartenders' meeting on the 23d. Local 284 is always on the job, getting good results for its members, but the attendance is very poor—something will have to be done to see that the membership, who have received so much, take a little more interest in their organization.

September 21st, went to San Bernardino, Cal.; attended the meeting of the labor council, and matters of importance to our locals were discussed and acted upon; next day went around with business agent of Local 673, Brother Nelson, and in the evening attended the meeting of his local and found a good spirit among the members. The bartenders' local is in very good shape—Business Agent Vardy is on the job all the time and he refuses to have any one slip one over on him.

September 24th, to San Diego; attended the meeting of Cooks and Waiters' Local 402 and found that it has sure made some great improvement. On the 26th, attended the meeting of Bartenders' Local 768, and was agreeably surprised when I was informed that the local had since the first day of August assessed its members one dollar per month between now and next state-wide prohibition election, for the purpose of defeating our enemies, and will soon start forming a Liberal League.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Aug. 31—Stockton to Santa Rosa.....	$ 3 60
Sept. 3—Santa Rosa to Stockton.....	3 60

PORTLAND, OREGON, Sept. 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I beg to submit this report for the past month:

Continuing the work of reconstructing the culinary situation in this city, and assisted by Bro. Henry Harder, secretary of Local 189, visited and addressed the following local organizations seeking co-operation in the campaign inaugurated: Regular meetings of both councils; regular meetings of Locals 189 and 339; U. A. of Steamfitters No. 235; Jitney Drivers' Union No. 183; Electrical Workers Nos. 125 and 481; Amalgamated Meat Cutters No. 143; Teamsters No. 162; Cement Workers No. 119; Bridge and Structural Iron Workers; Tile Layers and Helpers No. 42; Asbestos Workers; Building Laborers; Book Binders No. 90; Journeyman Barbers No. 75; Carpenters Nos. 808, 50 and 1106; Glaziers; Plasterers No. 82; Painters No. 10; Hoisting and Portable Engineers No. 372; Typographical Union No. 58, and was received everywhere with cordial courtesy and, judging by the battery of rapid-fire questions I was called up to answer, there can be no doubt our people will receive the support of the full strength of the local labor movement.

THE MIXER AND SERVER

Severely handicapped by lack of finances, Local 189 adopted a program requiring all members—in alphabetical order—to perform two hours picket duty or provide a substitute by paying the sum of 75 cents.

Instituted an active fight against the cafeteria and dairy lunch proprietors by placing Leighton's, 332 Washington street, on the unfair list and picketing same; conditions for workers in this establishment simply deplorable, cooks working in a suffocating underground kitchen twelve hours straight shift per day and seven days per week; waiters and countermen, eleven hour per day, seven days per week. Mr. Leighton boasts having made over $50,000 in the last few years—candidly admits the inhuman conditions prevailing in his establishment, but refuses to in any way remedy same. Strange to relate, his employees resent efforts of organization to improve conditions.

My expense account is as follows:

300 postal cards.....	$3 00
Typing and postage	1 00

Total.....	$4 00

LOS ANGELES, CAL., Sept. 15, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—My report for the month of September follows:

August 30th. Called on a proprietor and got waitresses' application.

August 31st. Called on Brownstein-Louis Company to get him to run a union house and he asked for more time to give an answer.

September 1st. Attended the regular meeting of Cooks' Local No. 27 and was requested to help in getting a wage scale up, with a committee from Local 27.

September 2nd. Attended the regular meeting of Waiters' Local 17.

September 3rd. With the business agent of Local 17, I called on a proprietor with whom the local has had a great deal of trouble, and he promised to give a definite answer later.

September 3rd. Attended meeting of the Central Labor Council.

September 6th. All members took part in the Labor Day parade. A large sum of money was raised to pay off the debt of the Labor Temple.

September 8th. Attended regular meeting of L. J. E. B. The request to put the house called New Haven on the unfair list, was turned over to a committee.

September 8th. Attended meeting of Local 27. I was requested to attend a meeting in conjunction with a committee from the Central Labor Union for the purpose of presenting a law to the Sanitary Inspector, the object of which was to place the inspection of restaurants on the new charter.

September 9th. Attended the regular meeting of Local 17, which was well attended. I was requested to visit a committee which had charge of a big celebration to be held here on September 15th and 16th, in order to have them employ union help.

September 10th. Attended meeting of Central Labor Council; they requested Locals 17, 27, and Local Joint Executive Board to put the New Haven Restaurant on the unfair list.

September 11th. Called on Bakers' union for the purpose of getting them to work in conjunction with the cooks, waiters and waitresses. The request was granted.

September 13th. Called on proprietor with a committee from the Central Labor Council and endeavored to get the New Haven Restaurant to sign up. He refuses to unionize his house.

September 14th. Held a special meeting for the waitresses.

September 15th. Called on proprietor in company with business agent of Local 17, at Woolwood, to get the help to join the union.

September 15th. Attended meeting of Local 27, which was well attended.

September 15th. Brownstein-Louis Company consented to have their help join the union.

The balance of my time was taken up working with the waitresses and general agitation.

The following is my expense account for the month :

Meeting notice and postage.....	$1 25

OAKLAND, CAL., Sept. 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of September:

On the 1st attended meeting of executive board of Local 31, also meeting of committee of fifteen.

On the 2nd, regular meeting of Local 31, also meeting of the union club, officers and directors for the following term being elected.

On the 3rd attended meeting of Local 525, which was very poorly attended. Considering the amount of business which is transacted at every meeting of this local, I can't for the life of me see why the membership don't take more interest in the union. The officials of Local 525 have just succeeded in raising the minimum scale for the membership, but to judge from the interest displayed by the men employed at the craft in Oakland, one would imagine that the question of hours and wages was a very small item.

September 5th and 6th were celebrated by the labor unionists in the Oakland district in a befitting manner, the Oakland unionists celebrating at Idora Park, and the San Francisco unionists at the fair grounds, where they had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Frank Walsh of the Industrial Relations Commission.

On the 7th, meeting of the Local Joint Executive Board.

On the 8th, the committee of fifteen, and the Executive Board of Local 31.

On the 9th (the Native Sons' Day), little business done, that being one of the principal holidays of California.

On the 10th, 11th and 12th, no meetings.

On the 13th, attended Central Labor Council, there being considerable to do since the council had not met for two weeks. A resolution submitted by the Building Trades Council of Milwaukee, requesting the American Federation of Labor to discontinue accepting the credentials of fraternal delegates from the church, was approved and forwarded to the California State Federation of Labor convention.

On the 15th, attended meetings of executive board and committee of fifteen of Local 31.

On the 16th, the regular meeting of said local.

On the 17th, meeting of Local 525. In conjunction with the officials of Local 525 the undersigned preferred charges against one of the members of this local for conduct unbecoming a member of the union. This person, having been forced to join, has taken every opportunity since to slander every person connected with the organization, and to spread his malicious lies around the bars where the public heard him. Now he is going to get a chance to prove his assertions or suffer the consequences.

On the 19th, meeting of the Central Labor Council.

On the 20th, to the city of Santa Rosa, per instructions. Found that Organizer T. J. Vitaich of the State Federation of Labor had rounded up a bunch of bartenders, also a bunch of culinary workers and wanted assistance in completing the two new locals.

On the 22nd, held meeting of bartenders, Local 770, and initiated those accepted, installed the local and transacted other necessary business.

On the 23rd, attended meeting of teamsters, also boot and shoe workers, and retail clerks at Petaluma with Brother Vitaich, in return for the good work Tom had done for our crafts in Santa Rosa. While in Petaluma I attempted to collect four bar cards which were not gathered up at the time the rest of the outfit was. Two of the saloons refused to come through with the cards, so I will have to take other measures to get them.

On the 24th, with Brother Vitaich, continued on the work with the culinary workers in Santa Rosa. Also attended meeting of laundry workers on that date, they having just succeeded in getting a new wage scale which is a considerable improvement over former conditions.

On the 25th and 26th, with Organizer Vitaich, working on our boys and girls to install some interest in the new local.

On the 27th, back to Oakland.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Sept. 20—To Santa Rosa	$1 45
Sept. 23—To Petaluma and return.....	1 00
Sept. 27—To Oakland	1 45
Carfare	2 95
Telephone	1 65

FALL RIVER, MASS., Sept. 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the past month. During the first part of the month my time was devoted in auditing the books and accounts of Locals 81 and 619. Same was referred to the General Office, as well as assisting Local 619 in straightening out several grievances that were pending. Attended a meeting of Local 77; addressed same.

To Board, Boston. Attended a meeting of Local 77; addressed same.

To Lowell, in the interests of establishing a culinary local in that city, and was successful in getting the men and women working at the craft interested and sent for a charter. While in that city I was called upon by the representatives of the Central Labor Union and the organizer for the American Federation of Labor and machinists to assist the fifteen hundred employees who are out on strike at the U. S. Cartridge Company; addressed several meetings and assisted to the best of my ability.

Attended a convention of the Trades Union Liberty League held at New Bedford, Mass., Sunday, September 19th, in the interests of those connected with the liquor business. Our International was well represented; important business transacted in the interests of our crafts. I also attended a convention of Massachusetts State Branch of the American Federation of Labor, and was pleased to see the bartenders and culinary workers well represented. Quite an important resolution was presented on the prohibition question, which was adopted by the convention unanimously. Similar action was taken on a resolution presented by the undersigned, relative to the culinary crafts. During our stay in the city of New Bedford, with the assistance of Vice-President Conley and others, we were successful in signing up several houses and secured several new applications. Attended a very interesting meeting of Local 296. Meeting was well attended, several visiting delegates were present, and gave good addresses along trade union lines, which were well received; and there is no doubt but that the convention was of material benefit to Local 296, and with the assistance rendered, we hope to see a hundred per cent local in a short time. Vice-President Conley and the undersigned took up several important matters in the interest of Local 100 that were pending for some time. To Fall River in the interests of establishing a culinary local in that city, and hope to be successful in my efforts, in a short time.

The following is my expense account:

Sept. 9—To Lowell	$3 20
15—Boston and return.....	1 20
19—To New Bedford.....	1 95
25—To Boston	1 20

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Sept. 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of September:

August 30th, to Niagara Falls to secure the signatures of the bar boys of that city on a charter list; was successful in getting 27 names with the promise of several more as soon as the charter arrives.

September 1st, to Lockport, to look over the chances of a local of bartenders there, and on the 2d, attended a meeting of the Lockport Central Trades and Labor Council; after explaining my mission, the organization Committee were instructed to do all in their power to bring about the organization of the bartenders of Lockport.

September 3d, to Buffalo, to finish up some work which had been started there.

September 7th, attended a meeting of the liquor dealers of Niagara Falls, who went on record to do all they could to bring about a good organization of bartenders in that city, but in return wanted the bartenders to help them in fighting prohibition.

September 8th, installed the local and officers of Local 238 of Niagara Falls.

THE MIXER AND SERVER

September 9th, to Seneca Falls, where Local 210 were in some trouble. After finding out what it was I called a meeting for September 13th.

September 10th, to Utica, to again take up the matter of organizing the waiters; on arriving, in Utica found a message awaiting me, stating that Mrs. Henley had met with an accident.

September 11th, to Schenectady; found Mrs. Henley laid up with a sprained ankle, but has since recovered.

September 13th, to Seneca Falls, to attend the meeting which I had called for this date; all members had been notified, also several suspended members; meeting was not very well attended. Went over the situation with those present and decided on a plan of action; removed several bar labels and took up other work, also found several molderers working in the places of our boys; some of these men are suspended members of the I. M. U. and some claim to be still members, but they could not show me. Would advise the liquor dealers of Seneca Falls to get on the job and get rid of some of the rats they have working for them, as the county is very liable to go dry. I feel as though Local 210 will come out of the mire before long.

September 15th, to Utica, where a charter list has been started for the waiters; had secured 15 names but wanted at least 25 or 30 in order to make a good start. I feel sure of getting them and it will only be a short time before the waiters of Utica will be back in line.

September 20th, to Middletown as per instructions; here I found a very bad state of affairs. Bar labels hanging up in every bar-room or nearly so, in the city; former treasurer gone out of town and took bank book with him; called a meeting for the 23d, which was very well attended. Laid out a plan which all present agreed to. Another meeting was called for September 26th; in the meantime I visited nearly all the former members and went over the situation with them. Same old story, a certain few run the organization and all the rest of the rusty excuses, but I found that other trouble existed—outside interference—the main cause.

Meeting of the 26th not very well attended, but it being Sunday, some excuse I suppose, could be given. In the meantime, have called a final meeting for the 28th, and will know just what to do with the bar boys of Middletown, also picking bar labels and listening to a lot of has-beens.

The following is my expense account for the month:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Sept. 28, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of September:

August 26th, I went to Helena, Montana, to audit the accounts of Local 612. Copy of same has been filed with the general office for future reference.

August 27th, to Great Falls. Our locals in that city are getting along fairly well and preparing themselves for the Prohibition fight in 1916.

August 28th, to Lewistown.

August 31st, to Harlowtown.

September 1st, to Roundup.

September 2nd, to Forsyth.

September 3rd, to Billings. Held a conference with the officers of the bartenders' union and the officers of the cooks and waiters' union; both organizations are doing well, the cooks and waiters' union especially; they have increased in membership rapidly during the past three months; their fight against the "Chink" restaurants is being well supported by the trade union movement.

September 4th and 5th, visited Huntly and Laurel.

September 6th and 7th, at Red Lodge, in the interests of the bartenders.

September 8th, returned to Billings.

September 10th, to Great Falls.

September 11th, to Lewistown, to attend a special meeting of the bartenders; meeting was largest ever held in the history of that union. Their delegates do attend meetings of the Trades Assembly.

August 13th, to Harlowtown, where I expect to organize the bartenders during the coming month.

September 15th, to Roundup, where I was billed to address a mass meeting of all trade unionists in that city. The meeting was largely attended, not only by the working men and women of the city but by the business men as well; then left for Helena, where I remained during the Montana State Fair. We had quite a lot of "Association boys" pay us a visit during that week and they found that in Montana we recognize but one card—a union card; sorry, boys, but the next time you come to Montana you will know what to produce.

September 25th, left Helena for Minneapolis, Minn., to assist our general representatives in their efforts to keep this city in the "wet" column. Hoffman, Anderson and Joyce are on the job and doing very good work, and if we win, and I expect we will, and you will know by the time you read this, just put it down in your memory that they are entitled to a whole lot of the credit.

Thursday, September 30th, the above-mentioned organizers and myself are to meet a committee from the Twin Cities Waiters' Club in an effort to convince them that our organization is just a little bit bigger, better and stronger than a good many imagine. We hope the Twin Cities waiters will conclude to join with us in our struggle for the betterment of the culinary workers of the country.

With best wishes to all members, I am,

Fraternal yours,

J. P. McGINLEY,
International Organizer.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Sept. 28, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Since my last report I have attended the meeting of the Trades and Labor Assembly, Brewery Workers' Union 103, and Cigarmakers' Union 77, of Minneapolis. In addition to that have worked with the Publicity Committee of the Minnesota Trades Union League with Organizer Anderson in the County Option fight under the direction of Vice-President Hoffman.

We have in Minneapolis at this time the following labor leaders assisting in this fight: Clarence S. Darrow of Chicago; Max S. Hayes of Cleveland; John P. McGinley of Great Falls; Tim M. Daly of New York City; George Thompson of Chicago; George Hall of Minneapolis; Geo. W. Lawson of St. Paul; officials of the State Federation of Labor, and Louis Harthill, Lynn Thompson, Mike Mogan, Bob Creamer and Andrew Leaf of the Trades and Labor Assembly, also the Rev. Wallace M. Short of Sioux City, Iowa.

The Business Men's Educational League have enlisted the services of the following speakers: Congressman Meeker of Missouri, whom former Congressman Hobson refused to debate the Prohibition question; Edgar F. Hanson, Mayor of Belfast, Maine, and former member of the Senate; Royal E. Cabell, who under the Taft administration, was U. S. Internal Revenue Commissioner; Charles Towne of New York City; Senator Westlake, Allen P. Cox, Paul Fontaine, Sheridan Ford, James A. Whorton, A. D. Smith, Israel Bergstrom, David Broderick, Wells M. Ruggles, James Robertson, A. S. Dowdall and Dr. Edward Adams Cantrell.

The Drys have imported quite an army of "Where is my wandering boy tonight" in this county as follows: Ex-Governor Van Sant, Senator Lobeck, Senator Jones, W. I. Norton, Rev. James Cleary, Rev. Chas. Stelzle, Geo. L. Matthau, John F. Cunneen, a union machinist; Geo. H. Thompson, secretary Stone Cutters' union; E. T. Harris, editor of the Labor World of Duluth, Minn. Hundreds from different churches have enlisted their services with the Drys of this vicinity. The drys realize the fight they have on their hands is no easy one, and before they get out of this county the $300,000 set aside by the Anti-Saloon League in Atlantic City, N. J., recently at the disposal of the Rev. Charles Stelzle, will get quite a kick.

Both factions are holding daily noon-day, afternoon and evening street meetings on the public thoroughfares, and in addition to that have secured every available meeting hall that was possible.

Bartenders' Union, Local 152, has set aside $1,000.00 out of their funds to use in this fight on County Option if necessary, and every member of the local will be assigned to his voting precinct October 4th all day to get out the voters.

September 26th, addressed the Minneapolis Retail Licensed Liquor Dealers' Association, explaining to those employers the way in which organized labor intends to work on election day, and suggesting to them that they work along the same lines with us. They have gone on record to suspend with the services of any bartender in their employ that is entitled to vote, and fails.

September 27th, with Brother John P. McGinley went to St. Paul to attend the convention of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, having a resolution which we desired to present. This convention has been for the last week in executive session, and being unable to get before the convention on the later count, we received all assurances that same would be properly taken care of.

The following is my expense account for the month:

CHICAGO, ILL., Sept. 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—My report for the month of September is as follows:

September 1st, attended conference of Chicago Liquor Dealers' Council.

September 2nd, visited Bartenders' Joint Council and Local Joint Board.

September 3rd, attended Roseland liquor dealers, stage hands and teamsters' meetings.

September 4th, attended special meeting of Cook County liquor dealers.

September 5th, attended Chicago Federation of Labor.

September 6th, went to Lincoln and Riverview parks.

September 7th, attended meeting of Calumet liquor dealers and Bartenders' Local 649.

September 8th and 9th, worked in conjunction with the president of the Chicago Federation of Labor, getting out letter indorsing the letters of the Chicago liquor dealers, to be sent to their members.

September 10th, visited blacksmiths and helpers, also bridgetenders.

September 11th, visited brickmakers and butchers.

September 13th, attended conference of committee of liquor dealers, also visited carpenters and joiners that night.

September 14th, visited Bartenders' Local 456, and from the way they run that meeting, showed they are getting on the job, and if they continue to do so the membership will increase very fast.

September 15th and 16th, held conference with the officers of the brewery workers, and had the pleasure of meeting the International secretary-treasurer, Huebner, of the same organization.

Went to a special meeting of Bartenders' Local 649. The local is in bad shape. It is the same old story—officers not bonded. Business Agent Heimburger, just before the meeting closed, left the hall, and he has not been around there since.

September 17th, 18th, 19th, and 20th, visited members of Local 649, and found the majority of them were paid up. Vice-President Foster has taken full charge, and I am satisfied he will have them on the right path again.

September 20th, visited Local 507. Myself and Brother McCarthy gave them a good talk; they had a good attendance; their finances are in good shape, and I feel safe to say they are going to assist the organizers in building up the membership in that part of the town.

September 21st and 22nd, general work on the West Side.

September 23rd, assisted Brother Hobby on the waiters' proposition.

September 24th, visited pile drivers. Got in touch with Brother Giest of Local 401.

September 25th, visited Iron molders, and visiting members of Local 649 at their places of employment, checking their accounts.

THE MIXER AND SERVER

September 27th, went with Brother Geist of Local 401, over his district, which is in bad shape at the present time.

My expenses for the month are as follows:

Local and suburban carfare.....	$3 50
Postage and stationery.....	80
Telephone and exchange of check.....	70

VANCOUVER, B. C., Sept. 24, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of August:

On August 25, I left Edmonton for Calgary as per instruction, arriving there August 26. Made a round of restaurants, cafes and hotels, finding nearly all Asiatics employed with the exception of a few white people, whom I invited to attend a meeting September 5; but having only four to respond, I postponed the meeting for one week longer, getting them together again with no better results.

I left Calgary for Vancouver September 13. Arriving in Vancouver September 14, attended a local joint committee meeting September 15, where they decided to withdraw a member of Local 676, and to start a fight against the house, which has been explained in a previous letter from Local 676.

My expense account is as follows:

Aug. 25—Edmonton to Calgary.....	$5 85
Sept. 13—Calgary to Vancouver.....	26 20

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Sept. 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—My report for the last month is hereby briefly submitted:

The county option campaign in Hennepin County has developed into one of the hottest campaigns that has ever been pulled off. Both sides are strongly organized. One side to keep what little they have and the other side for the purpose of destroying the industry and business that is employing members of our International Union.

Organizer Joyce and myself, working under the direct supervision and instruction of Vice-President Hoffman, in conjunction with the Minnesota Trades Union League, are doing all that we possibly can do to prevent the destructive hand of the Anti-Saloon League from putting our local unions and their members in this city out of existence.

The Anti-Saloon League has imported, as usual, every heavyweight in the shape of orators, into this campaign and they are using every tactic that they can, in order to convert the laboring people and the business men over to their side.

Governors, ex-governors, senators, congressmen, mayors and others have been imported here to tell the falsehoods of conditions in prohibition territories and even Rev. Stelzle and other "card men" are here trying to persuade the members of organized labor to vote against their own personal rights and protection. The "Reverend," however, has not received as much attention from the members of organized labor as in years gone by, and are meeting him in his arguments on all occasions. He is getting to be accustomed to the fact that there are people in this campaign who are next to him.

For the last three weeks we have held shop meetings at noon throughout the city, and where Stelzle speaks to a score of shopmen, our men speak to hundreds, and the same thing prevails in the open meetings on the streets and the corner lots.

The Trades and Labor Assembly and practically all the local labor unions are taking an active part against the Anti-Saloon League; the officers of the State Federation of Labor are doing the same. Our local unions, through their officers and members, are not leaving a stone unturned, and if we lose this fight the Anti-Saloon League has won the biggest fight they ever undertook.

We have anti-prohibition meetings every night, scores of them, and able speakers at each of them. Our literature is distributed all over the city and the county and although the sentiment seems to be somewhat in our favor, I am not sure of a victory until we win. We always need one more vote, and we are going to keep on getting that one vote until the last vote is in.

We have in the field as speakers, Congressman Jacob Meeker, of St. Louis; Clarence Darrow, of Chicago; Rev. Short, of Sioux City; Max Hayes, of Cleveland; Mayor Hanson, of Belfast, Maine; Towne, of New York; T. M. Daley, vice-president of the Metal Trades Department of the A. F. of L.; Geo. Thompson, international organizer of the Cigarmakers' Union; John P. McGinley, of Montana, all in addition to the local labor leaders of this vicinity, and if we don't give the drys a battle for their life, I would like to know the reason why.

Besides the city of Minneapolis, I have campaigned the suburban cities of Robbinsdale, Osseo, Dayton, Champlain, Rogers, Maple Grove, Wayzata, Excelsior, Hopkins and St. Louis Park, also attended every meeting of Local 152 and most of the meetings of the other local unions, as well as the Trades and Labor Assembly and the Minnesota Trades Union League, and other meetings too numerous to mention.

I trust that I will be able to report next month that Hennepin County voted wet by the largest majority ever, on October 4th, and that our members in this vicinity will continue to enjoy the prosperity and happiness that they have and are now enjoying.

My expense account is as follows:

Postage	$1 00

THE FORUM

THE UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

In the September issue of THE MIXER AND SERVER we offered the first installment of a synopsis of the Commissions' report, known as the Basil M. Manley report for Commissioners Frank P. Walsh, chairman, of the Commission and Commissioners John B. Lennon, James O'Connell and Austin B. Garretson.

In connection with the printing of these installments it might be well to remind the readers, members of our International Union, that what is here offered is intensely interesting and of unquestioned value to every man and woman who earn their bread by mental or physical toil. The report of the Commission in its entirety may never be generally circulated, for big business will surely try to prevent it, hence the numbers of THE MIXER AND SERVER containing reference to the vital points in the report should be retained for future reference.

The second installment follows:

The second section of the final report of Director Basil M. Manly, embodying the findings of fact and conclusions of the staff of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, was made public by the Commission August 17, 1915.

Its principal feature is a vivid portrayal of living and working conditions that prevail in American industry today. Evidence is presented at great length in support of the report's findings to the effect that industrial unrest is caused by the payment of wages too low to provide a decent standard of living, and in support of the report's further conclusion that this situation is a direct result of the lack of strong labor organizations by which wage earners could force the payment of living wages.

The section made public today also recommends many remedial measures.

Among the recommendations is a strong argument urging equal political rights for women as one of the means by which women in industry may obtain living wages.

Other parts of the report deal with women and children in industry, with conditions of employment in the telephone service, the telegraph service, the Pullman Company, and the railroads.

One of the most striking findings presented today concerns the existence of many typical industrial communities that are declared to present every aspect of a state of feudalism, with employers controlling the social and political life and abridging the fundamental rights of citizens.

PAST CONDITIONS NO CRITERION.

Discussing the question of whether or not labor conditions in the country's principal industries are satisfactory, the report repudiates the view that these conditions should be judged by comparison with the past. It asserts that conditions should be judged "only by comparing conditions as they actually exist with what knowledge and experience shows that they might easily be made during the immediate future, if proper action were taken to utilize the resources of our nation sufficiently and distribute the products equitably."

"The crux of the question," says the report, "is: have the workers received a fair share of the enormous increase in wealth which has taken place in this country during the past quarter century as a result largely of their labors? The answer is emphatically—No!"

"The wealth of the country between 1890 and 1912 increased from 65 to 187 billions, or 188 per cent, whereas the aggregate income of wage earners in manufacturing, mining, and transportation has risen between 1889 and 1909 only 95 per cent, from 2,516 millions in 1889 to 4,916 millions in 1909. Furthermore, the wage-earners' share of the net product of industry in the case of manufactures was only 40.2 per cent in 1909, as compared with 44.9 per cent in 1889."

FOREIGN CONDITIONS NOT PERTINENT.

"Similarly, the attempt to dismiss deplorable labor conditions in the United States by arguments that they are better than in European countries is repugnant. To say that conditions are better than in Great Britain, for example, is simply to say that somewhat less than one-third of the population are in a state of absolute poverty, for that was the condition reported by the last British Commission. It should be a matter of shame also to boast that the condition of American laborers is better than that of laborers in the 'black bread belt' of Germany.

"That they are, as a matter of fact, but little better is proved conclusively by the almost complete cessation of immigration from Germany, England, and France. No better proof of the miserable condition of the mass of American workers can be sought than the fact that in recent years laborers in large numbers have come to this country only from Russia, Italy, Austro-Hungary and the backward and impoverished nations of southern and eastern Europe.

"With the inexhaustible natural resources of the United States, her tremendous mechanical achievements, and the genius of her people for organization and industry, there can be no natural reason to prevent every able bodied man of our present population from being well-fed, well housed, comfortably clothed, and from rearing a family of moderate size in comfort, health and security. How far this ideal is actually achieved is discussed in some detail in the following pages.

"It is evident both from the investigations of this Commission and from the reports of all recent Governmental bodies that a large part of our industrial population are, as a result of the combination of low wages and unemployment, living in a condition of actual poverty."

AT LEAST ONE-THIRD IN POVERTY.

How large this proportion is cannot be exactly determined, but it is certain that at least one-third and possibly one-half of the families of wage earners employed in manufacturing and mining earn in the course of the year less than enough to support them in anything like a comfortable and decent condition. The detailed evidence is presented in a separate report which is submitted for transmittal to Congress. At this point it is sufficient to call attention to the results of the most exhaustive and sweeping official investigation of recent years, that of the Immigration Commission, which reported to Congress in 1909. This investigation secured detailed information regarding the daily or weekly earnings of 619,595 employees of all classes in our basic manufacturing industries and in coal mining, and information regarding income and living conditions for 15,726 families.

"It was found that the annual incomes of almost two-thirds of these families (64 per cent) were less than $750 per year and for almost one-third (31 per cent) were less than $500, the average for all being $721. The average size of these families was 5.6 members. Elaborate studies of the cost of living made in all parts of the country at the same time have shown that the very least that a family of five persons can live upon in anything approaching decency is $700. It is probable that owing to the fact that the families investigated by the Immigration Commission were to a large extent, foreign born, the incomes are lower than for the average of the entire working population; nevertheless, even when every allowance is made for that fact, the figures show conclusively that between one-half and two-thirds of these families were living below the standards of decent subsistence, while about one-third were living in a state which can be described only as abject poverty.

"American society was founded and for a long period existed upon the theory that the family should derive its support from the earnings of the fathers. How far we have departed from this condition is shown by the fact that 78 per cent of the fathers of these families earned less than $700 per year. In brief, only one-fourth of these fathers could have supported their families on the barest subsistence level without the earnings of other members of the family or income from outside sources.

"Other facts collected in this investigation show conclusively that a very large proportion of these families did not live in decency and comfort. Thirty per cent kept boarders and lodgers, a condition repugnant to every ideal of American family life, especially in the crowded tenements or tiny cottages in which the wage earners of America characteristically live. Furthermore, in 77 per cent of the families 2 or more persons occupied each sleeping room, in 37 per cent 3 or more persons, and in 15 per cent 4 or more persons."

PAUPER BURIALS.

"The most striking evidence of poverty is the proportion of pauper burials. The repugnance of all classes of wage earners of all races to pauper burial is such that everything will be sacrificed and heavy debts incurred rather than permit any member of the family to lie in the 'potters' field'; nevertheless in New York City one out of every twelve corpses is buried at the expense of the city or turned over to physicians for dissection.

"The terrible effects of such poverty may be outlined in a few paragraphs, but their far-reaching consequences could not be adequately shown in a volume.

"Children are the basis of the State; as they live or die, as they thrive or are ill-nourished, as they are intelligent or ignorant, so fares the State. How do the children of American workers fare?

"It has been proved by studies here and abroad that there is a direct relation between poverty and the death rate of babies; but the frightful rate at which poverty kills was not known, as least for this country, until last year, when through a study made by the Federal Children's Bureau in Johnstown, Pa., it was shown that the babies whose fathers earned less than $10 per week died during the first year at the appalling rate of 256 per 1,000. On the other hand, those whose fathers earned $25 per week or more died at the rate of only 84 per 1,000. The babies of the poor died three times as fast as those who were in fairly well-to-do families. The tremendous significance of these figures will be appreciated when it is known that one-third of all the adult workmen reported by the Immigration Commission earned less than $10 per week. On the showing of Johnstown these workmen may expect one out of four of their babies to die during the first year of life."

CHILDREN GO HUNGRY.

"The last of the family to go hungry are the children, yet statistics show that in six of our largest cities from 12 to 20 per cent of the children are noticeably underfed and ill-nourished.

"The minimum amount of education which any child should receive is certainly the grammar school course, yet statistics show that only one-third of the children in our public schools complete the grammar school course, and only 10 per cent finish high school. Those who leave are almost entirely the children of the workers, who, as soon as they reach working age, are thrown, immature, ill-trained and with no practical knowledge, into the complexities of industrial life. In four industrial towns studied by the Bureau of Labor Statistics 75 per cent of the children quit school before reaching the 7th grade.

"The great seriousness of this condition is even more acutely realized when it is known that in the families of the workers 37 per cent of the mothers are at work and consequently unable to give the children more than scant attention. Of these mothers 30 per cent keep boarders and lodgers and 7 per cent work outside the home.

"As a picture of American industry, this presentation is undeniably gloomy and depressing, but as a diagnosis of what is wrong with American labor conditions it is true and exact. There are of course many bright spots in American industry, where workmen are well paid and regularly employed under good working conditions in the determination of which they have some share. But, even as the physician pays little attention to the good eyes and sound teeth of a patient whose vital organs are diseased, so impressive is the need for attention to the diseased spots in industry, it is felt unnecessary to waste time in word pictures of conditions which are all right or which may be depended upon to right themselves."

FARM WORKERS ALSO.

"In agriculture, there is no array of exact figures which can be quoted to show the condition of labor. But, speaking generally, the available evidence indicates clearly that while in some sections agricultural laborers are well paid and fairly treated, the condition of the mass is very much like that of the industrial workers.

"Moreover, there is a peculiar condition in agriculture, which merits a brief but strong statement at this point as a preface to a more detailed discussion later. The most alarming fact in American agriculture is the rapid growth of tenancy. In 1910 there were 37 tenant-operated farms out of each 100 farms in the United States as compared with 28 in 1890, an increase of 32 per cent during 20 years. No nation-wide investigation of the condition of tenant farmers has ever been made, but in Texas where the investigations of this Commission were thorough and conclusive, it was found not only that the economic condition of the tenant was extremely bad, but also that he was far from being free, whereas his future was regarded as hopeless. Badly housed, ill-nourished, uneducated, and hopeless, these tenants continue year after year to eke out a bare living, moving frequently from one farm to another in the hope that something will turn up.

"Without a large family, the tenant cannot hope to succeed or break even, so in each tenant family numerous children are being reared to a future which under present condition will be no better, if as good as that of their parents. The wife of a typical tenant farmer, the mother of eleven children, stated in her testimony before the Commission that in addition to the rearing of children and the work of the house, she always helped with the crops, and during all the years of her married life she had had no ready-made dresses and only three hats.

"The investigations of this Commission in that rich and generally prosperous section of the country only confirm and accentuate the statements of the Federal Industrial Commission which reported in 1902: 'The result of this system (share tenancy) is that the renters rarely ever succeed in laying by a surplus. On the contrary, their experiences are so discouraging that they seldom remain on the same farm for more than a year. They are not only unable to lay by any money, but their children remain uneducated and half clothed. The system is apparently one of the most undesirable, so far as its effect on the community is concerned.'

CORPORATIONS AND WAGE EARNERS.

Discussing existing relations between employers and employees, the report points out that the typical form of industrial organization is the corporation.

"In transportation," says Mr. Manly, "approximately 100 per cent of the wage earners are employed by corporations; in mining, 90 per cent; and in manufacturing, 75 per cent. Moreover, it is under this form that the great problems of industrial relations have developed."

After analyzing the elements that go to make up a typical corporation Mr. Manly says:

"The ordinary stockholder in a large corporation actually occupies a less direct relationship to the corporation in which he is interested, has less knowledge of its actual operations, and less control over its management than the ordinary citizen has over local, State and National governments.

"Boards of Directors in theory are responsible for and would naturally be expected to maintain supervision over every phase of the corporation's management, but, as a matter of fact, we know that such supervision is maintained only over the financial phase of the business, controlling the acquisition of money to operate the business, and distributing the profits. Actual direction generally exists only through the removal of executive officials who fail to deliver the expected profits, and through the appointment of their successors.

"Upon the testimony of financiers representing, as directors, hundreds of corporations, the typical director of large corporations is not only totally ignorant of the actual operations of such corporations, whose properties he seldom, if ever, visits, but feels and exercises no responsibility for anything beyond the financial condition and the selection of executive officials. Upon their own statements, these directors know nothing and care nothing about the quality of the product, the condition and treatment of the workers from whose labor they derive their income, or the general management of the business.

"So far as operation and actual management are concerned, the executive officials are practically supreme. Upon their orders production is increased or decreased, plants are operated or shut down, and upon their recommendations wages are raised or lowered. But even they have little direct contact with the actual establishment of working conditions, and no relation at all with the rank and file of the workers. They act upon the recommendations of superintendents, whose information comes from their assistants and foremen and from the elaborate statistics of modern business, which account for every piece of material and product, show the disposition of every penny that comes and goes, but ignore, as though they did not exist, the men and women whose labor drives the whole mechanism of business."

THE BIG QUESTION.

"Here, then, is the field of industrial relations: Masses of workers on the one side dealing in some manner with foremen and superintendents on the other, behind whom is an organization of executive officials, representing in turn the Board of Directors, who are the chosen representatives of the stockholders.

"The crux of the whole question of industrial relations is: Shall the workers for the protection of their interests be organized and represented collectively by their chosen delegates, even as the stockholders are represented by their Directors and by the various grades of executive officials and bosses?

"In considering this issue the first question that presents itself is: Why should such representation be demanded as a necessity? The executive officials, superintendents and bosses, some witnesses have urged before the Commissions, are not only for the most part humane and well-intentioned men, but they know that the interests of the business depend upon the welfare of the workers and, if unhindered, will pay the best wages and create the best working conditions that the business can afford. Organization and representation are therefore argued to be unnecessary and tending only to promote friction and interfere with the management of the business.

"Let us grant the higher character and good intentions of officials, and consider the statement of the workers in reply. They say that in modern corporate business the actions of officials are governed not by their personal intentions, but by the inexorable demands for interest and dividends, and are driven not by their desire to create a permanently successful business with a contented labor force, but by the never-relaxed spur of the comparative cost-sheet."

MANAGERS CANNOT EFFECT REFORMS.

"The constant demand is for high production at low cost, not through improvements and good conditions which might give them next year, but this very month. In the high pressure of business, every superintendent knows that if his plant is at the bottom of the comparative scale for two months his position topples, and, if for three months, it is virtually gone. He cannot afford to experiment with changes that will not give immediate results. If he were his own master he might take a chance, knowing that the loss of this year would be compensated by gains under better conditions next year, but the monthly cost-sheet does not wait for next year; it demands results now.

"But it may be said that, if he cannot improve conditions himself, he can at least recommend them to his superiors to be transmitted to the Board of Directors for approval. This might indeed be done, and with the extension of an understanding among managers that low production costs may be secured with high wages, probably would be to an increasing extent, except that Boards of Directors scorn such abstractions as the high-wage-low-cost theory, and habitually insist that managers shall buy labor, as they buy material, in the cheapest market."

AS TO DIRECTORS.

"Moreover, raising wages is traditionally unpopular among stockholders and directors, and recommendations for better conditions, particularly if they involve new capital, are frowned upon. Neither the stockholders nor the directors have to live on wages or work in the existing surroundings, and profits deferred are considered profits lost.

"The workers, therefore, deny the potency of even good intentions on the part of managers, and point to labor history which they allege shows that at best only isolated cases can be pointed out where marked improvements have taken place except in response to repeated demands from the workers, or to forestall the growth of threatened organization. They point also to such facts as that children of 12 years or younger were not only kept in the factories (as they still are in some States where there has been little aggressive agitation), but almost without exception they were insisted upon by the employers as a necessity."

ORGANIZATION REQUIRED.

"The evidence of this character, which is summarized elsewhere, seems to be conclusive of the necessity for organization and representation under modern business conditions. But even if it were not necessary, it is difficult to see any reason why what is demanded and required by stockholders should be denied to workers. It would be as illogical for stockholders individually to attempt to deal with the representatives of the unions, as it is for the individual worker to attempt to deal with executive officials, representing the organized stockholders."

Conclusions and recommendations relating to living and working conditions of labor are stated as follows:

WAGES.

"As a result of the investigations which have been made the following conclusions are justified:

"1. The welfare of the State demands that the useful labor of every able-bodied workman should as a minimum be compensated by sufficient income to support in comfort himself, a wife, and at least three minor children, and in addition to provide for sickness, old age, and disability. Under no other conditions can a strong, contented and efficient citizenship be developed.

"2. Under existing conditions such an income is not received by fully one-half of the wage earners employed in industry.

"3. The natural resources of the United States are such that an industrial population properly educated and efficiently organized can produce enough to achieve this standard of living.

"4. It is probably that even at present the national agricultural and industrial output is sufficient to permit the establishment of such a standard.

"5. The problem is therefore essentially one of distribution.

"6. The fixing of the wages of adult workmen by legal enactment is not practicable nor desirable as a general policy, except for public employees.

"7. A just standard of wages in any industry or occupation can best be reached by collective bargaining between employers and employees for the purpose of forming voluntary joint agreements. The success and justice of such joint agreements is, however, dependent upon the essential equality of the two parties and can not be attained unless effective organization exists.

"It is suggested that the Commission make the following recommendations:

"1. In order that the public may be kept fully informed with regard to labor conditions, and that a proper basis of facts should exist for negotiation and arbitration, the Federal Government should enact the necessary legislation to provide for the collection, through the Bureau of Labor Statistics or otherwise, of the full and exact facts regarding wages, hours of labor, and extent of unemployment for every industry. Every employer should be required by law to file with the proper authority a sworn statement of these facts according to a prescribed form. These statistics should be published annually, and the full data regarding any industry or plant should be accessible to any mediator or any other responsible citizen.

"2. Uniform statutes should be passed by the legislatures of all States requiring that wages be paid at least semi-monthly and in cash, except where by joint agreement other methods are agreed upon."

HOURS OF LABOR.

"As a result of investigation the following conclusions are justified:

"1. The physical well-being, mental development and recreational needs of every class of population demand that under normal circumstances the working day should not exceed eight hours.

"2. A very large percentage of the workmen in manufactures, transportation and mining work more than eight hours per day.

"3. This is in marked contrast to the condition of those whose economic position enables them to define the length of their own working days.

"4. Practical experience has shown that the reduction of working hours is in the interest not only of the worker and the community generally, but of the employer.

"3. The regulation by legal enactment of working hours of adult workmen is not generally practicable nor desirable, except for public employees.

"It is suggested that the Commission recommend:

"1. That in the so-called continuous occupations, other than the movement of trains, requiring work during both the day and the night for six or seven days per week, the State and Federal Governments should directly intervene, so that the working hours should not exceed eight per day nor extend to more than six days per week."

SAFETY AND SANITATION.

"The investigations which have been made warrant the following conclusions:

"1. Great progress has been made during recent years in promoting safety and sanitation in manufacturing, mining and transportation.

"2. The progress has been most rapid in the direction of safeguarding workers from industrial accidents.

"3. Progress in safety has been in part the result of continued agitation and education, but has proceeded most rapidly and satisfactorily since the enactment of workmen's compensation laws which render unsafe working conditions expensive to the employer.

"4. The movement has also been largely promoted by the formation of safety committees composed of officials and workmen, and by the creation of joint conferences of employers and employees to assist and advise State officials in the administration of the law and in the formulation of safety rules.

"5. The campaign for safety needs, however, to be greatly extended as rapidly as possible. The annual list of accidents, approximately 35,000 fatalities and 700,000 injuries involving disability of over four weeks, can not be regarded complacently. From one-third to one-half of these accidents have been estimated by competent authorities to be preventable by proper safeguards, inspection, and control.

"6. The advance in the sanitation of work shops has been less rapid, because not only are the dangers less obvious, but there is no financial liability for diseases or deaths occurring as the result of improper sanitation. Future progress in sanitation demands attention not only to cleanliness and ventilation, but to occupational diseases.

"7. The most direct incentive for the promotion of sanitation would be the adoption of a proper system of sickness insurance.

"It is suggested that the Commission recommend:

"1. The creation of a bureau of industrial safety (except that the section providing a museum of safety is not endorsed). Proper steps should be taken to provide for the co-ordination of the work of all Federal bureaus whose work is concerned with industrial safety.

"2. The appropriations of the Public Health Service for the investigation and promotion of industrial sanitation should be increased."

HOUSING.

"It has been found in the course of the Commission's investigations:

"1. The present provisions for the housing of workmen are generally bad, not only in the large cities but in industrial communities of every size and in rural districts.

"2. Not only are the houses and tenements which are available for workers largely insanitary and unfit for habitation, but they are inadequate, resulting in high rents, over-crowding and congestion.

"3. Such conditions make not only for discomfort and unhappiness, but for disease and degeneration.

"4. The ordinary method of supplying houses through their erection by private capitalists for investment and speculation has rarely if ever been adequate.

"5. Excellent plans for the housing of workmen have been put into effect by a number of firms and corporations, but such measures have not at all affected the general situation, and being dependent upon the volition of individuals can not be regarded as likely to greatly influence progress.

"6. The tenement-house acts, as well as the health ordinances and building regulations of municipalities, while generally productive of good effects, are at best surface remedies and can never cure the evils of the present housing situation.

"7. In every important European country government aid and direct intervention to curb speculation have proved to be necessary for the promotion of any real progress.

"8. Governmental action in Europe has chiefly taken the following forms:

"(a) Extension of credit to voluntary non-profit-making associations.

"(b) Construction by the Government of buildings which are leased for long periods on easy terms.

"(c) Exemption from taxation and other subsidies for homes constructed for occupancy by their owners.

"(d) Legislation designed to prevent the holding of land out of use and to secure for the Government a part of the 'unearned increment.'

"It is suggested that the Commission recommend:

"1. The Federal and State Governments should institute investigations directed not so much to ascertaining existing housing conditions, as to formulating constructive methods by which direct support and encouragement to the promotion of improved housing can be given. Actual experiment in the promotion of housing should proceed as rapidly as proper plans can be drafted.

"2. Special attention should be given to taxation, in order that land should as far as possible be forced into use and the burden of taxation be removed from home owners.

"3. The municipalities should be relieved from all State restrictions which now prevent them from undertaking the operation of adequate housing schemes and from engaging in other necessary municipal enterprises."

WOMEN AND CHILDREN IN INDUSTRY.

"The investigations and hearings of the Commission justify the conclusions:

"1. As a result of their unprotected condition, women and children are exploited in industry, trade, domestic service, and agriculture, to an extent which threatens their health and welfare and menaces the well-being of future generations.

"2. The competition of women and children is a direct menace to the wage and salary standards of men.

"3. Under present conditions, children are permitted by their parents to go to work largely because their earnings are necessary for the support of the rest of the family. The restrictive legislation of the past quarter-century, although admirable in purpose and ultimate results, has thrown a heavy burden upon their fathers and mothers, who, at existing wages, have been barely able to support their families. The evidence shows that the burden of child labor legislation has rested upon the wage earners rather than upon employers. It is the testimony of enlightened employers that the employment of children is unprofitable, and that the effect of excluding children from factories has been to increase rather than decrease profits. In the interest of society as a whole, further restrictions on the employment of immature children are necessary, but it is important that they should be made with an understanding that the burden will rest primarily upon the wage earners, whose self-sacrifice should be fully recognized.

"4. The increasing employment of women has been due to two primary causes: First, the low wages of men, which have made the earnings of women necessary for the support of the family, and, second, the inducement to employers to substitute women for men because they will accept lower wages and are less likely to protest against conditions. The substitution of women for men has been greatly assisted by the introduction of improved machinery, which makes strength and technical skill unnecessary.

"5. The increased employment of women, under present working conditions, is a serious menace to their own health and well-being, to the wages of their husbands and brothers, and to the ideals of family life upon which American civilization has been established.

"6. The conditions under which women are employed in domestic service and in agriculture, merit the attention of the Nation no less than does their employment in manufacturing and trade. Not only is the economic condition of women employed in agriculture and domestic service a matter of grave concern, but they are subject to over-work, unreasonable hours, and personal abuse of various kinds, from which they have been largely relieved in factories and stores through agitation and legislation.

"7. The position of women in industry has been rendered doubly hard by reason of their lack of training for industrial work, by the oversupply of such labor and the consequent competition, by their traditional position of dependence, and by their disfranchisement.

"8. A very thorough investigation in the New England States failed to show a single manufacturer who had left a State as a result of restrictive factory legislation. On the contrary, the majority of manufacturers expressed the opinion that the legislation regulating conditions for women and children had been advantageous to the industry as a whole, particularly because it placed all competitors upon the same footing. Similarly, an investigation of the effects of minimum-wage legislation failed to show any calculable effects upon the cost of production, or upon the employment of women, after a sufficient period had elapsed to allow the necessary readjustments to be made.

"9. Nevertheless, there is a strong and increasing demand on the part of manufacturers in the more progressive States that regulation of factory conditions should be undertaken by the Federal Government, in order that competitors in all parts of the country should be placed upon an equal footing in this respect. The same demand comes also from the representatives of labor, not only because the argument of 'interstate competition' is creating strong opposition to progressive legislation, but because of the great economy of effort which would result from having to make the fight for better legislation only at the National Capital instead of in 45 States.

"It is suggested that the Commission recommend:

"1. The recognition both by public opinion and in such legislation as may be enacted, of the principle that women should receive the same compensation as men for the same service.

"2. Until this principle is recognized, and women are accorded equal political rights, the extension of State protection of women, through legislation regulating working conditions, hours of service, and minimum wages, is highly desirable.

"3. The increased organization of working women for self-protection and the improvement of their industrial conditions.

"4. The inclusion of all women working for wages, whether in industry, trade, domestic service, or agriculture, under future legislation regulating their wages, hours, or working conditions.

"5. The extension of the principle of State protection of children and the rapid increase of facilities for their education as outlined elsewhere.

"6. The enactment by Congress of legislation embodying the principles contained in the so-called Palmer-Owen bill, which was before Congress at the last session."

PUBLIC UTILITIES.

The report discusses conditions of employment in the two principal telegraph companies, in the telephone service, in the service of the Pullman Company and on the railroads. It says:

"The investigations of the Commission show:

"1. The scope of the Newlands Act, which applies only to employees engaged in the operation of interstate railroads, is too narrow and leaves the public service in the transmission of intelligence and in the handling of interstate commerce likely to be interrupted by labor disputes without adequate legal provision either for mediation and conciliation or for making the facts involved in the dispute known to the public.

"2. Even as applied to train service employees, the Newlands Act provides no means of bringing the facts before the public, except when both sides agree to arbitration.

"3. The selection of impartial members of arbitration boards has almost without exception devolved upon the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, owing to the inability of the parties to agree. This not only imposes an unpleasant and burdensome task upon the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, but tends greatly to weaken its influence. The experience in Great Britain shows that agreement can be reached by joint conference of employers and employees during a period of industrial peace for the selection of a panel of impartial persons from which arbitrators can be selected when they are needed, and seems to indicate that in the United States the inability of the parties to agree upon impartial arbitrators is due in part at least to the fact that they are always selected during the heat of the conflict.

"It is suggested that the Commission recommend:

"1. The extension of the Newlands Act to cover not only all classes of railroad employees, but all employees of public service corporations which are engaged in interstate commerce.

"2. The functions of the Board of Mediation and Conciliation under the Newlands Act should be extended to provide for the creation of Boards of Investigation, to be formed only by consent of both parties and to make a report of facts and recommendations which will not be binding upon either side.

"3. The Board of Mediation and Conciliation should be authorized by Congress to create an Advisory Council, composed of equal numbers of employers and employees, for the purpose of creating a panel of names from which impartial arbitrators may be chosen by the Board of Mediation and Conciliation."

TELEGRAPH.

"The investigations and hearings of the Commission justify the following conclusions:

"1. The workers employed by the two principal telegraph companies (the Western Union Telegraph and the Postal Telegraph-Cable) are not only underpaid, as admitted by the highest officials in their testimony before the Commission,* but subject to many abuses, such as the denial of proper periods of relief while on duty, the establishment of arbitrary speed rates, which frequently result in overstrain, the arbitrary discharge of employees without notice for any cause or no cause, the employment of young boys for messenger service under conditions which can result only in their moral corruption, and the employment of women for telegraph service at night.

"2. Such conditions have existed practically without change at least since 1884, in spite of the facts having been made public by three Government investigations.

"3. The workers are practically unable to improve their condition because these two companies, which control practically the entire industry, deny them the right of organization. The suppression of organization is effectively carried out by the discharge of all known to be union men or union sympathizers, by the use of spies who fraudulently secure the confidence of employees and report all known to be union members or sympathizers, by the use of an effective system of blacklisting, and by the control even of the personnel of the operators upon leased wires in the offices of brokers and other private individuals.

"4. The two companies have a monopoly of the transmission of telegrams, and no effective competition exists between them. These companies are performing a service in the transmission of intelligence which has been held by the Federal Supreme Court to have been reserved by the Constitution specifically to the Federal Government.

"5. The telegraph companies are enormously overcapitalized, and their rates, which are graded to pay dividends upon large amounts of stock which do not represent the investment of cash, are very much higher than the cost of service warrants.

"6. Owing to the duplication of offices on the part of the two companies and the maintenance of branch offices which are idle for a large part of the time, this service is being performed inefficiently and at an unusually high cost in spite of the low wages paid the operators.

"It is suggested that the Commission recommend:

"1. The property of the telegraph companies or such part of their equipment as may be necessary for the efficient operation of a National telegraph system, should be purchased by the Federal Government after proper valuation and placed under the general jurisdiction of the Post Office Department for operation. In transferring the service to the Federal Government all employees, including officials and other persons, necessary for successful operation, should be retained, and those whom the elimination of the duplicate service of the two companies renders unnecessary for the National system, should be absorbed into other branches of the Federal service as far as practicable.

"2. At the time of the transfer to the Federal service a special commission should be appointed to revise the salary ratings and other working conditions and place them upon a proper basis."

TELEPHONE.

"The investigations of the Commission are the basis for the following statements:

"1. The condition of the telephone operators in both interstate and local service is subject to grave criticism. The wages paid even in the cities having the highest standards are insufficient to provide decently for women who have no other means of support. The requirements and nervous strain incident to the service are so very severe that experienced physicians have testified that operators should work not more than five hours per day, whereas the regular working hours are from seven to nine per day. The operators, who are principally girls and young women, are required to work at night, going to and returning from their work at hours when they are subject to grave menace. The policy of the companies in general provides for sanitary and reasonably comfortable working places, and for attention to the recreation and physical needs of the operators, but in a number of cities the conditions even in these respects are subject to severe criticism.

"2. The telephone operators are unable to secure reasonable conditions for themselves, because of their youth and the fact that they ordinarily remain in the service only a short time.

"3. The organization of employees for their own protection is effectively resisted by the employing companies.

"4. The American Telephone and Telegraph Company, with its subsidiary and affiliated corporations, controls more than 70 per cent. of the total telephone business of the country. The American Telephone and Telegraph Company has been enormously profitable and is well able to afford the necessary improvements in working conditions. The American Telephone and Telegraph Company has increased its capitalization enormously without the investment of new capital.

"5. The transaction by which the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, which had been a subsidiary of the American Bell Telephone Company, absorbed the parent company in 1899 was not only designed to evade the legal limitations contained in the Massachusetts charter of the American Bell Telephone Company, but resulted in the increase of the capitalization of the combination from $25,886,300 to $75,276,600 without the addition of any new capital.

* Mr. Newcomb Carlton, president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, testified as follows:

"I do not cite any of these things as a substitute for wages, because there is no substitute for proper pay. I believe that the telegraphers are underpaid."

THE MIXER AND SERVER

"6. The transmission of intelligence is a function which is specially reserved by the Constitution to the Federal Government, but which in the telephone field has been permitted to become the practical monopoly of a single corporation.

"It is suggested that the Commission recommend:

"1. The purchase by the Federal Government, after proper valuation, of the property of the interstate and local telephone companies, or such part of their equipment as may be necessary for the efficient operation of a National telephone system.

"2. The transfer of all employees, including officials, necessary for the efficient operation of the National telephone system, to the Federal service as far as possible, and the absorption, as far as practicable, of all employees who are not necessary for the telephone system into other branches of the Federal service.

"3. When such employees are transferred to the Federal service, the creation of a special commission to establish salary ratings and other working conditions on a proper basis.

"4. In the meantime provision should be made by Congress for the creation of a minimum wage board to fix minimum wage standards for women employees who are engaged in the transmission of messages in interstate commerce. The board should be authorized to differentiate between localities in fixing minima, if on due consideration such differential rates should be deemed advisable.

"5. The creation of minimum wage boards in the several States to fix minimum wages for all women employees engaged in service within the State."

THE PULLMAN COMPANY.

"The investigations and hearings of the Commission developed the following facts:

"1. The conductors and porters employed in the car service of the Pullman Company are employed under conditions which seem to require radical readjustment. Both classes of employees are admitted by officials of the Company to be underpaid.

"The standard salary of the porters ($27.50 per month) is such that the porters are obliged to secure tips from the public in order to live. The Pullman Company is admitted by the chairman of the Board of Directors to be the direct beneficiary of the tips from the public to the extent of the difference between a fair wage and that which is now paid.

"The hours of service are extremely long, the regulations of the Company allowing porters and conductors when in service only four hours sleep per night and penalizing them severely if they sleep while on duty. Employees of the Pullman Company are subject to many other abuses, among which may be mentioned the arbitrary deduction from their salaries for such time as they may not be needed for the actual service of the Company, although they are required to report at the office each morning and are sometimes compelled to wait the greater part of the day without compensation; the requirement that porters shall furnish blacking although they are not permitted to charge passengers for the service of shoe cleaning; the system of arbitrary penalties for the infraction of multitudinous rules; the requirement that all employees shall purchase their uniforms from one mercantile establishment, the owners of which are largely interested in the Pullman Company; and the lack of proper provision of sleeping quarters for employees when away from their home stations.

"2. The Pullman Company has a bonus system, by which employees who have a 'clean record' for the year receive an extra month's salary. This system serves to increase the earnings of those who receive the bonus, and is unquestionably appreciated by them. Nevertheless, it is inequitable in penalizing with extra severity any infractions of rules which occur during the latter half of the year, and puts into the hands of officials and inspectors a means of discrimination which can be arbitrarily exercised.

"3. The effect of the tipping system is not only to degrade those who are obliged by their economic conditions to accept tips, but to promote discrimination in the service of the public.

"4. The employees of the Pullman Company are unable to improve their condition through organization, as employees known to be members of labor unions are discharged and through the means of an effective system of espionage employees are deterred from affiliating with labor unions.

"5. The Company is tremendously over-capitalized, having increased its capitalization from $36,000,000 in 1893 to $120,000,000 in 1915, without the investment of a single dollar on the part of the stockholders. Upon the basis of actual cash paid in, the annual dividends of the Company are not less than twenty-nine per cent. During the history of the Company the stockholders have received cash dividends amounting to at least $167,000,000 and special stock dividends of $64,000,000, making a total of $231,000,000 on an actual investment of $32,601,238.

"6. The Company enjoys a practical monopoly of the sleeping car service.

"It is suggested that the Commission recommend:

"1. The enactment by Congress of a statute prohibiting the tipping of any employee of a public service corporation engaged in interstate commerce, and providing a proper fine for both the giver and the recipient of the tip.

"2. The amendment of the existing laws regulating the hours of service of train employees to include the employees engaged in the Pullman service.

"3. The extension of the Newlands Act, as already suggested, to cover the Pullman Company."

RAILROADS.

"The investigations of the Commission with regard to railroads have been too limited to permit of general findings or recommendations. Enough evidence has, however, come before the Commission with regard to three points to warrant attention.

"1. The railroad construction camps are largely insanitary, overcrowded and improperly equipped for the health and comfort of the employees. In addition there are many abuses, such as overcharging at the commissary and grafting by foremen.

"2. The so-called voluntary benefit associations of a number of the railroads constitute, under the present system of management, a great injustice to employees. These funds, which are contributed almost entirely by the employees, the management as a rule paying only the cost of administration, until recently were generally used to relieve the companies from liability for accident, employees being required to sign a release in favor of the company at the time that they became members of the benefit association. In some cases, even, the membership is compulsory. Nevertheless the employees have no voice in the management and receive no equity when they are discharged. Finally, such associations, under their present management, serve to exert an undue influence over employees, since the members, if they quit the service for any period or for any cause, sacrifice to the company all that has been paid in.

"3. Under the authority granted by the several States the railroads maintain a force of police, and some, at least, have established large arsenals of arms and ammunition. This armed force, when augmented by recruits from detective agencies and employment agencies, as seems to be the general practice during industrial disputes, constitutes a private army clothed with a degree of authority which should be exercised only by public officials; these armed bodies, usurping the supreme functions of the State and oftentimes encroaching on the rights of the citizens, are a distinct menace to public welfare.

"It is suggested that the Commission recommend:

"1. Thorough investigation by the Public Health Service of railroad construction camps as well as other labor camps, and the preparation of definite plans for such camps and a standard code of sanitary regulations.

"2. The enactment by Congress of a statute expressly prohibiting corporations engaged in interstate commerce from inducing or compelling their employees to sign releases of liability for accidents.

"3. Congress should enact a statute prohibiting interstate employers from requiring their employees to contribute to benefit funds, and providing for the participation of employees engaged in interstate commerce in the management of all benefit funds and other funds to which they contribute.

"4. The regulation by Federal statute of the employment of police on interstate railroads. The statute should not only provide for the organization, personnel and powers of such police, but should definitely provide that during labor disputes such police should be subject to the proper civil authorities and paid out of the public treasury. The statute should also provide that such corporations should be permitted to have firearms only under license, requiring that a definite record be maintained showing the character of each firearm and to whom it is issued.

"5. The assumption by the State of full responsibility and definite provision not only for protecting the property of railroads, but for preventing trespass upon their property."

INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS IN ISOLATED COMMUNITIES.

One of the most striking features of the report is the finding that many typical industrial communities present every aspect of a state of feudalism. The report says:

"The investigations and hearings of the Commission are the basis for the following statements:

"1. The conditions existing in typical industrial communities which are either wholly or in large part owned or controlled by a single corporation or individual employer, present every aspect of a state of feudalism except the recognition of specific duties on the part of the employer. The employees in such communities are dependent on a single corporation, or employer, for their livelihood. Furthermore, the employer in many cases controls the social and political life of such communities, either by the complete absorption of local political powers or by domination of the local authorities.

"2. The fundamental rights of citizens in such communities are, as a general rule, seriously abridged if not actually denied. Among the rights most seriously violated are the right of free speech and assemblage and the right of public highways.

"In some cases, as for example in Colorado, employers in such communities have assumed to usurp the functions of the Federal Government itself in the issuance of money orders, and have not only denied employees access to the post office when located in their company stores but have opened and otherwise interfered with the mail directed to the employees.

"Such feudalistic conditions tend to develop principally in connection with the private exploitation of natural resources, being most frequently found in mining camps, lumber camps (including turpentine camps) and large plantations. There are, however, striking examples even in the case of manufactures, as for example, the textile towns and steel towns.

"3. The most extreme form of domination and control exists in what are known as 'closed camps,' where the employer owns all the land upon which such camps are located and, because of this private ownership, not only exercises control over the local government, but dictates arbitrarily who shall be permitted to come into or pass through such communities. It has frequently been argued that such communities are simply the inevitable accompaniment of the development of new country and will be eliminated with time. This is not true, however, as the Commission's investigations have disclosed a large number of 'closed camps' which have been in existence for more than a generation.

"It is suggested that the Commission recommend:

"1. The enactment of appropriate State legislation providing that where communities develop, even upon privately owned land, the powers of the civil Government shall not be interfered with, nor shall the rights of access to the residence of any person be restricted, nor shall the rights of persons to come and go unmolested, to speak freely and to assemble peacefully, be interfered with or considered to stand upon a different basis from the rights of persons in other communities.

"2. In the case of public lands containing timber or minerals, which are now or may hereafter come into possession of the Federal Government, it should be provided by statute that neither the lands nor the mineral rights should under any circumstances be sold, but should be used only upon lease for a limited term, such lease to contain as a part of the contract the conditions with regard to the rights of inhabitants as recited above and such lease to be forfeitable without recourse in case of the infraction of said conditions.

"3. The Post Office Department should be directed to report to Congress all communities in which the postoffice is in any company's store or other building operated by an employer or in which the postmaster is a private employer or the agent of an employer. The report should show the facts separately for those communities in which the employer or corporation operates an industry upon which any large number of inhabitants are dependent.

"4. Congress and the State legislatures should enact statutes providing that any attempt on the part of an employer to influence his employees either directly or indirectly in connection with any Federal election either for or against any particular candidate, shall constitute intimidation; and further specifying that it shall constitute intimidation for any employer to give notice to his workmen that in the event of the election of any particular candidate, the establishment will not be operated."

AGRICULTURE.

Today's section also urges action to improve the condition of farm labor and to stop the increase in farm tenancy by aiding farm owners. It says:

"It was obviously impossible for the Commission to attempt a detailed investigation of agricultural conditions; but, because of the very immediate bearing of the land question on industrial unrest, it was felt necessary to make as thorough investigation as possible of the phases which seemed to have the most direct bearing on our general problem. The phases selected for discussion were first, the concentration of land ownership as shown by existing statistics; second, the problem of seasonal and casual agricultural labor; third, the increase and change in the character of farm tenancy; and fourth, the introduction of methods into agriculture through the development of corporations operating large tracts of land. The findings and recommendations with reference to the concentration of ownership and the problems of seasonal labor are set forth elsewhere. At this point, it is desired to present the results of the investigation of tenancy and agricultural corporations.

"The investigation of these problems was confined practically to the Southwest, because it is in this region that the systems have become most fully developed and their results in the form of the acute unrest of a militant tenant movement are most easily studied. The investigations in this region, however, were very thorough, consisting of detailed studies and reports by field investigators, which were later confirmed by a public hearing."

"As a result of these investigations the following conclusions are fully justified:

"1. Tenancy in the Southwestern States is already the prevailing method of cultivation and is increasing at a very rapid rate. In 1880, Texas had 65,468 tenant families, comprising 37.6 per cent of all farms in the State. In 1910, tenant farmers had increased to 219,571, and operated 53 per cent of all farms in the State. Reckoning on the same ratio of increase that was maintained between 1900 and 1910, there should be in Texas in the present year (1915) at least 236,000 tenant farmers. A more intensive study of the field, however, shows that in the eighty-two counties of the State where tenancy is highest, the average percentage of tenants will approximate sixty.

"For Oklahoma we have no adequate census figures so far back, but at the present time the percentage of farm tenancy in the State is 54.8 and for the 47 counties where the tenancy is highest the percentage of tenancy is 68.13.

"2. Tenancy, while inferior in every way to farm ownership from a social standpoint, is not necessarily an evil if conducted under a system which protects the tenants and assures cultivation of the soil under proper and economical methods, but where tenancy exists under conditions as are prevalent in the Southwest, its increase can be regarded only as a menace to the Nation.

"3. The prevailing system of tenancy in the Southwest is share-tenancy, under which the tenant furnishes his own seed, tools and teams, and pays to the landlord one-third of the grain and one-fourth of the cotton. There is, however, a constant tendency to increase the landlord's share, through the payment either of cash bonuses or of a higher percentage of the product. Under this system tenants as a class earn only a bare living through the work of themselves and their entire families. Few of the tenants ever succeed in laying by a surplus. On the contrary, their experiences are so discouraging that they seldom remain on the same farm for more than a year, and they move from one farm to the next in the constant hope of being able to better their condition. Without the labor of the entire family the tenant farmer is helpless. As a result, not only is his wife prematurely broken down, but the children remain uneducated and without the hope of any condition better than that of their parents. The tenants having no interest in the results beyond the crops of a single year, the soil is being rapidly exhausted, and the conditions therefore tend to become steadily worse. Even at present a very large proportion of the tenants' families are insufficiently clothed, badly housed, and underfed. Practically all of the white tenants are native born. As a result of these conditions, however, they are deteriorating rapidly, each generation being less efficient and more hopeless than the one preceding.

"4. A very large proportion of the tenants are hopelessly in debt and are charged exorbitant rates of interest. Over ninety-five per cent of the tenants borrow from some source, and about seventy-five per cent borrow regularly year after year. The average interest rate on all farm loans is 10 per cent, while small tenants in Texas pay 15 per cent or more. In Oklahoma the conditions are even worse, in spite of the enactment of laws against usury. Furthermore, over ninety per cent of the tenants are regularly in debt to the stores from which they secure their supplies, and pay exorbitantly for this credit. The average rate of interest on store credit is conservatively put at 20 per cent and in many cases ranges as high as 60 per cent.

"5. The leases are largely in the form of oral contracts which run for only one year and which make no provision for compensation to the tenant for any improvements which may be made upon the property. As a result, tenants are restrained from making improvements and in many cases do not properly provide for the upkeep of the property.

"6. Furthermore, the tenants are in some instances the victims of oppression on the part of landlords. This oppression takes the form of dictation of character and amount of crops, eviction without due notice, and discrimination because of personal and political convictions. The existing law provides no recourse against such abuses.

"7. As a result both of the evils inherent in the tenant system and of the occasional oppression by landlords, a state of acute unrest is developing among the tenants and there are clear indications of the beginning of organized resistance which may result in civil disturbances of a serious character.

"8. The situation is being accentuated by the increasing tendency of the landlords to move to the towns and cities, relieving themselves not only from all productive labor but direct responsibility for the conditions which develop. Furthermore, as a result of the increasing expenses incident to urban life, there is a marked tendency to demand from the tenant a greater share of the products of his labor.

"9. The responsibility for the existing conditions rests not upon the landlords, but upon the system itself. The principal causes are to be found in the system of short leases, the system of private credit at exorbitant rates, the lack of a proper system of marketing, the absence of educational facilities, and last, but not least, the prevalence of land speculation.

"10. A new factor is being introduced into the agricultural situation through the development of huge estates, owned by corporations and operated by salaried managers upon a purely industrial system. The labor conditions on such estates are subject to grave criticism. The wages are extremely low, 80 cents per day being the prevailing rate on one large estate which was thoroughly investigated; arbitrary deductions from wages are made for various purposes; and a considerable part of the wages themselves are paid in the form of coupons, which are, in all essential particulars, the same as the "scrip" which has been the source of such great abuse. Furthermore, the communities existing on these large estates are subject to the complete control of the land-owning corporation, which may regulate the lives of citizens to almost any extent. There is an apparent tendency toward the increase of these large estates and the greatest abuses may be expected if they are allowed to develop unchecked.

"11. Prompt and effective action on the part of the States and the Nation is necessary if any alleviation of the conditions which have been described is to be achieved.

"It is suggested that the Commission recommend:

"1. The development through legislation of a system of longtime leases, providing that the tenant shall be compensated for all improvements made upon the property, and also providing for cropping systems which will maintain the fertility of the soil.

"2. The establishment of National and State farm bureaus for the following purposes:

a. To act as an agent between landlords and tenants in the distribution of tenant labor.

b. To act as an agent between landlords and tenants in the preparation of equitable contracts.

c. To act as an information agency to assist homeseeking farmers.

d. To assist in the distribution of seasoned labor.

"3. The development of better credit facilities through the assistance of the Government and co-operative organization of farmers and tenants. No single measure can be recommended; the results must be achieved through the development of a sound rural credit system, the development of land banks, mortgage associations and credit unions. Foreign experience shows that through these means the rate of interest can be greatly reduced and the security of both the borrower and the lender can be increased.

"4. The general introduction of modernized rural schools and compulsory education of children. The functions of the school system should extend beyond education to the social service of the entire rural community, assisting in the organization of farmers and tenants for co-operative purposes, and promoting other measures looking to the community's welfare.

"5. The revision of the taxation system so as to exempt from taxation all improvements and tax unused land at its full rental value."

OLD INJUNCTION IS THROWN OUT.

Judge McIntosh Rules Out Jacobi Suit Against Waiters' Union—Declares Books Doctored—Affirms Right of Unions to Picket Though Decrying Practice—Business Agent of Employes' Association Gets Another Set-Back.

After a rehearing of the suit brought by the Jacobi German Delicatessen a year ago, seeking an injunction restraining the Waiters' Union from picketing and asking $1,500 alleged damages to the business from the picket maintained, Judge Kenneth McIntosh last Wednesday dismissed both the injunction and the suit.

Jacobi brought his books into court in an attempt to show the damage done his business by the picketing carried on. The judge immediately became aware of the palpable fraud in the statements of account in the books shown as evidence. Jacobi had made the ludicrous error of mixing his dates, the book doctoring being evident from a month before the picket had been established. Halverstadt, Jacobi's attorney, and also attorney for the Employers' Association, denied having had anything to do with tampering with the books.

Ed T. Levi, business agent for the waiters' organization, was the chief witness for the defense. The trial was enlivened by many clashes between Levi and Halverstadt, attorney of the prosecution.

Halverstadt asked the witness why picketing was carried on. "Why, to shame the employer into giving decent working conditions and wages to his workers," replied Levi.

The employers' attorney then inquired where labor unions get the right to picket. Levi replied: "Do humane societies allow you to work a jack-ass seven days in the week? Well, organized labor claims an equal right for humanity."

A strong point made by the defense was that the picketing maintained on Jacobi's business had not injured his business, but rather had helped it, for the Employers' Association rushes to the assistance of any place which is being picketed, making it a special point to patronize such places as are declared unfair to organized labor. It was charged by Levi on the stand that the attorney's fee, in cases where organized labor is being fought, is furnished by the employers' organization. Halverstadt demanded proof, but when Levi said that, though not having the books of the Employers' Association to directly refer to, he could not absolutely prove the assertion; the employers' man hastily passed the point.

Judge McIntosh, in handing down the decision which dismissed the case, expressed sympathy for the struggle of labor to maintain living conditions. He decried picketing as a weapon of offense, but was inclined to be tolerant of it as the only means left to labor in defending itself against the employer who refuses to consider the rights of employes to have a voice in making conditions livable for themselves.—Union Record, Seattle, Wash., September 11, 1915.

THE MIXER AND SERVER

LOBSTER LORE.

If you want to know all there is to know about crabs, lobsters and shrimps—not the kind that haunt the stage exits and the crab, shrimp and lobster palaces of New York—but the crustaceans of curious shapes and more curious habits, writes Gus J. Karger in the Cincinnati Times-Star, you must come to Washington. Then you must visit the National Museum, and inquire for Miss Mary J. Rathbun, "associate in zoology," another one of the remarkable women in the employ of the Government, a woman little known to the public, but on a firmly established footing in the world of science, here and abroad. If Miss Rathbun can't tell you what you want to know, it's not out yet. Your case is hopeless.

Miss Rathbun, sister of Dr. Richard Rathbun, assistant secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, came to Washington from Buffalo 30 years ago. She began her work in the Bureau of Fisheries, and her interest in the crab family was speedily aroused. She immediately began to specialize on the subject, and, as assistant curator of marine invertebrates at the National Museum, now with the title of assistant in zoology, for more than a quarter of a century has had charge of the collection of the higher crustaceans, as well as the other marine invertebrates. She has been a fond step-mother to the great and ever-growing collection of crabs, shrimps and lobsters and has given her life to developing the science. She has contributed materially to marine fauna as a science and has enlightened the world in important particulars as to one of its material sources of food supply. Dr. Paul Bartsch, curator of marine invertebrates, pays her the high compliment of asserting that there isn't a worker anywhere in this particular line who isn't indebted, directly and deeply, to Miss Rathbun for assistance rendered at some time or other. Her department has become the largest and most complete in the world under her administration.

There is a constant and valuable accretion of material to her section. It comes through the field men of the Bureau of Fisheries, the army, the navy, the geological survey and other branches of the national service. Much foreign material comes under a system of exchange with the scientific institutions of other lands, and some is acquired by purchase. All of it is identified, classified and recorded by Miss Rathbun. She knows all the crustaceans in the world by their first, last and Latin names. The interesting study to which she has now devoted herself is the intermingling of fauna from the Pacific and Atlantic, made possible by the construction of the Panama Canal, and the effect on each. Thousands upon thousands of species have come under her observation. Among the specimens preserved under her direction—her department having grown into the largest in the National Museum—are to be found spider and arrow crabs, carefully preserved in alcohol, in bottles placarded with their scientific Latin names; specimens from the Philippines that look like octopi; land crabs from the West Indies which in securing their habitat have the uncomfortable habit of visiting the homes of the natives; land crabs known as cocoanut crabs, because they climb the trees and eat the cocoanuts; a twelve-pound crab from South Australia, the largest crab in the world; the sponge crab, which conceals himself beneath a sponge, and there awaits his prey; the hermit crab, which selects a dead shell, backing into it, to protect his soft, flexible tail end, left soft and flexible through some peculiar oversight of nature; the box, or shame-faced crab, who holds his large claws to his face as though he had something to be ashamed of; the fiddler crab, with one large and one small claw, in an attitude which suggests the violin held to the shoulder; and so many hundreds of others that the recital would fill volumes.

Indeed, Miss Rathbun has filled volumes with the recital, and among her literary contributions to the science is "Marine Brachyura," a large octavo; a special treatise on the Percy Sladen trust expedition to the Indian Ocean, in 1905, under J. Stanley Gardiner; "The Brachyura Collected by the United States Fish Commission Steamer Albatross on the Voyage from Norfolk to San Francisco, 1871-1888," another on "Brachyura and Macrura of the Hawaiian Islands;" "The Stalk-Eyed Crustaceans of Peru and Adjacent Coast," "Decapod Crustaceans of the Northwest Coast of America;" even one in French—"Les Crabes d'eau Douce," a treatise on fresh water crabs prepared by request of the Museum of Natural History in Paris. Altogether she has written nearly a hundred treatises upon her special subject and all of them have been accorded high recognition in this country and elsewhere. Her work along scientific lines has gained her membership in the Washington Academy of Sciences—only five women have been admitted—to the Biological Society of Washington, and to the Society of American Naturalists.

Miss Rathbun does not work at the National Museum all the time. No, indeed, occasionally she takes a vacation. Where does she go? Well, generally to the summer station of the Fish Commission at Woods Hole, Massachusetts, where she can collect more specimens for the National Museum. Occasionally she tours Europe—to visit the museums and bring back photographs of unknown or rare specimens that may be found there. Like all scientists, Miss Rathbun must find a little diversion; and what diversion can there be without the agreeable companionship of lobsters, crabs and shrimps?

WAITERS, COOKS, CARVERS MUST GET HEALTH TICKETS.

90,000 Food Handlers Being Examined in Squads for Traces of Typhoid, Tuberculosis or Other Communicable Diseases—Employing Non-Certified Help to Be a Misdemeanor.

The Board of Health has notified the 90,000 handlers of foods and dishes working in the 4,500 hotels and restaurants of this city that they must without delay get certificates assuring that they are free from typhoid, tuberculosis and other communicable diseases.

Examination of this class of employes was begun three weeks ago at the Occupational Clinic, No. 49 Lafayette street, by Dr. L. I. Harris and a large corps of physicians and nurses. Yesterday 214 persons appeared for examination. The average number examined each day has been between 225 and 250.

The order of examination was given by the Division of Industrial Hygiene. Certificates from private physicians will be accepted if made out on a form furnished by the Board of Health. An employer who hires non-certified help will be guilty of a misdemeanor. At a date to be set all persons preparing or serving food or employed in any way in a hotel or restaurant kitchen must show their certificate when asked.

"We have found enough typhoid suspects and tubercular cases among the persons examined to show the need for such regulations," Dr. Harris told a World reporter yesterday. "We hope to eliminate those carrying typhoid or having other communicable diseases. The present tests are not so conclusive as later examinations will be. A typhoid suspect will be investigated by laboratory tests, and we shall not interfere with the person until we have made certain he is a disease carrier."

"We have received no complaints or protests, but have had commendation from proprietors of some of the largest restaurants and hotels. I am sorry that an evening paper gave emphatic prominence to the fact that proprietors who employ non-certified help will be subject to a $500 fine or imprisonment for one year. It sounds too much as though we were trying to swing a club over their heads, when really the attitude of Commissioner Goldwater is one of persuasion. He desires their co-operation."

"Hash-slingers, dispensers of "ham-ann,'" owners of cabarets and the Tuxedo-garmented head waiters of fashionable hotels visited by a World reporter yesterday were nearly unanimous in approving the action of the Board of Health. This is what they said:

The head waiter at the Waldorf-Astoria: "It is not necessary in a house of this kind. But it is a good thing for some of the smaller restaurants. Indeed it is!"

Mrs. D. C. Deed, who helps her husband manage Dow's Lunchroom at No. 3 Park Place: "I should think it would be a fine thing. It seems that any one who wants to conduct a sanitary lunching place would not object to such regulation."

Benjamin Cohen, auditor at Rector's, was in charge during the manager's absence. "I can't speak for the management, but I think it is a good thing. It would be a benefit to the guests of a house."

Nick Cupo, a cook at the Baltimore Dairy Lunch, No. 146 Fulton street: "I think it is all right to be examined."

Andre Dustanoby: "I think it is excellent. Perfectly right. By all means we ought to have such a regulation."

Harry Kleinman, secretary of Waiters' Union Local No. 1, at No. 12 St. Mark's Place: "This matter will come up before the union next Friday night. I think it is a good thing; it is to protect the people."

The manager of Child's Restaurant, No. 194 Broadway: "I don't see why any person should want to hire help that might endanger the health of his patrons. I'm sure I wouldn't hire a man who had a communicable disease."—The World, New York, Sunday, September 5, 1915.

"MAN'S INHUMANITY TO MAN."

The demonstrations of "man's inhumanity to man" are many, especially is this so between non-union men. And a few instances of this is not amiss if the reader will take this article as it is meant—in the spirit of education.

It is sad enough for a non-union man to try to injure a non-union man, still worse for a non-union man to try to injure a union man, but worst of all for a union man to injure a union man. But cases of this kind are entirely too frequent and without doubt are many times done through ignorance. But the working man who will maliciously and premeditately attempt to injure another working man is to be shunned and avoided by all humanity, for he is no respecter of any person, and will employ the vilest and most violent of means to besmirch the good name or character of not only another man but his very best friends; and it seems the rule that these sort of men are gifted to such an extent with the spirit of the devil that their work oftentimes has the appearance of the true spirit. But sooner or later they are found out; but their work is of such nature that they can not be punished by laws of the land, but merely draw the contempt of the community around them and are thereby forced to seek new fields, which can sometimes be found, in some instances, a few miles away. So this brings us to another good reason why all men should be organized into a body compact enough so that these rascals who have the intention of upbuilding their own reputation on the ruination of other men, instead of their being able to move on a few miles, shall be known by their new neighbors ahead of their arrival, and their dirty work stopped at the beginning.

As I have inferred, "man's inhumanity to man" can be classified into two distinct classes: First, ignorance without intention to harm; and second, malicious or premeditated. These, of course, may be divided into many subdivisions, but in this short article it is the intention of the writer to deal only with these two classes as a whole.

It is the wish of the writer to start the working man thinking, for thinking with one's own mind is educating; and education is life to the trades union principles. So it is up to us to read and listen, to examine ourselves, always keeping on the lookout for knowledge, and try to make the world better for our having lived in it; "To see ourselves as others see us," and "To do unto others as we would have others do unto us." This is the true spirit of unionism, the real principle that stands behind our great American Federation of Labor, and should stand behind every individual therein, because, in as few words as possible, "No man liveth to himself." And only by the practice of these principles can a man be a true union man or an organization live up to the functions for which it is created.

Several instances have happened in this old world lately which demonstrate these two classes of "man's inhumanity to man" very clearly and I shall endeavor to illustrate a few of them so that the intention may more clearly be understood.

Not long ago a recruit asked for and got a chance in an establishment—a position as waiter. Not being experienced nor having an ability to grasp worldly knowledge, the other employees of the place decided to have some fun with him; and by answering his questions with indifferent answers or starting him on a "wild goose chase" for ridiculous articles unknown to mankind, they caused him much worry and trouble, until one smart one conceived the idea to send him to the employer himself for something unheard of, with the result that he exposed his ignorance to the boss himself who immediately fired him. The other employees are still laughing about the fun they had with the boob. Can you see the joke of causing any man to lose a chance to earn an honest living?

Another example is one that happened in one of our business establishments, not long ago. A young lad had been working in this place for some time who carried himself straightforward and attended to his own business, working as a messenger, etc., and through his attention to his business, found favor with the manager to the extent that he was given a chance to show his ability with a set of simple books. But the regular bookkeepers, seeing one of them would in time be replaced by the boy sometime in the future, proceeded to place obstacles in his way by answering his questions only with indifference, and sometimes absolutely wrong answers, causing very serious mix-ups in the books, with the consequence that the boy lost his chance to make good.

Another cause of "man's inhumanity to man," which I shall let the reader decide under which head it belongs: A certain business man had an office room for rent, and when the secretary of the cooks and waiters' union applied to him to rent it for a business office, was told the rent was _____. And when told it was the cooks and waiters' organization who would use it, withdrew the price of rental with the blank statement, "I would rent it to anyone else for _____, but to the cooks and waiters I would charge you one and one-half times that amount." This most assuredly failed to make any good impression on that body, who took it as a direct insult, because to a great extent ignorant people seem to be of the opinion that cooks or waiters are about 50 degrees lower than the clerk or any other working man. Why this is a fact is hard to understand, but nevertheless it is very apparent. Many are the arguments that can be put forward to disprove them inferior. A few of these are, that among this organization are many members that own their own property, are tax-payers and raise families that command the highest possible respect in the community, and these same people that condemn them would have the greatest respect for them if they did not know what vocation they followed for a livelihood. And further, the average cook or waiter receives more wages than the average clerk or bookkeeper and are the first people of any community to aid the needy any time they are called on.

Now for an example of the man who will maliciously injure another: We have in every craft, men who can not go out into the world and battle with the elements honestly and above board, but who are low enough to go to an employer, and by offering his labor for a less wage and will further manufacture out of whole-cloth a lie to the effect that the particular man whom he is trying to replace has been heard to make remarks detrimental to the interests of the employer.

This is the kind of men that organizations stop, for when a business is organized an employer knows just what wages he is compelled to pay and that he can not hire one man any cheaper than another for the same services rendered. By this it is shown that the subject of "man's inhumanity to man" is far-reaching and its capabilities are not restricted to hurting a man's character but can take the very means of life itself away from him.

FIRING LINE

CAUSE OR EFFECT?

Excessive Drinking Not the Cause, But An Effect of Exhaustion and Depression.

The working people are not only the chief bearers of the burdens of society, but also the scapegoats upon which is laid the blame for failures and shortcomings. This fact appeared in the strong relief during the past months in Great Britain, where the government made the charge—which was, of course, echoed and reinforced by employers and officers—that it was on account of the lack of patriotism of the workers and their reckless disregard of duty that work did not proceed as fast or as well as the exigencies of the war required in ammunition factories and shipyards, and this neglect on the part of the workers was, in turn, laid to drink. Proposals for national prohibition, government beer monopoly, heavy taxation, etc., were made, but owing to the almost universal resistance of the public, were withdrawn.

What we are interested in is principally the attempt to put the blame for the unsatisfactory conditions on the workers and their supposed habits of excessive drinking. As usual, the cart was put before the horse. Even if it were true that the workers at times drank more than was good for them, was this a cause of neglect of work, or rather an effect of overwork, unwholesome working conditions and inadequate pay?

Earnest students of the drink question are practically unanimous in the conclusion that excessive drinking, as well as other vices, is not the cause but the effect of that exhaustion and depression which comes from overwork and other improper conditions of environment. A great mass of evidence on this point is available and was marshalled admirably by Louis Brandeis in a brief he submitted to the Supreme Court of the United States in the case arising in Oregon involving the constitutionality of the ten-hour law for women workers in laundries. The weight of evidence demonstrating the depressing effect on the health and morals of the workers, of long hours and unwholesome conditions of work, and, on the other hand, showing the almost instantaneous improvement of health and morals when hours and conditions of work were bettered, was so overwhelming in that case that the Supreme Court of the United States deliberately set aside such fundamental principles of law as the freedom of contract and the prohibition of class legislation, and sustained the ten-hour law on grounds purely sociological, physiological, economic, eugenic and moral.

The facts and conditions involved in this matter are not peculiar to any one race or nation. Their application is universal to the human race. And it seems the present concern in England about the excessive drinking by considerable bodies of workingmen to the extinction of their patriotism, arises out of a misconception of causes and circumstances. In a recent letter published in American papers from T. P. O'Connor, there occurs this passage:

"The increased cost of living and the neglect of some employers to consider the demands for increased wages, have produced some disturbance, though less than the newspaper accounts would lead foreign opinion to suppose."

"The most potent cause of labor troubles is the cruel overwork, such as the men, especially in the armament and khaki workers, are subjected to. The men become sometimes so exhausted that they go to bed for two days at a time, and no amount of persuasion can induce them to work. Overwork, as well as the demand for increased wages are responsible as much as drinking for the labor troubles, although stories of drinking are greatly exaggerated. I regard the demand for drastic restrictions in connection with the drinking hours as one of many symptoms of the growing ferocity of the concentration of war feeling, rather than as justified by proved necessities."

This is confirmed by labor leaders who have repeatedly protested against the imputation of moral irresponsibility in the working class. Carolyn Wilson, an American correspondent, quotes a British labor leader as saying: "There seems to be a conspiracy on foot to lay the complaints of the laboring man to drinking. But this particular cause and effect work the other way. If the workingman had not reached the fatigue point and passed it, he would never take to drink the way he does. He needs something to provide an energy—artificial, to be sure—to return to work the next day."

Will Crooks, labor leader in the House of Commons, speaks in a similar strain, saying there is less drinking now than before the war.—Toledo Leader, July 23, 1915.

ENEMY OF BACCHUS TELLS OF THE "DRY" INSTITUTE SUCCESS.

Dr. Neal Declares Prohibition States Bring In Most Revenue from Anti-Booze Medicine.

Dr. B. E. Neal, the man who assists the driver of the water wagon to cause his patrons to stay "put" and the inventor of that decoction which takes away the desire to place the right foot upon the rail, is at the Hotel Utah on his way from Des Moines to San Francisco. At Des Moines he tarried long enough to mix a sufficient quantity of antbooze medicine to supply his sixty-five institutes for six months. Dr. Neal is welcoming the advent of Idaho, Colorado, parts of Nevada and parts of Montana to the "dry" columns, as Dr. G. N. Curtis, local representative of the Neal Institute, will go to those states and open institutes. Although the man who is chasing old King Alcohol over the hill does not believe in the drink habit, he asserts that he makes more money out of "dry" territory than he does out of "wet."

"It sounds funny, but the institutes which we have in the 'dry' states and in the semidry territory of 'wet' states make more money than those where the sale of liquor is licensed," said Dr. Neal. "Los Angeles, which is a 'wet' spot in a 'dry' territory, does not give us one-tenth of the patients that its surrounding territory gives us. In Iowa we have the best business and in Kansas the patients wait their turns. The reason of this is that instead of being tipplers those who desire drink in 'dry' territory are compelled to drink from the jug or the bottles. I believe in prohibition, but I want prohibition which will prohibit. Stop the manufacture is the only way. We are to open sanitariums in Idaho, Colorado, Montana and Nevada this year, and they will be under the charge of Dr. Curtis. The reason is that those states are going dry and good business will result."—Salt Lake Herald, Salt Lake City, Utah, Sept. 8, 1915.

SITUATION IN MOORHEAD AFTER BEING DRY ONLY TWENTY-ONE DAYS—BLUES AND PLENTY.

Every Line of Business Affected—Many Are Sorry They Voted "Dry."

In the Old Testament, at the close of every narrative, the writers have a trite saying: "And it is even so unto this day." By the use of these eight words the old scribes and word jugglers were able to make men believe that what had been had always and would always be; and that their system still has its faithful few, we need no other proof than a fairly casual perusal of the columns of the "dry" papers since the county option election.

The Courier-News, a notoriously "dry" sheet published at Fargo by an egotistical orthodox reverend, loads its editorial columns upon the slightest occasion with the old jargon, "And it is dry, even unto this day." There is a word of truth in the old Spanish proverb: "It is a waste of lather to shave an ass," so we are not going to waste any lather on the Courier-News scribe, but we are going to remark that there are times when there are strong indications that the fabled fool-killer has failed to properly safeguard the citizens of Fargo.

The Courier-News would have its readers believe that the closing of the saloons in Moorhead had in no wise injured the city or its citizens, morally or financially. A ground mole boring its way beneath the sod knows nothing of sunshine or cloud. Just so with the saintly (?) editor of The Courier-News. Boring his moleish way through fanatical and intellectual darkness, he knows absolutely nothing of conditions outside his narrow sphere. He couldn't tell a blind pig from a polecat; he is just as familiar with business and economic conditions in Moorhead or any other city as a South Sea Islander is with the polar regions. He, through his sheet, persistently insists that the closing of the saloons has NOT injured business in Moorhead.

Let us see if it has or not. First, there were thrown on the already flooded labor market more than three hundred and twenty-five men, and the majority of them were men of family. On its face these figures mean little. But wait! They mean that more than one thousand three hundred mouths must be fed and more than one thousand three hundred backs must be sheltered and clothed. And HOW!

When one asks the dry fossil on The Courier-News his eyes roll and a prayer rises about as close to the throne as the smoke off a warm stew as he says, "Gawd will provide some way." When the sanctimonious sky guide, who scared half his ignorant flock into believing Saint Peter would run them through the heavenly sausage machine if they didn't vote 'er dry, is asked about these unemployed, he answers with a smirk, "They were in unGodly business, sir; they were instruments of Satan, and their future and the future of their spawn is no concern of mine."

There are, then, more than one-sixth as many people out of employment in Moorhead as there are residents of that city. The closing of the saloons has done that much and that many. This statement aenent the unemployed will bring forth a storm of abuse from the dry element, but abuse doesn't answer my statement, and I am going to answer the coming slurs by saying Whenever a reform is forced on the people at the expense of hungry children and jobless men, that reform is as rotten as the sewers of hell.

With the closing of the Moorhead saloons, the city (officially) was loser to the extent of sixty thousand dollars. A loss of sixty thousand dollars in any city's revenue—any city the size of Moorhead—is a loss that can not be made good except at the expense of the taxpayers, and the taxpayers cease to be such when the working class revenues fail; for there is but one source of wealth, cash if you wish, and that is through working class channels. When the worker can not earn he can not pay. Moorhead then stands loser more than sixty thousand dollars annually.

Taxes are higher, or will be, when the next tax levy is made; and even now in this town, just as in all other towns where the fanatical element held high carnival at the polls, there is a storm of protest going up along with the taxes. Postal receipts have fallen off, as have water and light receipts. Some business houses besides the saloons have gone to the financial wall, and others are doomed to follow soon. Thousands of dollars that at one time were being spent in this city are now going to foreign concerns. Mail-order houses are reaping the harvest of dollars that were, previous to May 17th, being spent in Moorhead. Rent has gone down, and thus the landlord, the property owner, has lost along with his less fortunate brother, the renter. This, then, is the result of the "glorious victory" of the "drys." Fargo, as of yore, is a seething cesspool of piggers—men who live off women and prostitutes. Its slime of the slums pours an endless stream of human filth through its sister city, Moorhead. The vice and crime, the drunkenness and debaucheries charged to Moorhead, have for years had their fountain head on the prohibition side of the Red River; and today, with business in the city of Moorhead paralyzed by the action and influence of a bunch of fanatical jobberwocks, The Courier-News, an influential (?) reform rag of Fargo, boasts of the dry "victory" while its own city is an embryonic social hell.

Moorhead may, in the coming years, rise again from the ashes of the prohibition conflagration, but it will do so only when the taxpayers have been bled white.

Several beautiful homes are for sale, and quite a few business men outside of the $4,000,000 a year enterprise which was voted out are anxious to sell and move, but can not do so. As one prominent citizen said: "The heart has been taken out of the city."—Moorhead (Minn.) Citizen, July 21, 1915.

THE PROOF OF THE PUDDING.

Charleston, W. Va., Sept. 6.—An examination of the Police Court records in this, the State's capital, shows an increase of 138 per cent in the arrests for drunkenness in July, 1915, as compared with July, 1914.

The "new broom" of prohibition "swept clean" during the first few months of State-wide prohibition, there being only twenty-nine arrests for drunkenness in July, 1914, as against sixty-nine arrests for drunkenness in July, 1915.

The police records show that in July, 1913, when Charleston had saloons, there were 101 arrests for drunkenness in Charleston, and that in July, 1915, after a year of prohibition, there was a total of 109 arrests for drunkenness and for violation of the liquor law; there being sixty-nine cases of drunkenness and forty violations of the law against selling liquor. There were only three arrests for violation of the prohibition law in July, 1914.

The Prohibition Commissioner has issued a statement in which he makes the claim that the first year of prohibition has very materially reduced the number of arrests for intoxication since 1913, but it seems that he has overlooked an essential factor in the moral equation when he fails to mention the enormous increase in the number of violations of the liquor laws.

Also, in comparing the figures for the two periods, the Prohibition Commissioner neglected to mention the fact that when there were saloons in Charleston many of those who were arrested for intoxication were visitors, whereas now those who are arrested for drunkenness are almost invariably residents of Charleston. In other days visitors flocked to Charleston, but now the transients are here only on imperative business.

"The trouble with the prohibition law is that it is much more drastic than is desired by the people generally," said a city official. "Commissioner Blue and the Legislature have gone too far and have lost the support of public sentiment by taking from the people the right to receive shipments of liquor for legitimate personal use. As it is now, the citizen must either go away from the state for his wine, beer and whiskey, or must patronize a bootlegger. The result is that while the police try to do their duty there is no disposition on the part of the people to bring about convictions for illicit selling."

"The police keep as close watch as they can and they make a good many arrests, but witnesses are hard to get and are unwilling to testify. Prohibition seems to be breaking down of its own weight."

"Liquor is brought here in motor boats, automobiles and on freight trains in large quantities, and is peddled out by agents of men 'higher up.' The little fellows get caught, but the big ones are making a great deal of money. One man who never sells direct to the consumer operates three automobiles and a motor boat, but he can not be convicted here because he does not deliver the liquor within the city limits. His agents receive it outside the city line under cover of darkness and later dispense it at a dollar a pint."

Cunning devices used in the transportation of intoxicants from wet into dry territory indicate that prohibition, as well as necessity, is the mother of invention.

When Willis Howe was arrested recently in Tyler County with twenty gallons of whiskey in tubes used ordinarily for the transportation of nitroglycerine for use in shooting oil and gas wells, the prohibition officers admitted that Howe was at least original. He would not have been caught had he not been unduly reckless in handling the tubes supposed to contain explosives.

"They try all kinds of schemes in bringing whiskey into the state," remarked A. H. Curry, one of the most active field workers for the Department of Prohibition in this state. "I am never surprised any more at anything I find."

It was only a short time ago that Mr. Curry was apprised by a friend that some mine town loafers had hit upon the shipment of whiskey in small gas pipes. He had no difficulty in finding some of these pipes and their contents, but the owners or shippers could not be found.

On one occasion, at Fairmont, in the central part of the state, the prohibition officers confiscated a whole box car loaded with whiskey of a very good brand. On another occasion a carload of household goods received in Charleston, having been consigned from Cincinnati, was found to contain a piano box filled with whiskey in pints. It was the anxiety shown by the consignee for the safety of the piano box that led to his arrest and his subsequent indictment. When his case came to trial in the Kanawha County Intermediate Court, the jury was unable to find a verdict.

It was estimated at the time the state was placed in the prohibition column that hundreds of barrels of whiskey were safely hidden away, some of it not to be used until years later. In nearly every town along the Ohio river the prohibition officers have had their eyes on suspects, most of whom have not made an effort to sell any of the hidden liquor. It is believed that the barrels and cases hidden then are nearly all safely stowed away yet, and after the officers become less vigilant than they have been during the first year of prohibition it is expected these goods will be put on the market at a high price.

On the outskirts of Charleston, one householder who financed several bootleggers during the period when Charleston was without saloons a few years ago, had hidden in his garden over five hundred gallons of whiskey in bottles and jugs. He buried it in much the same way that farmers bury turnips and apples in the fall. A short time ago the little heaps of earth in this man's garden were removed, the liquor having been taken in the night time to a place the owner thought safer.

It was just a few days ago that a man of good address, wearing modest clothes of the kind suggesting him as a business man, registered at one of the Parkersburg hotels. He had two large trunks like those carried by traveling salesmen. He had a sample room reserved, yet he took no prospective customers to it. About one week after the man had left, the proprietor of the hotel was informed by a man about town that the supposed traveling salesman was a bootlegger of the first class, and that he had disposed of a large amount of whiskey at three dollars a quart during the short time he was there. This man did not sell to the common herd, but selected for his customers business men who like their toddy, young men who belonged to social clubs, and "good fellows" generally, but not of the type that tells everything that might be told of such purchases as are under the ban of the law.

To every one of those who made a purchase, the up-to-date bootlegger said that soon another vendor would be along and in another method supply their wants in the whiskey line. His list of safe men to sell to would be considered of big value to the next vendor paying the town a visit.

In some sections of the state the creation of new drinks has been reported. One concoction was of sufficient strength to have caused the temporary insanity of one of its users. This liquid was made fiery and effective by a process of fermentation which followed a combination of red pepper, a sort of mash of bran, rain water and a few ingredients none but the maker knows. It requires about one month for this stuff to get "right," and when it does reach its real point of "excellence" its consumption would make a tortoise run a foot race with a fox.

A good many railroad men have found it easier to earn a livelihood by selling whiskey than by working on the road. Yet some of them still retain their jobs on the road and bring in whiskey as a side line. A few of them have been arrested, and some have been sentenced to work on the county roads after conviction, but the majority have established a safe trade which they supply at frequent intervals. These deal only with the moderate drinkers who are wise enough to keep still about their source of supply.

During idle times a great many miners, some of whom would be as satisfied in jail as at large, have succeeded in making more money selling whiskey than they would in the mines at hard labor. A great many of these find it perfectly safe to sell among their acquaintances, their greatest difficulty being in transporting the goods into the coal regions. They have devised various means of getting it to points of safety, some working in twos or threes, getting the goods to one point and allowing someone else to take it further along the line, wrapped up differently from the way it was originally shipped. One popular manner of shipping has been in linseed oil cans. This scheme worked along the Cabin Creek branch of the Chesapeake & Ohio for several weeks until finally one owner of an oil can was arrested and his goods confiscated. After he served two months working on the county roads he was said to have hit upon another manner of bringing in his liquor. That he is still selling, his friends admit. Sometimes he is away from home several days, and after his return is not discovered making a suspicious move, for some of his friends do the actual selling when he brings the goods in.

A Kelley's Creek miner, who is now held to the grand jury in Federal Court, is alleged to have made hundreds of sales while disguised with a set of false whiskers.

In the smaller towns the old-fashioned way the moonshiners had of dispensing whiskey has been utilized with a certain element of success. One man will casually ask a prospective customer if he wouldn't like to have a drink. An affirmative answer brings out the intimation that if a dollar were left in a certain place within fifteen minutes or some other set period of time, he might return later and be surprised. The surprise is a pint of whiskey, or a larger amount if the money left in the hiding place is sufficient.

The man who talks too much has more or less trouble in getting whiskey; the others do not.

One rather ghastly device that was successful for the time being was brought to light because one man in the secret became too talkative.

An entire family gathered at a railroad station and received a casket supposed to contain the remains of a relative who had died in Nebraska. There was an elaborate funeral, but the casket was buried without being opened. Many visits were paid to the grave later, and one of the mourners came away in such "high spirits" that his tongue wagged unguardedly. The result was that prohibition officers unearthed the coffin and found that it contained numerous jugs of whiskey.

WHERE THE PRINTERMEN STAND.

In recent numbers of the International Typographical Union Journal, the drink question has received some attention. Articles so far offered have, in the main, been quite free from the fanatical touch which so frequently characterizes the compositions of those opposed to the licensed beverage industry. In the August (1915) number we are gratified to note a fine upstanding article from the pen of quite as able a member as the I. T. U. can boast of, and they have an abundant array of splendid talent. The author of the article which we refer to and which will be found appended is T. W. McCullough, of Omaha, Neb. Brother McCullough is and has been one of the delegates from the I. T. U. to the conventions of the American Federation of Labor for several years. At the last convention, as well as the previous session in 1913, he was chairman of the Committee on Executive Council's Report, a committee which has been accorded by many as being one of the two most important committees of the American Parliament of Labor. After the introductory paragraph, Brother McCullough says:

"For those earnest advocates of total abstinence, who are so earnestly advocating prohibition and its support by the International Typographical Union, I would like to suggest that the International Typographical Union is a trades organization, first of all, and that it has yet much to do before it has fulfilled its mission as such. It will therefore be better for us to address ourselves to those questions having to do with the more immediately important matters of hours, wages and conditions, the treatment of apprentices, the development of the art of printing, and of those who follow it, the improvement and extension of the Union Printers Home, and a host of other things that come directly within the scope and purview of the organization.

"I know that somebody will say that in the work of 'improvement' of the printer may rightly be included the correction of his habits and the cultivation of his morals. Perhaps; but it would be better for the craft to make a good printer of him first. Let him work out his own salvation as to other matters, but let us, as far as possible, use the influence of the union to improve his qualifications as a workman. None of those who know me will misunderstand my attitude in this matter, and for the information of those who do not know me personally, I will state here that I am a total abstainer. I was not always so, but for fourteen years I have held a seat on the water wagon, and expect to stay there. I welcome the advent of each and every one who gets up alongside me, but for those who do not elect to travel on the cart I hold a similar regard. Some of the best printers I ever knew were accustomed to drink; some of the worst were teetotalers. This doesn't argue anything, one way or another. At present I am personally acquainted with a large number of printers who like a glass of beer, and take it, too, or sometimes a little stronger, but who are thrifty, industrious, and in all ways measure up to a high standard of citizenship. They own their homes, are raising families, educating their children and fitting them for the full and high responsibilities of citizenship, and in every way discharging their duties as men. But this is no argument for drinking.

"The point is plain and simple, the International Typographical Union has all it can attend to without butting into the prohibition game."

PERRY PUTS IDLENESS ABOVE DRINK IN CRIME.

Judge in Change Will Escape Sobs of Women —Jurist Sees Increase in Wrongdoing by Prohibition.

"Idleness, not intoxicating liquor, is the greatest cause of crime," declares District Judge John A. Perry as a result of his observations during one year's service as presiding judge in the West Side Criminal Court.

Judge Perry completes his work in the criminal division this morning and after a short vacation will go to the Fourth Division of the District Court, exchanging places with Judge Wright, who will preside at the West Side Court for a quarter of a term.

"Yes, I am glad to change," said Judge Perry yesterday. "While the work of examining the law is not so varied over there as it is in the civil divisions, yet there are many unpleasant duties at the West Side that get on a man's nerves. To sentence a man to the penitentiary while his wife and children sit back in the audience and watch the judge with pleading eyes, gets on the nerves and the heartstrings, too, but when a wife or mother shrieks at the sentence it fairly touches the soul of the judge.

"What causes criminals? Not whiskey! Crime is generally charged to whiskey. I thought so until I went to the West Side Court and presided for more than a year and had every kind of a criminal before me. There were few cases before me for which drink was responsible. I would say that 10 per cent would be a large ratio to give to liquor as the cause of crime. I would like to say that liquor is responsible for crime and would like to say that prohibition will lessen crime in this state, but I am sorry that I can not say it conscientiously.

"Then what is the cause of crime? Idleness! Ninety per cent of crime is caused by idleness—city idleness. I have talked with Judge Butler and other judges who have presided in the West Side Court and they agree that whiskey and strong drink is not the great cause of crime. The two often go together but we can not say truthfully that drink causes over 10 per cent of the crime.

"Most crime is committed by young, idle men. Young men who lounge about the streets and try to keep up appearances without work. Judge Class of Brighton, who has a large district of counties remote from the city, tells me that the nearer his courts come to the city the greater the number of criminal cases he has to try. Farther out in the country districts he has but few cases. But when he gets around near Denver, where young men can run in and out of the city, he encounters criminal cases.

"Yes, I am sorry, but we can not lay crime to drink, and I am also sorry that I do not anticipate a reduction of crime thru prohibition in Colorado. If drink had anything to do with it, I should fear an increase in crime. Good whiskey is bad enough and has its evil effects, but bad whiskey, which usually is sold in prohibition districts, they say is the limit. And, the 'bootlegger' will sell whiskey to anybody.

"A drunkard or child—any one who has the price—can buy the stuff from a 'bootlegger,' while a regular saloonkeeper, if he is decent, is inclined to draw the line. The 'bootlegger' knows he is an outlaw and does not stop at anything.

"But I am not discussing the late election, nor condemning nor praising the system. I am merely saying that the idea so often advanced that liquor is the cause of crime in this country is an unsound one. Idleness and the lack of proper home training are at the bottom of nearly all of the crime."

The following paragraphs show how Judge Perry views it:

Contrary to general belief, crime is not caused largely by whiskey.

Idleness and lack of proper home-rearing cause 90 per cent of all crime.

Intoxicating liquor is responsible for less than 10 per cent of crime.

I anticipate no reduction of crime thru prohibition in Colorado.

The bootlegger will sell whiskey to anyone; the saloonkeeper is inclined to discriminate.

Passing sentence on convicted men is soul-harrowing and nerve-shattering.

I am glad to change back to the civil divisions of the court.—Rocky Mountain News, Denver, Col., August 24, 1915.

EGG IN BEER IS CONSIDERED DRINK.

Police Judge MacMahon Rules for Defendant in Matter of Lunch Law—When Cooked It's Food—Expert Bartenders Are Called to the Stand to Aid in Settling the Case.

Patrons of Seattle saloons who crave with their beer the additional nourishment of an egg need not be denied. The egg may have been derived from the goose, duck, ostrich or barnyard hens.

Such is the effect of a decision rendered yesterday by Acting Police Judge Thomas B. MacMahon, following a trial in which the intrinsic food value of eggs and beer was considered minutely. Provided the egg has been broken and poured into a schooner of beer, held the court, the ordinance prohibiting free lunches in bar-rooms has not been violated.

J. Aronson was charged with violating the free lunch ordinance, in that he gave away with the usual 5-cent glass of beer an egg. The defendant pleaded not guilty, on the ground that the egg, in the instance cited, became a part of the drink and was no more food than the hops and barley of which the beer was composed. The court inclined to this view of the matter.

The complaining witness was G. P. Ward, of St. Louis, who said he had been visiting in Seattle for four months. Ward paid 5 cents, received a beer, but no egg. On requesting the egg, he declared he was told he could not have it because he had not asked for it. E. C. Maddox, another witness for the city, asserted he paid a nickel and received an egg in his beer.

On the stand, in his own behalf, Aronson averred that egg-in-beer is one of the oldest combinations known to mixologists.

"Also," continued Mr. Aronson, "I would say that eggs are used in the composition of numerous drinks, including gin fizz, egg-nog, silver fizz and sherry-and-egg. We don't give away food. We put an egg in the beer. It's no help-yourself place."

"Isn't a sandwich or an onion with a beer as old an institution as egg with a beer?" asked City Attorney Van Ruff, on cross-examination.

"Possibly," replied the witness, "but I never yet heard of throwing them in the beer."

W. J. Shields, for seventeen years a bartender in Seattle, was called as a an expert. "Is egg considered a food or part of the drinks in a bar?" he was asked.

"Why, I always considered an egg a liquid in that connection," answered Shields. "When it's raw it's a fluid, and when it's cooked it's food. That's the way I look at it."

"Then," cross-examined the City Attorney, "when you eat pears, apples or peaches raw they are not food—they're liquid. And when you have apple sauce it's food?"

The witness maintained that eggs were in a class by themselves in this regard. In ruling on the case, the court remarked:

"This is a very old ordinance, but never before has it been submitted to a court. It is designed to abate the nuisance of the free lunch, which was an evil when you consider the quality of food that constituted it. Often the lunch stood for days or weeks, during which time numerous numbers examined it before some adventurous persons, driven by the pangs of hunger, ventured to eat.

"Mr. Webster, in the 1914 edition of his dictionary, holds that an egg, in its common use is 'a food material.' The word 'lunch' is defined as 'a piece of food—a light repast.' The definition of food shows that it includes anything of nutritive material—drugs, water even. Obviously saloons dispensing water are giving away a certain amount of food, to say nothing of the food value of beer and other intoxicating liquors.

"I am rather surprised that anybody of our 350,000 population has complained of this practice of giving away an egg in beer. It was left for a person of the beer-famed city of St. Louis to complain. However, he is entitled to his day in court and to every consideration.

"In the complaint growing out of these 5-cent purchases the city does not specify whether the eggs were the products of ducks, geese and other birds. As ostrich eggs cost $24 apiece, I presume they must be eliminated.

"And, if we supposed the eggs to have been common barn yard articles, there are several questions to consider in ruling on the matter. If an egg were at an advanced age, there might be life contained therein, which would complicate the point of law. Some jovial gentlemen, drinking beer in which had been dropped an egg, might drink the beer and take the egg home, using it for a substantial breakfast.

"I can not see, however, in what way this practice of Mr. Aronson's has injured the man from St. Louis. The defendant will be discharged."

The city attorney inquired whether the court was ruling on the validity of the ordinance. The court replied that he was not, that he was merely dismissing the defendant.

"Then," resumed Mr. Van Ruff, "I do not see how I may appeal this case."—Seattle Post-Intelligencer, August 17, 1915.

NATIONAL MODEL LICENSE LEAGUE.

Louisville, Ky., August 21, 1915.

To the Editor—Of recent years it has been the fashion for certain editors to scoff at "personal liberty" in connection with the movement to prohibit the manufacture and sale of liquor, but I wonder if these same scoffers will approve of the peculiarly offensive form of attack on personal liberty to buy and use liquor that is described in the following Associated Press item from Mason City, in the "dry" State of Iowa:

"The seizure of 119 barrels of beer at a local railroad freight house caused the city authorities today to decide on the appointment of an official to be known as 'liquor censor.' It is to be the duty of the censor to determine what citizens have temperance records sufficiently good to entitle them to receive liquor shipments from 'wet' territory."

This item may or may not be true. But its truth is not essential, because the main point is that just such wretched meddling with other people's business is the logical outcome of the prohibition propaganda.

The ideal temperance law from the "dry" standpoint would be to give to a prohibitionist the power to sit in judgment on the fitness of his neighbors to select the articles of their diet.

But why stop with a censorship on diet?

Why not pass officially on the moral fitness of each of the women of the community to adopt certain styles of dress?

Why not have an official censorship on each man's fitness to handle money, or to take unto himself a wife, or to have more than one child?

It would seem that our civil liberty is in greater danger from "reform" than it is from any other source, for it is only in the name of goodness that our freedom is being curtailed.

The leading prohibition organization calls itself the "Church in Action," and, as such, is attempting to assume control of the political and moral affairs of the people, and if the so-called "Church in Action" succeeds in getting control, then the Liberty Bell might as well be thrown into the melting pot and be recast in the form of a church surmounted by a cannon, or, more properly perhaps, the image of the thumbscrew used for the conversion of heretics.

Very truly yours,

T. M. GILMORE,
President National Model License League.

IS LABOR DRUNK.

"If the workingmen of this country once get sober enough to do their own thinking they will soon remove the conditions that created the Rockefeller fortune. The workingmen are in the majority, but the policy of those who exploit them has been to keep them befuddled with drink so they can not think for themselves." These are the words of Quincy Lee Morrow, advocate of County Prohibition, uttered in a debate at the Peace Auditorium last Sunday.

It is the meanest slander ever offered against the toilers of any land, and may be taken as some mark of the knowledge some sincere but misinformed people have regarding economics and working class conditions.

The Industrial Relations Commission has just finished nearly two years of investigation in an effort to ascertain the cause of Industrial Unrest in the United States, and these are given as the causes:

1. Unjust distribution of wealth and income.
2. Unemployment and denial of opportunity to earn a living.
3. Denial of justice in the creation, in the adjudication and in the administration of the law.
4. Denial of the right and opportunity to form effective organizations.

The Commission also found that $500 per year is the income of half the wage earning fathers in the United States.

It also found that justice, the right to organize, unemployment and unequal distribution of wealth exist. Why? Because Big Business owns the courts, the militia and the newspapers.

The commission called many witnesses. It is evident that they neglected one. To be sure they called Sam Gompers and other labor leaders, and they, according to Mr. Morrow, not being sober, told the commission just these things which upon investigation proved to be true.

But had Mr. Morrow been called as a witness how different the report of the Commission might have been. Picture this Collosus of Brains on the stand before the Commission. Says Chairman Walsh: "Mr. Morrow, what is the cause of present poor conditions for working people in the United States?" Mr. Morrow smiles in a pitying way, and says, "Why, Mr. Walsh, I am surprised that you don't know the answer to such a simple question. Why the working people are all drunk. Close all the breweries and saloons and everyone will be prosperous and happy."

The peculiar thing though is that John B. Lennon was a member of that Commission, and the dries of Hennepin County are flooding the mails with literature telling the union people what a staunch prohibitionist Lennon is. Yet Lennon's report contains no word to show that present conditions exist because the working people are all drunk.

How sad to think that Morrow was not the first witness called by the Commission. It would have saved the Commission so much work and the government so much expense. It was almost criminal of Mr. Morrow not to have forced himself upon the Commission if he was not subpoenaed.

You, little girl, getting $20 a month from the Telephone Company, your wages are small because you are not sober. You clerks of the department stores who receive the munificent salaries of $6 per week, for heaven's sake stay sober and see how high your wages will be raised. You slaves of Standard Oil, and the Steel Trust, never touch liquor again and you will be surprised at the way in which your wages will be increased.

And you men in the basic industries of the United States, one-fifth of whom the Commission says never get the opportunity to work, always out of employment, do be careful that out of the generous wages which Society gives you that you do not spend a single nickel for beer, and behold your amazement will be boundless at the way in which your wages will increase.

We agree with you, Morrow, in one thing. The exploiters do befuddle the minds of the workers. Not with liquor, or they would not contribute to the dry cause, and the Steel Corporation would have no "What Did Booze Ever Do For You" sign across the entrance to its plant. They befuddle the workers with the "Kept Press," by raising false issues like the present one in Hennepin County, and with the flim-flam talk of men like yourself. Labor's salvation comes not with prohibition, but with organization.

You may be sincere Morrow. It is doubtful if it is a compliment if you are. But in the name of the millions of underpaid women and children of the country, especially those of the prohibition states; in the name of the toilers willing to work who never have a chance to work; in the name of Organized Labor, we say your charge against Labor is a lie.

We salute you, Quincy Lee Morrow, befuddler Extraordinary for his Majesty, Big Business.—Labor Review, Minneapolis, Minn., Sept. 10, 1915.

INDIVIDUAL MODERN OPINION NOW ADVANCED AGAINST THE DOCTRINE OF LOCAL OPTION.

On the top of the beautiful peristyle at the World's Fair, Chicago, was this legend:

"Toleration—the best fruit of the last four hundred years."

"Toleration" means letting the other man live according to his best light.

Are the "Anti-Saloon Leaguers" and the "Prohibitionists" tolerant or bigoted, temperate or fanatic?

Temperance is "Moderation."

Prohibition sails under the false flag of "Temperance." It is not "temperance," and never was.

"Local Option" is another false flag for "Prohibition."

If local option were right, what unit would be right—the country, the State, the county, the township, the municipality, ward, precinct or individual?

Local option is an act of tyranny. It permits the other fellow to say what you shall do (if there are a few more of him than there are of you).

The logical analysis of "local option" means the restraint to which "convicts" are subject, while "individual option" permits the liberty of every man.

Local option means that you haven't brains enough to regulate your own affairs and conduct.

I believe in "individual" option rather than local option.

Individual option means that your reason controls you and not somebody else's reason.

Liberty hard earned, slowly wrested from tyrants and kings through many centuries; liberty inspires and crowns true manhood. Base indeed is the traitor who would voluntarily surrender one bit of his liberty or freedom. He would be a coward, a fool and a poltroon and only fit to be a slave; but he who manfully fights for his freedom, his liberty and his rights, is indeed a free man, and of that heroic type that gave mankind the liberty it now enjoys.

The inheritance of liberty, handed down by the founders of the Republic, should be passed unimpaired to our descendants forever. Look well, then, that you do not follow false preachers and false prophets, but hold fast to true liberty, and cultivate the motto of Virtue, Liberty and Independence for our country, our State, and for the individual citizens.

Jesus made wine at Cana.

William Penn founded Pennsylvania and founded a brewery in Pennsylvania, and was imprisoned several times abroad because he believed in "personal liberty," to worship God as he pleased, and not as the Church and State combined wanted him to.

George Washington built a distillery on his estate.

Patrick Henry was a barkeeper at Hanover Court House, Virginia.

Abraham Lincoln sold whiskey at retail at New Salem, Sangamon County, Illinois.

Neither a consistent Christian nor Jew can be a prohibitionist without being false to the teachings of the Bible; that spiritual guide of our faith and rule of our conduct. The Chinese and Mohammedans are prohibitionists because Confucius and Mohammed taught prohibition.

Would you substitute the civilization of the Chinese and the Turk for our civilization?

Local option and prohibition breed "hypocrisy," "discontent" and "dishonesty." They unite "Church and State." They put the preacher in politics.

Whether property is taken by a highwayman, a burglar or the State, by force, without compensation, is thievery.

Would you prohibit the brewing and drinking of coffee and tea because coffee and tea are said to make more people nervous than strong drink?

Would you prohibit eating because doctors say more people die from gluttony, and that overeating causes more sickness than whiskey?

Would you prohibit tobacco and cigars because they are offensive to some people and it is argued that it is an economic waste and the money spent goes up in smoke?

Would you do away with the jewelry business because the lust for jewelry and precious stones has been responsible for many women's downfall?

Would you do away with automobiles because many people have mortgaged their homes to acquire them and many people are said to be killed and injured by them?

Some of the pseudo economists argue that the money spent for liquor is wasted. It is not. The United States Government gets over $300,000,000 of it, and the balance is spent by the brewer and distiller for real estate and building material; for grain, etc.; for employment of labor; and all the money goes back into circulation for living, for taxes, etc.

One might as well argue that pictures and works of art, fine books, fine linen, silk, millinery, rugs and all the finer things of life are an economic waste, which is not true.

Would you abolish all property because there are thieves?

Do you make laws for the protection of rational men or fools?

Why, then, should you punish the great bulk of sober mankind for the folly of the few who drink to excess?

Whenever the attempt has been made to pass prohibition or local option it has been made the paramount issue and all other legislation pushed aside, and that one question kept constantly in the foreground and a lot of strife, bigotry and heat engendered.

Outside of "freak" legislation, the spirit of all laws is to protect those who "walk uprightly, deal justly, love equity and walk humbly before God."

Let me say with Thomas Jefferson, "That government is best that governs least."—The Trade Union News, Philadelphia, Pa.

CHAT OF THE CRAFT

Speaking about uncomfortable meeting rooms, and it is no secret that many of the halls used for meeting purposes are better fitted for almost anything else; why do you put up with inconvenience when by the expenditure of a trifle more money each month yourself and fellow members can meet in quarters suitable for meeting purposes. It is unwise economy to meet in dingy, poorly ventilated meeting halls; for whatever may be saved in that direction is lost by members becoming disgusted and refusing to attend the meetings of the union.

Meetings held in clean airy and healthful surroundings make a member feel inclined to spend an hour or two in the interests of the union; you cannot expect members who have been working all day in clean quarters to sit around a miserable excuse for a meeting hall for an hour, and who can blame them?

Possibly one of the real reasons why the members remain away from the meeting of your union, is the unsuitable meeting hall and arrangements connected thereto. We have seen halls in which our members were expected to meet and conduct trade union business, and the wonder is that they ever managed to keep their union together while meeting in such microbe infested dumps.

Be a little more particular about your places for holding meetings and see if the improved meeting room won't increase attendance.

FAKE EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES IN OHIO.

The department of investigation and statistics of the Ohio State Industrial Commission, which has control of the State Free Employment agencies and regulates the private agencies, has accomplished wonders in the last six months; they have succeeded in driving out of business quite a number of Fake Employment Agencies, and are still on the trail of other agencies which conduct their affairs with an eye singly to the financial advancement of themselves and to the disadvantage of the applicants for work. Our members in Ohio are especially urged to keep in touch with agencies which pretend to furnish employment to unemployed workers of all crafts and trades and if they observe any departure which seems foreign to the purpose of such agencies report same to the Commission at Columbus, Ohio.

Agencies which operate without a license are not very numerous, but there is little doubt but what some of them are in existence, and the ones minus the authority issued by the State are the ones which usually devote effort in furnishing strike breakers.

A little help from our members in Ohio will help clean the State from these rotten institutions.

On pages 38 to 59 inclusive, of the July number of the MIXER AND SERVER, will be found one of the most interesting tabulations which any National or International Union attempts to furnish to its membership. Take the figures offered and you will be able to note the actual status of your local or any other affiliated local of our International Union; you will be able to see whether your union has made its proportionate share of membership increase, in fact you will be able to compare each month in each of the years covered and discover which of the months your union reached its highest and lowest point of membership during the term. Similar tabulations have been made a part of our records for years, if you are one of those who retain your monthly numbers of the Mixer and Server, you can take down the issues following each of the recent conventions and compare the records made by your own union and all others which have maintained standing in our organization. The referred to tabulations are unlike many others, they are far from being DRY.

FAMILIAR PHRASES ILLUSTRATED.

An embarrassing situation—A small boy sitting on his father's lap, riding in a street car, getting up and politely offering his seat to a pretty girl.

A difficult situation—A pretty widow trying to look sad as she cashes in her husband's insurance policy for $10,000.

A humorous situation—A very tall girl trying to encourage a very short man to kiss her.

A pathetic situation—A workingman attempting to explain to an intelligent crowd why he is not a Socialist.

A tragical situation—Two million little children working in the mills, mines and factories and their fathers voting for the system that forces their children into the mills, mines and factories.

A damnable situation—A government of 100,000,000 people taking orders from 26 Broadway.—Wyoming Weekly Labor Journal.

ANOTHER OREGON EXPERIMENT.

Oregon has tried so many political experiments that it would be surprising if none of them proved successful. The latest is embodied in a bill, just passed by the lower house of the Legislature, which provides for a permanent card index of registered voters. Once a citizen registers, his name is carried on the list of voters so long as he remains eligible to vote. His eligibility, however, ends if he fails for two years to exercise his suffrage, and county clerks are required by the bill to drop from the registration lists the names of all who have been non-voters for two years.

Here we see the first step toward compulsory voting. On the surface it appears a feasible and desirable advance. We hope the Oregon Legislature will enact this legislation that other States may have an opportunity to observe the operation of the new law. Of the many products of the political experiment station of the Union we believe this simple device of disfranchising those who refuse to vote two years in succession is among the best. Were such a law on the statute books of the Commonwealth we should soon know who among us evaded his duty at the polls, and the certainty of such notorious publicity would doubtless reduce the number of non-voters.—Boston Transcript.

The above item is several months old. Whether Oregon adopted the measure referred to we are unable to say, but we are firmly convinced that if such a measure had been in operation a few years previous to the fall election of 1914, a different story would present itself for telling. Oregon voted Dry. Those who believe they know what they are talking about assert, that it was not Dry votes which won the contest, but the stay-away wet voters—the men who laughed at the antics of the Lincoln-Lee Legion, the Flying Squadron, the Prohibitionists and the Anti-Saloon League forces—that is the real reason Oregon voted Dry.

DESERVED PRAISE AND RECOGNITION.

A writer in Colliers (September 4, 1915), describing an automobile trip from the big town on Manhattan Island to the San Francisco Exposition, offers rather pertinent and pungent comment about the hotel service in a number of cities along the route west.

Some of the criticisms, and they were plentiful, were hardly complimentary to the hotels which cared for these travelers, in fact with few exceptions adverse judgment was rendered. One of the exceptions referred to a hotel in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, which by the way has none other than members of our local unions of that city employed therein, without giving more definite title, will say it is the newest and largest hotel in that thriving municipality.

The writer referred to speaking of the hotel says:

"The food at the —— hotel in Cleveland was so extraordinarily good that I asked where the maître d'hôtel and his chefs had come from. I thought that possibly on account of the war they had secured the staff of Henri's or Voisin's or Paillard's in Paris, and was really surprised to hear the head chef was from Chicago and the maître d'hôtel from New York."

CLEVELAND, HER VICTORIAN HABIT.

"The dining-room service was quite as extraordinarily good as the food. We did not wait more than a moment before they brought our first course, and as soon as we had finished that our plates were whisked away and the second put before us. Never, even in France, have we had better or more perfectly cooked chicken casserole. The Hollandaise sauce was of the exact smooth, golden consistency and flavor that it ought to be, instead of the various yellow acids, pastes, and egg mixtures that too often masquerade under the name. Our waiter brought in crisp, fresh salad, and expertly and quickly made his own dressing. He was, in fact, a prince of his kind, serving all of our meals without that everlasting patting and fussing and fixing that most waiters do until what you have ordered is so shop-worn and handled and cold that it is not fit to eat.

Can anything be more unappetizing than to have a waiter, or two of them, breathing over your food for half an hour?

"Personally I hate hotel service. I hate to be helped. In our own house even children of six resent it. Why do we submit to having the piece we don't want, in the amount we don't want, put on the part of the plate we don't want it on, covering it with sauce if we hate sauce, or giving us the driest wisps if we like it otherwise, by a waiter who bends unpleasantly close? Why do we have everything we eat pinched between the fork and spoon in that one-handed lobster-claw fashion, and endure it in silence? All of this is no fault of the waiter, who, after all, is trying to do the best he can in the way that has been taught him. But why is the service in a hotel so radically different from all good service in a private house?"

PROHIBITION INDICTED BY CLOSING OF BIG FURNITURE FACTORY.

Three Thousand Five Hundred Wage Earners Put Out of Employment—Labor Contributes Earnings of $315,000 in 12 Months to the Insatiate Maw of the Destroying Moloch—Wage Wrecking Extends from Bar Fixtures to Piano Factories—The Following is Only a Single Instance of Prohibition's Tax on Labor.

Mr. H. F. Davenport, secretary of the Brunswick-Balke-Collender Company, Chicago, says:

"The immediate result of this wave of prohibition now sweeping the country is that about 3,500 of our employees have been laid off. At our north side plant, Orleans and Huron streets, which is closed, we formerly had 1,700 men; at Long Island, now closed, we had 900 men; at San Francisco, also closed, we had 300 men. We have also reduced the number of in our other factories. At present our West Side plant here in Chicago, 22d street and Ford avenue, we have cut down from 500 to 200, and at Dubuque from 700 to 300.

"Manufacturers of pianos have been hit harder than we have by this prohibition wave. We are particularly well prepared to make piano cases and can do it cheaper and better than the big manufacturers. The result is that the little manufacturer, or rather those who assemble piano parts, can now get their cases cheaper than the big manufacturer can produce them, and this puts the little fellow in the inside track of the big one. It has been a hard blow to some of the piano makers."

Commenting on the above, the Toledo (Ohio) Union Leader, says: "The letter plainly shows what damage the prohibition movement has already done to others than the brewing industry and to the working class. This is simply one of the many other industries suffering which to a great extent feel the results of the prohibition movement. No doubt the people of this country will soon wake up and will find out what prohibition means, especially to the workingmen, and it is not too early for them to wake up!"

THE EARLY ANTI-SALOONISTS.

"The Puritan hated bear-baiting, not because it gave pain to the bear, but because it gave pleasure to the spectators."—Macaulay, History of England, Vol. I, Chap. 2.

The present-day Puritan hates the beer drinker—not because beer may be hurtful to him, but because he enjoys the beer.

NICOLLET HOTEL GRANTS SIX-DAY WEEK TO COOKS

Vast Majority of Big Hotels Now Giving Cooks One Day Off a Week—Cooks' Organization Is Rapidly Gaining Better Conditions For Members.

The management of the Nicollet Hotel has put the six-day week, or the one day off in seven rule into effect in the kitchen of that hostelry.

Most of the big Minneapolis hotels now require but six days' work a week from their cooks, and the policy has proven satisfactory to both employers and employees.

The Northwestern Cooks' Association is making rapid strides toward gaining good conditions for the workers in the kitchens of the city, and the action of the Nicollet Hotel is another tribute to the policy of that organization.

The above is from the Labor Review of September 10, 1915.

It was not so many years ago that would-be custodians of the public weal predicted that the cooks of Minneapolis would reach the pinnacle of their greatness in a few months and then "blow up and bust." These prognosticators figured that a union managed by rainbow chasers, which unfortunately was the case in its early period, would continue and the "kerflop" expected would happen. How sadly they erred is evident from the magnificent local union which now practically controls every desirable position in that city and has repeatedly been called on to furnish other cities with expert workers. Local 458 is a live, throbbing, progressive and sensibly conducted trade union, its members are active participants in every move for the advancement and welfare of their city, and by their insistence and judgment they have attracted the favorable attention of employers who realize that skill and efficiency is an essential to membership in Cooks' Union, Local 458, and that when they employ the members of that union, they are required to pay more wages and give their kitchen workers better treatment, but as a reward therefor these workers return service which cannot be surpassed.

AN INEXHAUSTIBLE SUPPLY.

One of our members at Albany, New York, postcards us with the following information clipped from the Albany Argus of August 6, 1915:

"Census statistics show 218,000 college students in the United States. There should be no dearth of waiters at the summer resorts this season."

While the editor or paragrapher of the Argus may have regarded the point made as a joke, probably if the newspaper game were as easy to "shoot up" with embryo writers and thus place on the market during the summer season hundreds of pencil pushers who would be forced into competition with this brand of voluntary labor, and it is practically that; we doubt that they would swallow the situation as a joke. Educational institutions belch forth every summer an army of "students" who think it a fine bit of economy to deprive a lot of good boys and girls of the only chance they have of gainful occupation during the summer months when the city caterer reduces his force owing to lack of patronage, but you can be sure the victims of this practise are not tickled to death over it. In passing the thought occurs—what kind of manhood is being instilled into the collegians which prompts them to aid employers to lower wages—for they work for their board and real waiters and waitresses would starve before doing that sort of thing. If the Rah, Rah bunch invaded any other line of employment, newswriters would tear the lid of sheol clean off and protest against the abuse.

PINK CHAMPAGNE FOR FRANCE.

Paris.—Pink champagne, or 'even red, is a threatened possibility as a result of the war, unless the wine growers of the champagne district are helped out by white wine growers of other regions. The glass works of Northern France and of Belgium that have furnished champagne bottles are in the hands of the Germans and, further, the wine growers of the champagne district are short of casks—more than half of last year's vintage being still in the wood. The use of casks from the Burgundy and Bordeaux red wine regions has been proposed, and if this suggestion is taken up there are chances that the output of 1915 will be pink. It would be impracticable to thoroughly cleanse the red wine casks of their color, and it is said that the reddish color would in no wise harm the champagne.

The "Mountains of Rheims," where the champagne is produced, have, like the "Heights of the Meuse," disappeared from the official communiqué. The steady pressure from the French side of the fighting line disengaged finally the last of the important champagne vineyards, though those of St. Thierry and Hermonville to the north of the river Vesle are right next to the trenches, and those on the northern slope of the ridge called "Mountains of Rheims" are still within range of the enemy's artillery. Notwithstanding all the difficulties the 25,000 acres of the champagne district will produce one-third more wine than last year, bringing the total to the normal average before the war.

WOMEN AND CHILDREN AT WORK.

Inexperienced women and children, guided by old wine growers, did the pruning of March. Women also fought mildew and, altogether, succeeded so well that the war difficulties will have had far less influence on the crop than the vine diseases that prevailed four years ago and prevented the formation of the fruit, or than the inundations of 1910.

For the gathering of the crop more trouble is anticipated than last year. After the battle of the Marne there were a great many refugees in the champagne country who helped with the vintage. These have been evacuated since. Moreover the authorities hesitate to allow women and children to expose themselves any longer on the northern slope of the "Mountains of Rheims," where they are liable any day to be caught by a stray shell. Leave will doubtless be given to a sufficient number of wine growers under arms to do this work, as well as the operation of the 600 winepresses in the department of the Marne, requiring each five men during a period of fifteen days.

The commercial importance of the champagne country to France appears from latest figures available, those of 1912. Of the total production of fine wines, valued at $31,000,000, the champagne district produced $15,000,000, the rest coming from the Burgundy and Bordeaux regions principally. One of the best customers for the fine wines of France was Germany, who bought $6,600,000 worth a year; surpassed only by Great Britain, who took $7,750,000 worth, with Belgium coming next with $6,750,000. France has, accordingly, for the time being lost an outlet for wines to the amount of $13,350,000 annually. The United States, with purchases of $2,100,000 a year, was the poorest customer, next to Russia, who bought less than a million dollars worth of French wine annually.—Correspondence of the Associated Press.

GERMANY TEACHES ITS ARMY OFFICERS TO COOK.

The Berlin correspondent of The Journal of the American Medical Association, reports that for some time courses in cooking have been held in the Prussian army, attended by officers, medical officers and non-commissioned officers. They are given in Berlin and are intended to instruct in the proper inspection of raw material and the preparing of foods. In the garrisons special windows have been constructed for giving out the food from the company kitchens, by which the cleanliness in the rooms has been markedly increased. Quite generally also a set of measures has been adopted to carry out the modern principles of sanitation. For instance, a special waiting-room for the relatives of sick soldiers has been instituted in the large hospitals, and, in addition, the now quite extended provision for medical treatment of the members of families of the subordinate officers has had the result that special rooms for the dental polyclinic treatment of members of families and especially the wives of the non-commissioned officers have been established. Furthermore, the effort has been made to provide suitable opportunities for bathing in the garrison and at the exercise fields for the troops where these are lacking.

The co-operation of all the factors favoring health has led to the result that the condition with reference to venereal diseases is much more favorable now as compared with other armies. According to the latest special statistics, 11,466 cases occurred annually, or 20.8 per thousand. In the French army the number was 24.4, in the Austrian-Hungarian, 54.7, and in the British army 65.9 per thousand. As an example of the efforts now being made to reduce the morbidity among the soldiers, attention is being paid to the so-called "Exerzierfuss," and other foot troubles resulting from overuse in marching. The success of these efforts is indicated by the lowered percentage of such afflictions. Until 1901 there were annually about 28.4 per thousand afflicted with foot troubles, and now only 23.3 per thousand.

The above item was taken from the Press Bulletin of the American Medical Association of October 11, 1913, and would go to show that the Teutonic farsightedness was on duty and in excellent working condition quite some time previous to the declaration of war.

Correspondents who have had an opportunity to watch the workings of the commissary department of all the Nations involved in the war are unanimous in agreeing that the Teutonic culinary machinery is far and away the best, and that much of the success which the Teutons have registered thus far was largely due to advance teaching in the rudiments of the culinary art and the splendid achievements of the culinary corps on the field of action. One writer writing of the "cook shops," described the serving of hot soup and hot coffee to the men in the trenches and while under fire.

INTERROGATING MILITARISTS.

Since the Manley report shows that two per cent of the people own 60 per cent of the nation's wealth, through control of all predatory privileges, the question is pertinent: will this two per cent do 60 per cent of the fighting in case of war? Do the big army and navy advocates propose to put 60 per cent of the expense upon them? Sixty-five per cent of the people, as the Manley report shows, own less than five per cent of the wealth. Will they be required to bear no more than five per cent of the expense, and to furnish no more than five per cent of the soldiers?—S. D., in The Public.

SHACKLING MARS.

For the time being many of our friends are engaged in trying to prevent further additions to the already large number of nations and men involved in the present war. They should not, however, overlook the fact that right here on American soil there is quite as extensive a battle, one which will cause proportionately as much suffering and loss as the European conflict has inflicted. The Anti-Saloonists are well drilled, they are supplied with munitions and are actively employed in wrecking the "shops" where we earn our daily bread. Let us organize our fellow workers so that we can put the shackles on Mars who parades as the "Church in Action" and flaunts the flag of the Anti-Saloon League.

LAYING THE CLOTH.

In the twelfth century tablecloths were very large and were always laid on the table double. For a long time they were called "doublers" for that reason. The cloth was first placed so as to touch the floor on the side at which the guests sat; then all that remained was folded so that it just covered the table.

Charles V had sixty-seven tablecloths, which were from fifteen to twenty yards long and two yards wide. He had one cloth thirty-two yards long, which had the arms of France embroidered on it in silk. All these were fringed.

In the sixteenth century "doublers" were replaced by two tablecloths, one of which was small and was laid just as we lay ours today. The other, which was put on over it, was large and of beautifully figured linen. It was skillfully folded in such a way that, as one chronicler tells it, "it resembled a winding river, gently ruffled by a little breeze, for among very many little folds were here and there great bubbles."

It must have required much art and care to make dishes, plates, saltcellars, sauce dishes and glasses stand steadily in the midst of this undulating sea and among those "bubbles" and puffy folds. However, the fashion had only a short existence, and toward the later part of the century a single cloth laid flat and touching the floor on all sides of the table came into general use.

The foregoing clipped from one of our exchanges and credited to "Exchange," came to our notice recently, the reference to the skilful folding of the cloth reminds us that the art of "crimping" linen for table use has not by any means been lost, and when done artistically is a pleasing and attractive table decoration.

Napkin folding has fallen into oblivion for the seemingly good reason, that the less handling that useful article receives the more cleanly it is for its intended use, though napkin folding for decorative purposes will always find its champions among dining-room workers.

OLD AND NEW.

Oh, sometimes gleams upon our sight,
Through present wrong, the eternal right;
And step by step, since time began,
We see the steady gain of man.

That all of good the past hath had Remains to make our own time glad,
Our common, daily life divine,
And every land a Palestine.

Through the harsh voices of our day,
A low, sweet prelude finds its way,
Through clouds of doubt, and creeds of fear,
A light is breaking calm and clear.

Henceforth my heart shall sigh no more
For older time and holier shore;
God's love and blessing them and there
Are now and here and everywhere.

—John Greenleaf Whittier.

BETCHER WRIGHT DIDN'T VOTE DRY.

Wine—not to mention Wurzburger and kindred beverages—floweth freely in Savannah, Georgia, despite the fact that Georgia is a prohibition State. This, according to W. H. Wright, vice-chairman of the Savannah city council, who, with D. A. O'Conner, a Savannah merchant, called on Mayor Gill, Monday. Wright is here with Mrs. Wright en route to San Francisco.

It's done thus wise, says Mr. Wright:

Savannah has 400 "near-beer" saloons. According to regulations, these saloons may dispense "near-beer, et cetera."

"The 'et cetera' includes whisky, real beer and all the old favorites," says the councilman. "They don't sell much near-beer, but they do an enormous traffic in 'et cetera.'"—Seattle (Wash.) Star, August 16, 1915.

STILL ON EARTH.

Many old Windy City boys will recall little Jim Shea who carried a card in Local Assembly 7475, K. of L., during its early history. Jim called on us during convention week and invited us to a ride in his fine machine, which we reluctantly declined, owing to convention duties. Jim is some "magnate" now, possessing a fruit ranch in Southern California and other wordly possessions which make life worth the living. Same old Jim, excepting a rather extravagant display of those things which made Jim Brady famous.

GETTING "BILLY" SUNDAY'S NUMBER.

Billy Sunday's brand of bunk seems to have failed to make a hit in San Francisco. This makes Seattle unionists more hopeful in the face of his threatened visit here. Wherever Sunday has gone he has been used to defeat the labor movement. He faced an organization so strong in San Francisco he could make no impression. Seattle is not dead, either.—Seattle Union Record, August 28, 1915.

SOUVENIR FIENDS.

A few weeks ago two very pretty and smartly-dressed young ladies were arrested as they were leaving one of the sound steamers at her dock in New York City. Their baggage was searched, and reposing in a suit case was found one of the steamer's fine wool blankets. They had but one explanation to offer. They wanted a "souvenir" of their trip. They didn't regard taking the blanket as theft, etc.

Members of our organization will hail with delight any increased effort to land the Souvenir Fiends and punish them for their pilfering. Thousands upon thousands of dollars are stolen annually from hotels, cafes and catering establishments by so-called Souvenir Fiends, but who are nothing more or less than common thieves: for while they do not get the money direct, nevertheless the "souvenirs" cost the management money, and in innumerable instances the men and women of the departments where the thefts occur are forced to make good the loss. One of our members related to us a story to the effect that, where the employees of a department knew that any guest had purloined any of the tableware, such as demi tasse spoons and small silver which could be easily secreted, they were to advise the checker, and the amount of the confiscated articles were added to the patron's check. One day a waiter saw a patron slip an individual silver cream pitcher into her handbag. He immediately reported to the checker, and the amount of the pitcher was added to the check. The gentleman accompanying the woman complained about overcharging. The waiter referred him to the man in charge of the room, and that officer made no secret of the fact that he saw the woman take the pitcher and put in her bag. The gentleman became very angry, walked to his table and, without even a pretense of asking permission, grabbed the woman's handbag from the table. The action opened the bag and disclosed, to the astonished gaze of the man, not only the cream pitcher, but the appetitif glass which had the house monogram engraved on it, and which glass had been used in the service at the patron's table. Needless to add that he never came back to that house. Had the articles disappeared and the waiter been unable to locate them, it would have meant a loss to him to the amount levied by that house for said articles.

Waiters sometimes, and bartenders, too, permit guests to carry off costly glassware as souvenirs. They may imagine that such permission is within their rights; that the article is small and of no consequence. But if they were required to purchase and make good the shortage, they would howl to heaven about being mistreated.

No line of business which we have knowledge of is afflicted quite so much as the catering industry is with "souvenir fiends"—nothing too small or too large for them to try and get away with. The writer knows of one finely-equipped rathskeller which was almost denuded of its magnificent collection of costly steins before the owners and employees were aware of what was taking place, and it is barely possible that the owner of that place, when he discovered his loss, secretly accused his employees of abstracting the steins. The taunting boast of two men about town put him on the track of the real culprits, and he admitted that the loss was great, but couldn't afford to offend his patrons by asking them to return his property.

Pilfering the property of another may be called "souvenir hunting," but, getting down to brass tacks, it is theft and nothing but theft, and it is up to our members, wherever possible, to discourage such losses by preventing patrons from getting by with such plunder.

THE FALL OF KOSCIUSKO.

"Finis Polonia!" Nobody is likely to cry that now. It is doubtful whether anybody ever did cry it. Kosciusko always indignantly denied that these words had been uttered by him when he "fell" at Warsaw in 1794. And this reminds us of another common error with regard to the Polish hero. The line "And freedom shrieked when Kosciusko fell" has misled thousands into supposing that he perished in the last fight for Polish independence. He actually survived for twenty-three years, when he died in Switzerland from another fall—an accidental one from his horse.—London Chronicle.

THE LABEL EXPRESS FUEL.

The Union Label is your engine to pull the labor movement to the station of Success. It is as powerless as a cold locomotive unless you furnish the steam by demanding it on your purchases. It therefore is to the interest of every member of a union, as well as every well-wisher, to buy nothing without it.—JAMES W. MULLEN, in San Francisco (Cal.) Labor Clarion.

OH, VERY WELL.

A city man recently visited his "country cousin." The man from the city, wishing to explain the joys of metropolitan life, said: "We certainly have been having fun the last few days. Thursday we autoed to the country club and golfed until dark, then trolleyed back to town and danced until morning." The country cousin was not to be stumped in the least and began telling of some of the pleasures of the simple life. "We have had pretty good times here, too. One day we bugged out to Uncle Ned's and went out to the back lot, where we baseballled all the afternoon. In the evening we sneaked up into the attic and pokered until morning." A sturdy old farmer who was listening, not to be outdone, took up the conversation at this point and said: "I was having some fun about this time myself. I muled out to the cornfield and geehawed until sundown. Then I supped until dark and piped until nine o'clock, after which I bedsteaded until the clock fixed, after which I breakfasted until it was time to go muleing again."—Montreal Journal of Commerce.

Some of our "pinch hitters" have re-enlisted for the season. At least that is the conclusion forced home by the number of new recruits rounded up during the first few weeks of summer. One or two of our old locals appear to have discovered a new "pocket" or paying streak. Looks good to us at headquarters to see some of the old standbys hop into the ring and garner so many new applications.

WHERE ALL AGREE.

President Marsh, of the Washington State Federation of Labor, discusses the relative importance of economic and political action in a letter to the labor press.

"Were I to have the choice to fight labor's battles, I'd take the industrial. Why? Because I believe thoroughly in organization at the very heart of man's activities, and that heart is the place where man, by the sweat of his brow, earns his bread. The fundamental part of a man's life is his source of food, shelter and clothing, and it is there where his material interest beats most strongly. How men differ over politics. Divide and sub-divide into schools of political thought and quarrel over the use of political means. But did you ever notice that there are certain recognized laws underlying trade unionism, certain well-defined courses of action, upon which conservatives, radicals and 'in-betweens' absolutely agree?"—Trades Union News, Philadelphia, Pa.

BUCKEYE PHILOSOPHY.

Once in a while you hear of a woman who objects to her husband holding affiliation with a union, and yet if her old man had to go to work for half what he is now getting, she would be the first to apply for a committee of alienists to make an examination of the bonehead.—The Chronicle, Cincinnati, O.

PORK BEFORE PREPAREDNESS.

A chorus of pork barrel congressmen soon will be singing, "We Didn't Raise This Cash to Pay More Soldiers."—Philadelphia North American.

BUCKEYE FIRING LINE SHOWS ALL HANDS BUSY.

All previous efforts of the union men and women connected with the beverage industry in the State of Ohio have been discounted by the activity apparent during the present campaign. Hardly a week passes by without reports reaching us that the advocates of liberalism are on the job and doing their share to convince the Buckeye voters that further interference with liquor legislation is both unnecessary and uncalled for. During the month two of the active workers of the forces working under the banner of the Union Labor Home Rule League, Bro. Frank C. Burkley, of Local 106, Cleveland, and Joseph R. Weiss, of Cigarmarkers' Union No. 17, of Cleveland, visited us and gave us cheering encouragement with news of the battle being waged in Ohio, and of course, predict victory, providing our folks maintain their activity right up to the polling of the last vote on the day of election. Our members in Ohio are waking up to the knowledge that, besides having an immense force in opposition to us, they are supplied with "munitions" decidedly in excess of what we can expect to obtain. But despite that disparity, our folks expect to make what little they have in the shape of money go farther and gain greater returns than the opposition.

One of the satisfying things in connection with the battle in Ohio is the almost united activity of the members of our local unions. In no previous contest has there been quite as much interest shown, and this attitude presages excellent advancement in the near future. With mighty few exceptions our locals in Ohio are holding their own, and this condition is astonishing when one considers that for the last few years there has been a marked decrease in the number of houses which offer employment to our class of workers.

If the victory which we look forward to winning perches on our banners, no one will attempt to deny credit to our boys and girls, who started early and have continued on the firing line continuously.

THE MIXER AND SERVER

OCTOBER DAYS.

Into the environs of the slow, old-fashioned Southern city made famous by the misadventures of a character no less renowned than "Old Reliable," two members of an all but obsolete profession presented themselves one October day. They were chimney sweeps. Having performed their work, they awaited the generous recompence that followed the perilous passage of wide chimneys, such as are no longer built. "You make good wages, my men," said the bookstore proprietor in a patronizing tone, "and, may I ask, what do you do with your money?" The chief blackamoor turned to his friend with an air of intimate understanding, then answered the inquirer in deprecatory fashion: "Well, sor, to tell you the truth, we circulate it!"

To that spirit is owing the prosperity of the world. In his essay on "Self-Reliance," Emerson urged the scattering of limitless largess abroad by whomsoever may possess, as proof of the inexhaustible treasures of man and of nature. And if nature ever gives convincing evidence that her storehouses can be drawn upon indefinitely, certainly it is in the month of final fruition, the month of October, which finds the season's breasts filled with the milk of the year's slow gathering, the month resplendent with matronly hues, the month sacred to kindly Ceres, a goddess more to be revered than the triple-breasted Diana, mistress of a fecundity that knows not the blessed alterations of the seasons, the variety as sevenfold replete in their attractions as the voyages of Sinbad the Sailor.

If ever the world is enwrapped in a haze that mellows with its softness the harsh edges of earthly existence, it is in the month whose halcyons never fail. To talk of the weather is man's prime and unfailing topic. To write of it is to take chances with a jade whose smile turns to a frown without a moment's warning. But October may be trusted. She is no wilful maid, bent on the mocking of the spirit that she lures. Hers is the comforting friendship of one who knows life through the borrowed experiences of the months that went before. Of their promise, she is the unfailing fulfillment. Her lap invites, her arms are a certain resting place.

Through the richly blazoned leaves of her woods the warm rays of the autumnal sun fall to the cool ground. There is both a chill and an ardency in the atmosphere. The patter of nuts from the oak groves call to razor-back hogs. The rain of mast from the beech trees is echoed by the swish of the wings of ring-doves. Squirrels bark in the tall branches of the "shell bark" hickories. The shrill notes of summer insects have passed away. The raccoon creeps wearily to his breakfast of crawfish in the bed of the old creek, whose waters run low, lapping the moss-grown edge of the big rock at the "crossing," where a few months before, you held bravely to the arm of the beloved girl, and wished it were the swelling of the Jordan instead of a rippling stream, and that the sun would stand still as it did in the valley of Ajalon, so precious were the fleeting moments. The fox grapes have grown purple under the amorous kisses of that same sun which is ripening the vintage of the plains of Champagne, and you think of the reports brought back by Caleb and Joshua from the Land of Promise, flowing with milk and honey, where the grapes of Eschol turned all the giants of existence into mere grasshoppers.

While the landscape swims in beauty, overhead the blue skies of October rule, filled with the tang of new wine and the untamed spirit of Hun and Visigoth sweeping down from the North to overcome and occupy the enervated valleys too long possessed by dreamy and decadent summer. Your own spirit answers. The very buzzard that floats in the azure expanse becomes ennobled by his environment. Haroun al Raschid need no longer fare forth in search of rare experiences. He has but to stand still in the Ohio hills and let the moving-picture films of the season bring to him thrice three screens of wonders that the prototype of "Kaloloo, the Indian Maid," knew far better than the dark-eyed girl who draws her thirty per for posing before the clicking instrument of modern devising.

The berries of the sumach are redder than the blood in Aisne's trenches. The pawpaw is as yellow as goose fat beneath its green rind, and the chestnut and persimmon await the first frost of adversity to prove the sweetness of their usage. To have tasted October to the full is to gather strength for another year, even as fabled Anteus, the earthborn, had to touch the All-Mother from time to time, in order to live.—The Enquirer, Cincinnati, O.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS FOR THE WOMEN FOLKS AT HOME

THE CAKE BAKER.—Have everything ready before beginning to mix the cake; that is, the ingredients all measured and prepared. The sooner the cake is mixed and put in the oven the better it will be:

When yeast powder is used, sift in with the last flour; if soda is used, dissolve it in the milk, or if milk is not used, in a little warm water—add it the last thing unless fruit is used, when the fruit should be the last.

The eggs must be fresh and be well beaten separately; beat the yolks first.

Wash the butter in cold water in summer and tepid in winter; pour off every drop of water and beat to cream.

If loaf sugar is used, crush it and roll fine (I use granulated), mix with butter, then add egg yolks (if used); add whites of eggs alternately with the flour.

Cakes, to be light, must be baked slowly at first, that the batter may be heated all through.

Grease the pans well with butter.

Good judgment and close attention are absolutely essential, but only experience can make an expert cake baker.

When cake has risen well, gradually increase the heat.

Do You Know?—It is a good idea when engaged upon delicate needlework to have a small bowl of white flour beside you and to dip the fingers in it occasionally. It assists in keeping the hands dry and the work clean.

The use of mustard in cleansing utensils in which fish has been kept will remove the fish taste and all the odor.

Put wet brushes to dry with bristles down; this lengthens their period of usefulness; otherwise the water soaks into the back, causing warping and cracking.

New agate and tin cooking utensils require seasoning before they are used. To do this, simply let them stand on the back of the range for two hours, filled with scalding water and bicarbonate of soda; one teaspoonful to a quart of water; then wash and dry in the regular manner.

MEXICO.

For quite a period Mexico and its troubles have occupied space in the press of America. Few of those who live north of the Rio Grande, who have not enjoyed the privileges of a trip through Mexico, realize the extent of that country or the many interesting things to be found there. A writer in the National Geographic Magazine says that Mexico is one of the most remarkable countries in the world—it is, in fact, a land of contrasts such as no other country can furnish—as can easily be noted from a portion of the article, which we reprint for the readers of THE MIXER AND SERVER:

"Perhaps nowhere else in the world is there a country so full of contrasts as Mexico. With a university established before John Harvard, Elihu Yale or William and Mary were born, the masses of its people are hopelessly ignorant. With a hospital founded before Jamestown was even dreamed of, it is one of the most backward regions of the earth in a medical way. With natural riches greater than those of a thousand Midases, its masses are just as poor as the proverbial church mouse. With the constitution as perfect as any organic law in the civilized world, it is a nation whose rulers always have been a law unto themselves.

"Here you will see a Mexican half breed, barefooted, wearing a $1 pair of trousers, a fifty-cent shirt and a $10 sombrero. There, at a single glance and within the length of a single city block, you may see an Indian cargador, a donkey cart, an oxcart, a carriage, a railroad train, a street car and a motor car—almost every type of locomotion since Adam. You may tread the burning sands of a tropical desert with the wet of perpetual snow of towering mountains still upon your shoes. You may take a single railway journey of 36 hours in which the people you see at the railroad station will be dressed in four different weights of clothing. Everywhere you turn there is contrast, high lights and deep shadows.

"Mexico probably has a greater range of remarkable vegetation than any other country in the world. The parrot fruit tree produces an odd shaped fruit, bearing a close resemblance to green parakeets. When the parakeet is frightened it makes a dash for the parrot tree, where it assumes a position which makes it look like the fruit itself. So close is the resemblance that their enemies, the hawks, occasionally fly by a tree on which a dozen or more of these birds are sitting, apparently unaware of their presence.

"Another remarkable tree is the Arbol de Dinamite—dynamite tree—whose fruit, if kept in a warm place, bursts with considerable force and a loud report, scattering its flat seeds to a surprising distance. One of the most interesting fruits in Mexico is known as the melon apote, or papaya. It contains considerable pepsin, which reacts against both acid and alkaline conditions of the stomach, and it is said that a diet which includes papaya precludes dyspepsia. Both the fruit and the leaves possess the singular property of rendering tough meat tender. When the pulp of the fruit is rubbed over a piece of tough meat the juice attacks the fiber and softens it.

"No other country south of the Rio Grande is so well supplied with railroads. Prior to the Madero revolution it had twenty thousand miles of up-to-date American railroad, which carried 11,000,000 passengers annually and about 11,000, 000 tons of freight. Their total revenues amounted to about $40,000,000. The Government owns a controlling interest in the major part of the mileage of the railroads.

"Mexico produces one-third of the world's silver, a considerable percentage of its gold, one-ninth of its lead and one-twentieth of its copper. The country's mineral production, exclusive of iron, coal and petroleum, amounted to $158,000,000 in 1910. The famous iron mountain at Durango is estimated to contain 600,000,000 tons of iron ore, which is worth seven times the value of all the gold and silver mined in Mexico in two centuries. The Santa Maria graphite mines are the largest and most important in the western world. The region around the Gulf of Mexico is very rich in petroleum. One company at Poteri del Llano struck a gusher which flowed 100,000 barrels of oil a day."

A HIGHWAY WITH A PERSONALITY.

I am the product of centuries, the realization of a thousand dreams, the culmination of ten thousand efforts, the work of a million hands.

I stand for progress, I represent human advancement, I typify civilization. Were it not for what I express, mankind would revert to barbarism.

All the longing and striving of ages is summed up in me. I am the result of a fundamental need; the savage sought me and yet the highest civilization cannot do without me.

I am a product of the past, an ideal of the present, the ambition of the future. I am an evolution; my past no man can trace; my future no imagination can picture.

An ocean of blood has been shed along my course, that I might come into being; my desert silences have heard the dying prayer of thousands of my progenitors. I have culled from the advancing hosts of a nation in the making the worthless chaff of the unsound and inferior.

The icy gullies of my mountain passes and the withering heat of my western deserts have tried men's souls and bodies, but those who conquered me have found a nation and a home and I am the servant of my conquerors.

I carry the burdens of a continent; I distribute the fruits of its fertile fields and abundant valleys and the products of its countless industries. I represent the unity of the nation that bore me and I promote the welfare and happiness of its inhabitants. I aid the education of its youth, the intermingling of its teeming population, the better understanding of its widely separated sections.

I unite the oceans; I connect twelve great sovereign commonwealths; I am the backbone road of the Republic, the inspiration for a million miles of interconnecting branches.

Into me has been breathed the personality of twentieth century America. I am worthy of my namesake—like him, I am the product of adversity—the ideal of a new race.

I am the Lincoln Highway.—Austin F. Bennet in Case and Comment.

LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers held a twenty-two days' session convention in the city of Cleveland, O., May 12 to June 5, 1915, with 809 delegates present, representing 856 divisions.

The convention sessions were held in their own building, and full future conventions of that organization will be held in the same city and building. Delegates to the conventions receive remuneration at the rate of $9 per day from the time they leave home until they return after adjournment. The money for the purpose is taken from the general funds of the Brotherhood. They adopted a plan to reduce representation at conventions, and it is expected that the plan will cut down the number about one-half. Among a number of proposals receiving endorsement were International Peace, Woman's Suffrage and State-wide and nation-wide prohibition. They considered and approved plans to establish their own bank. They now insure their members—life and accident policies. Many members who peruse the foregoing will see the locomotive engineer as he is today—almost as scarce as the dodo. In fact, he is being gradually displaced by the introduction of electrical hauling machinery, which, according to expert testimony and experience, is more effective and less liable to break down than the cumbersome air-befouling locomotive.

STATISTIC OF "SOBSON."

Chicago is getting snowed under with literature and speakers supposedly directed by what is known as the Chicago Dry Federation. Not a day passes, nor a night for that matter, but what some of the men and women on the payroll of the Anti-Saloon League turn loose a mass of alleged statistics which go to show that the liquor habit is responsible for untold injury and the deaths of hundreds of thousands of men and women. At a North Side meeting a few evenings ago, according to one of the Chicago papers, a minister had quoted, and extensively, figures which Hobson used about a year ago in a series of speeches which prompted the New York Sun to make the following comment:

"In numerous speeches over the country Mr. Hobson has shared with his audience this tidbit:

"Today the European war is causing the death of an average of 1,000 victims a day, but in the United States statistics show that 700,000 persons die every year from the effects of alcohol."

"In some localities Mr. Hobson is credited with more particularly putting the exact number of deaths caused by alcohol at 730,000.

"The 'statistics' evidently are Mr. Hobson's, not those of the United States Census Bureau, which the Alabaman ignores. Census Bureau figures for 1912 show 838,251 deaths, exclusive of still births, in the registration area, containing almost two-thirds of the country's population. The rate was 13.9 for 1,000. Taking the estimated present population and that rate, annual deaths in the whole country for both registration area and non-registration area would not exceed 1,400,000 a year.

"Mr. Hobson therefore brings to our attention the shocking 'fact' that one out of every two deaths is due to alcohol, not excepting men, women, children, or even prohibitionists! Likewise, there is no exception to be made of those who die of old age; there were 14,362 of them in the registration area in 1912."

The New York Sun took chances of being accused of being owned and controlled by the Demon Rum when it pricked that bubble, and yet one will find men and women who actually believe that Hobson and his tribe speak gospel truth. If the voters of Chicago are to be converted on such wild statements as Hobson offered and now being used by pulpit pounders, they are surely in a worse mental condition than the denizens of the Black Road were pictured a few years ago.

Fanaticism run mad is about the way things look in the big town on Lake Michigan, and the wonder of it all is that the men and women who will be the real losers if Chicago is voted dry neither are awake nor can be roused. Keep your eye on travelers from Chicago, for if they haven't anything to show connection with a trade union of our craft, better show them the quickest way out of town. They have had their chance and proved PIKERS.

PROHIBITION WILL MEAN DEFICIT OF $565,000.

Seattle Tax Levy Will Be Increased By 2½ Mills as Result of State Going on Water Wagon.

State-wide prohibition in Washington will add a fraction more than 2½ mills to the Seattle tax levy next year. The anticipated revenue of $350,000 from liquor licenses this year fell short $215,000, and in the form of a deficit this item was yesterday included in the 1916 budget. Add to this the $350,000 that will not be anticipated as revenue next year makes a total of $565,000 to be provided for in the new levy. Based on an assessed valuation of $221,000,000, 2½ mills would represent $552,000.

Refusing to even consider the recommendation of Mayor Hiram C. Gill and Comptroller Harry W. Carroll to liquidate the garbage bond fund of $250,591 by converting that amount into the interest or redemption fund for 1916, the council added approximately $400,000 to the tax budget to meet the requirements of the Renick law.—Seattle (Wash.) Times, August 21, 1915.

The above item reminds us that the proponents of prohibition promised taxpayers immunity from increased taxation, but their promises appear to have departed from Seattle along with the Flying Squadron.

THE DIFFERENCE.

If a man behind the bar were to use the language which "Rev. Billy" Sunday habitually uses in his "sermons" he would be unable to retain a job as a mixologist in any first-class saloon. Nor would a patron of a real saloon be permitted to befoul the air with such conversation as Sunday hurls at his audiences.

PREPAREDNESS SOLVED BY MR. BRYAN.

That Mr. Bryan has some well-thought and well-digested ideas about national defense is shown by the plan he proposed in his speech at White Bear Monday afternoon. He said the National Defense League wants appropriations for the army and navy at the rate of $450,000,000 a year, which, in eleven years, would amount to five billion dollars. A good road, he continues, would cost about $8,333 a mile. The five billions of dollars would build 100 such highways between the Atlantic and Pacific and enough north and south roads, 12 miles apart, to gridiron the country. The advocates of preparedness, according to Mr. Bryan, would let the farmer drag along through the mud when they know that the first thing a war would demand would be good roads. (Sounds like Von Hindenburg.) But that isn't all, for, having prepared to the extent of good roads, the rest is easy. Listen to this (we quote the report of the St. Paul Dispatch):

"I would suggest that our farmers demand such roads; so that at the first sign of an attack by any hostile power all they would have to do would be to turn their telephones loose, arouse the country, man their Ford autos, and deliver the army at any threatened point within the next few hours."

Why certainly! Armed with garden rakes and pitchforks, supported by a battery of cream separators and provisioned with market baskets of fresh eggs and new potatoes in the tonneau. This thing of preparedness is all so simple, when you let Mr. Bryan, "the dove's best friend," work it out for you, that, as he says, there is no occasion for anybody to lose his head about it.—Minneapolis Tribune, August 26, 1915.

And Bryan was Secretary of State at one time. Gee whiz, if the paragraphers keep after the "Advance Agent of the Grape Juice Guards" he will become almost as popular as poison ivy.

By the way, have you perused the interesting data on the back inside cover of this number of THE MIXER AND SERVER? It won't occupy but a moment or two, and it may prove a revelation—that is, the information set forth.

MASSACHUSETTS IN 1789 PASSES TEMPERANCE LAW.

Signer of Declaration of Independence Signs Act To Encourage Brewing.

John Hancock, statesman and major general in our war for freedom, whose bold signature heads the list of imperishable names on the Declaration of Independence, when governor of Massachusetts for the second time signed the following temperance law:

"An act to encourage the manufacture of strong beer, ale and other Malt liquors.

"Whereas, the manufacture of strong beer, ale and other Malt liquors will promote the purposes of husbandry and commerce, by encouraging the growth of such materials as are peculiarly congenial to our soil and climate.—

"And whereas, the wholesome qualities of malt liquors recommend themselves to general use as important means of preserving the health of the citizens of this commonwealth, and to Prevent the Pernicious effect of Strong Drink:

Be it therefore enacted that—all brew houses—shall be exempted from taxes for a term of five years after the passing of this act."

The foregoing is part of the advertising used by one of the Northwestern Brewing concerns which, while boosting their own produce, lay on the heavy stick and lay it on hard on all other beverages of an intoxicating character. This is not an exceptional thing for beer brewing concerns to do, in fact the attacks made indirectly on other beverage interests compel the use of that old saying—the good Lord protect us from our friends. Boosting for beer is all right, but at the same time it strikes the men who are employed in the industry that boosting and knocking at one and the same time is a questionable method of winning friends. The longer the beer brewers, wine and liquor distillers remain apart, the quicker will the Anti-Saloon League and its fanatical co-workers get to their goal and meanwhile obliterate the beverage industry.

It is the height of stupidity for brewers to take the position that the fanatics are only concerned in eliminating whiskey from the venders' counters; neither Oregon or Washington were noted for whiskey consumption. One of the largest breweries in America is located in the latter State, and proportionately more of their product was and is now sold than all the other intoxicating beverages combined; yet the Antis made no pretense to direct their attack solely against whiskey; they went after the whole business and landed it on dry soil. What was true of those two States will transpire in other States if the interests who control the beverage industry can't see the wisdom of getting together and sticking to a finish. The Antis are not making any half-way campaigns, they are going after beer quite as strongly as after all other beverages, and when they win, all suffer, there are no exceptions, nor will there be in the future. Get together gentlemen, work as you should have been working for the last fifteen years, and you may yet save some of your investments.

"PRIVATE" JOE KINNEY.

Joe Kinney post-cards us from Moberly, Mo., where he was in attendance as delegate from the Central Trades and Labor Union of St. Louis, Mo., to the Missouri State Federation of Labor. Joe is a member of Local 20 of St. Louis, and unless memory serves us badly, one of the oldest in point of continuous membership in that union. When the United States was involved in that little scrap with Spain, Joe Kinney was one of several members of Big 20 who enlisted and saw service in Cuba. When the soldier boys returned after the Cuban campaign, Joe insisted that he successfully evaded capturing a title, but despite that effort, the records show that Joe obtained honorable mention from the front, something which the other boys from Big 20 could not boast of. We have often wondered whatever became of "Private" Joe's old side kick, Colonel Brown.

Befo' the war in Cuba, Local 20 of St. Louis was known far and near as BIG 20; the reason for that was, that no other local of catering industry workers in America could boast of as large a membership. Judging from the activity of its members during the present year as well as in 1914, they are determined to get back the legal use of their old title and once more be known as BIG 20.

REAL ENJOYMENT.

George C. Boldt said of Thanksgiving in New York:

"There's nothing like the old-fashioned Thanksgiving giving turkey and cranberry sauce, celery and sweet potatoes, mince pie and pumpkin pie, and, perhaps, a bit of skating or sleighing afterwards to aid the digestion."

"I remember a little boy at a Thanksgiving dinner in Philadelphia who enjoyed himself frightfully. It's a wonder he didn't burst."

"On toward the end of the repast, his hostess said to him:

"Another piece of mince pie, George? Just a small piece?"

"No, ma'am," said George reluctantly. "I could chew it, but I couldn't swallow it."

HOBSONIZING BRYAN.

After making a speech at Kingman, Kansas, William J. Bryan was embraced by a husky farmer and received a good old-fashioned smack square on the mouth. Farmer John Graber, who done the kissing, was doing well at last reports, no ill effects resulting from his osculatory madness.

A LITTLE LIGHT ON A BIG SUBJECT.

The readers of the MIXER AND SERVER will recall a news dispatch sent out from Washington, D. C., which recited the fact that an Association of Doctors had declared that whiskey and brandy were to be dropped from the list and physicians would no longer prescribe either for patients. The following letter from the Lynn Telegram of August 28, 1915, will turn on much needed light:

The raid of the Prohibitionists upon the revision of the Pharmacopoeia will have no legal effect whatever; and the attempt to drop whiskey and brandy from the list of remedies, to be described in a future issue of the Pharmacopoeia, is not a government publication, and is not by any means the sole descriptive list of remedies employed in medicine, and can not confine druggists.

The assumption, in the telegrams stating that the committee of revision had voted 26 to 24, Dr. Wiley presiding, to drop whiskey and brandy from the list, that the act would compel druggists to take out a saloon license to sell whiskey and brandy, has no foundation nor cogency. The action of a partisan committee does not fix the list of remedies. Medicine is free; license for the sale of whiskey by druggists as a medicine depends upon existing federal and State enactments, and not upon the Pharmacopoeia.

But the telegraphed assumption betrays clearly the intent of the Prohibitionists who have apparently mastered the revision for the time being. For at one time the committee dropped the whole subject as unworthy of attention. Then it was reconsidered by a close majority; and exclusion was adopted after a hot debate, 26 to 24.

Mr. Leonard Martin of Boston, is reported by a Boston paper as making the following demand at a Prohibition meeting July 11, 1915, on Boston Common: "One of the first things we must attack is the druggist's license. The alcohol privilege must be erased from the Pharmacopoeia." Mr. Martin deceives himself. The Pharmacopoeia grants no rights nor privileges.

The principal guide of the druggist is the Dispensatory, a list of remedies quite independent of the Pharmacopoeia. Indeed, the editors of the Dispensatory in times past have stated their refusal to follow the radical action of the committee in charge of the Pharmacopoeia. It is impossible to rule out the use of valuable remedies, whiskey and brandy, by an arbitrary list.

The act of the committee will have no legal or other effect except the disgust of the great mass of wise and liberal practitioners, who have been grossly misrepresented through the malign influence of the Prohibition agencies; and a possible reduction of the federal revenue. Reduction of federal revenue will be dependent upon the success of the Prohibition Press Bureau in disseminating misinformation. Druggists accepting the statements of the engineers of this fraud upon the Pharmacopoeia, will neglect to pay the federal tax of $25 a year. The loss from this cause may reach into the millions, at a time when the Federal Government needs every dollar of revenue that can be collected to prepare for the national defense.

Yours very truly,

HENRY C. MAINE,

Rochester, N. Y., July 15, 1915.

FIXING WAGES BY LAW.

Some progressive people favor the fixing of wages by law. Such legislation is foredoomed to failure unless also the prices of everything the wage-earner buys is fixed by law. Prices of goods and services that consumers buy every day are constantly fluctuating. If the wages were stationary until the legislature felt disposed to change them, it follows that the wage-earners would be the last ones to obtain any relief from the constant increase of the cost of living or the proper raising of the standard of life. The theory of wage legislation is not in accordance with the aims of a live and progressive labor movement. Those who favor a minimum wage by law for women should also bear this in mind, that once chained down to a certain wage in any industry, it would be beyond the means and hopes of women to obtain any legitimate increase until long after the necessity and justice therefore would have demanded it. It would be another obstacle in the path of progress. Another link in the chain of slavery.—T. J., in Culinary Craft for September, 1915.

TABASCO ON THE SIDE.

"In the Province of Quebec," says The Liquor Trades Gazette (New York City, N. Y., August 15, 1915), "bars are not permitted to open until 7:30 a. m. It wouldn't make much difference if they never opened. Quebec is the most poverty-stricken spot on the Western Hemisphere."

"You might tramp from Three Rivers to Quebec City and never see a bar or a drink, except what you could lap up from the Saint Lawrence River."

Evidently the editor of The Liquor Trades Gazette must have visited that section of the country and knows whereof he speaks, and while it hardly seems necessary to add further comment, we can not resist the temptation to say that one of the biggest frosts which ever occurred in that section was the trial spin of a local union composed of fellows who had the nerve to class themselves as bartenders, and who, after paying a few dollars to headquarters, asked the organization to carry them along so that they could benefit by membership. Hardly much difference between that bunch and another close to where The Liquor Trades Gazette is printed, Amsterdam, N. Y. The only man who ever saw a bartender at Amsterdam was Tom Sweeney, formerly of Binghamton, N. Y., and Tom induced that barboy to move to Brooklyn.

A BIT CAREFUL.

One of our boys relates an experience with an out-of-town patron who spent considerable time in poring over the bill of fare seeking for something good to eat, and finally landing on ordering a club sandwich. After the waiter had gone toward the kitchen to give in his order, he was called back and the bucolic adventurer changed his order to something else by saying, "I've got a splinter in my hand now, and am a bit feared that I might get a sliver if I tried to eat a club sandwich."

THE PAIR THAT PARED THE APPLE.

Chicago woman, jealous of the superior privileges of her sex, announces that Eve preceded Adam by several days. Well, the damage has been done, anyway, and it seems rather late to start a quarrel over a mere question of precedence.—Providence Journal.

We enjoyed a very pleasing visit from Bro. Thomas S. Farrell, of Local 106, Cleveland, O., during the month. Tom came to the town on the Rhine to attend the Executive Board meeting of the Ohio State Federation of Labor. Brother Farrell carries more than the ordinary weight of responsibility among trades unionists. He is the secretary and business agent of the Cleveland Federation of Labor, president of Waiters' Local 106, first vice-president of the Ohio State Federation of Labor, and is one of our International Union's delegates to the convention of the American Federation of Labor. Despite and notwithstanding all of these positions, Tom manages to keep out in front and never permits himself to slow up. He accomplishes an immense amount of good work every day in the year, and those who elect him to office know that he will make good or know the reason why. All of our locals in the Sixth City are doing splendidly, though trade conditions have not improved quite as much as was expected after the summer season ended. Ohio is not a munition producer; perhaps that is one reason why our folks have not observed the good times which it is alleged prevails in other sections of America. Guess we shall have to wait until "after the war is over" before looking to intently for better times. Speaking of war reminds us that the Social War is being carried on in the Buckeye State with considerable activity. The Anti-Saloonists claim to have the biggest guns, but the Liberals are on the job and will remain active until after the ballots are counted.

WHAT IS A COCKTAIL?

"A Tipperary cocktail," deriving its characteristic color from a tincture of creme de menth, may appeal to the artistic sense. But what is a cocktail?"—The New York World.

The English call a glass of fresh foaming beer a cocktail. Americans drink almost innumerable mixtures under the name "cocktail," many of them variations of the well-known and well-defined "Manhattan," "Martini," or others which might be called standard cocktails. There is for those, whose taste so inclines them, a "soda cocktail," made of soda water, sugar and bitters. There is also the oyster cocktail.

Americans in Europe and Asia, who are unwise enough to patronize "American bars" so-called, have encountered sundry mixtures wholly unfamiliar to the American palate, and wholly unpalatable, called cocktails. There is an "American bar" in Calcutta—if its proprietors are still unlynched—at which two rupees, the equivalent of 66 cents or thereabouts, is charged for a mixture mislabeled an "American Manhattan cocktail" and served in a brown glass to hide the fact that it is made of white lead, linseed oil and coloring water.

The "cocktail" is anything which anyone chooses to mix and serve under an uncopied name. It is, at its best, a very mixed drink, which no stickler for health or for healthful beverages can approve. At its worst it is a liquid assault upon the inner man with intent to commit mayhem. There are no legal proceedings under which anyone can be estopped from calling any sort of mixture a cocktail. Its basis may be gin, whisky, champagne, hock, soda water, blue points, creme de menthe or anything else the maker may choose.

An unabridged dictionary or an accomplished drink mixer can tell you what some varieties of cocktails are, but all of the lexicographers and all of the bartenders in convention assembled could not tell what is in all cocktails.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A WORD TO WORKERS.

"No wage-earner is doing his full duty if he fails to identify his own interests with those of his fellow-workmen. The obvious way to make common cause with them is to join a trade union, and thus secure a position from which to strengthen organized labor and influence it for the better." —Ernest Howard Crosby (President Social Reform Club, New York).

AS TO CHINAFICATION.

"Chinafication" is a good catchword, but not even Colonel Roosevelt can take it seriously. There is not the remotest danger that any nation of European stock will come to resemble the Chinese by the mere practice of living peaceably and cutting down expenditure upon war. The Chinese, for that matter, are not lacking in courage, and if they should ever adopt the crude Western ideas as to the glory and splendor of wars of conquest it would be an evil day for the world; only their conservative temper, pacific disposition and unwieldy government has kept them from such a transformation as Japan has undergone in our time. Only an unjustifiable arrogance can speak with contempt of the Chinese, who are one of the world's greatest races, and have perhaps originated more than any other people known to history. That they have for centuries been in a stagnant condition is due to historical causes rather than to any deterioration of the race, which is certain still to have a great future. If "Chinafication" could spread out a little more evenly over the world it would give a more cheerful outlook. China might do with a little less, but most countries could stand a good deal more without being mollycoddled.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

CORRESPONDENCE

This Journal will not be Held Responsible for Views Expressed by Correspondents.

TACOMA, WASH.

From all data I can gather it has been many moons since the columns of our official journal have delineated any news from Local 61, but we wish to state that in the future we will endeavor to keep the readers better posted in regards to conditions existing under our jurisdiction.

Last month we elected and installed a new set of officers, consisting of the following members: President, Marshall Hill, chef at the Argonaut Cafe, and if avoirdupois can be counted as "union weight" we have full measure; vice-president, Alma Mathews, dispenser of nourishment at the Washington Delicatessen, one who can be relied on on all occasions; treasurer, Lillie Smith, a very charming young waitress at the Argonaut Cafe, whose placid demeanor would invite confidence from anyone—the local backs her to a member to fulfill all expectations in her present office; financial secretary, H. Roy Harrison, the undersigned; recording secretary, Thedosia Kraft, an intelligent young miss who we have every reason to believe will make good—she assists Sister Smith in handling the voluminous business transacted by the Argonaut management; inspector, Susie Thompson, a sister of merit, liked by every one, and a consistent worker. Bro. D. L. McGinnis was placed in the chaplain's chair, his earnest demeanor or acclaims him "the right man in the right place." Executive board, James Chick, chef at the Lotus Grill, a sober, industrious, business-like fellow, who never shirks; Jay G. Lewis, chef at the Peerless Grill, former president and one who understands his business; Thos. Bishoff, an incessant worker for anything beneficial to the organization.

The membership, we hope, will give the officers the support needed, as that is very essential for the proper management of local business.

Local 61 has just passed through an unfortunate experience, which we hope will prove beneficial to the extent of rejuvenating the membership to more concerted action by their attendance at meetings and interest in affairs.

Business has been very quiet for the past few months and prospects are none too bright for the coming winter, but we are fortunate in having most of our members working at present.

Our "Big Day" is near at hand, and we expect our organization to be well represented; we figure on having as large, if not the largest, labor celebration Tacoma ever boasted on September 6th, and "The City of Destiny" can well be proud of some of her past turnouts.

Wishing every member of organized labor success and prosperity, I am,

Fraternally yours,

H. ROY HARRISON,
Financial Secretary, Local 61.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

DEAR BROTHER EDITOR—The possibility of the county voting dry in November has created restraint in the business of our craft.

In everything that tends towards the improvement of our craft and the labor movement in general, Local 106 is ably represented by one of its old timers and active workers. Frank Burkley, who holds the responsible position of secretary to the Cuyahoga County Labor Home Rule League, an organization primarily formed to combat the activities of the dry movement.

Again, I want to impress upon all members in our alliance who contemplate Cleveland as their next stop, to consider the above reference to the dry movement, and then bear in mind if we who are in the territory affected by its agitation do not find it a precarious living.

What we need at this time is voters, not floaters.

Our new administration is doing nicely and with the opposition removed for good, we expect to accomplish great things the coming term for the best interests of Local 106.

The delegates elected to represent Local 106 at the state convention in Mansfield are Edw. Whissemore, Arthur Just and G. Fitzpatrick.

Fraternally yours,

ARTHUR S. LOEB,
Press Secretary.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The members of Local 335 are still determined to keep among the living and fight for better conditions. We have added another house to our list of union places. The proprietor of this house tried, for a few months, to run a house which was unfair to organized labor, and we finally convinced him that it was more profitable to be fair and employ union waitresses. Conditions in Toledo are not the best; work has been very slack all summer, quite a few of our members being out of work and some working only half time.

The subject which has all our attention at the present is that of prohibition; we are deeply concerned in the coming election in November, for it means very much to us indeed.

We trust that every member of our International who has a vote will not forget to cast it on election day. In the past the voters have been too sure that the various states could not go dry but were deeply amazed to find, the day after election, that their bread and butter had been voted out of their mouths. Every brother of this International in Ohio should be out early and try to convince every other voter than prohibition is wrong. Not alone will the men be affected by such a law but the women and children, the families of those thrown out of employment, will suffer even more. Through lack of employment more girls will be forced upon the street, and instead of uplifting the morals of the community they will be drifting in the opposite direction. For the sake of your family, be sure to cast your vote against prohibition on November 2.

With greetings and best wishes to all our brothers and sisters.

Fraternally yours,

NIDA R. PANGLE,
Secretary. Local 335.

FRESNO, CALIFORNIA.

DEAR SIR AND BRO.—Local 62 having appointed a Press Secretary some time ago, they believe that individual in common with the rest of their officers should not only do their duty, but something more than that and although such a word as can't is in Webster's Unabridged, that work is not officially ours. Authority here is Fresno, for we absolutely decline to understand such a word as can't, it being only too evident that the man who can't today won't tomorrow. This, Bro. Sullivan, accounts for my frequent contributions which must not only tax your patience, but may evoke a pardonable curse as you wrestle with my poor copy.

Things are certainly improving here and there are only nine men in this city working who do not belong to us. This is immensely gratifying to the officials as well as the lay members of our organization, and incidentally they, or someone else in their jobs, will have a card in their pockets before long. Then we will be wearing the Sunny Jim wreath around our mouths—you know—"The stuff that won't come off."

However, we are not going to rest on our laurels. The prohibition campaign is soon due and we have work of the fiercest kind to be done. We have succeeded in showing the proprietors the aid they can reckon upon in employing organized men with the whole strength of the labor movement, and registered voters to boot to give prohibition such a fight that they may think twice before again tackling California. Eggs spoil quickly in this hot weather, besides they are too expensive, but we have seen the sort the Chinese utilize used to some good purpose before, even on saintly temperance reformers, but verbal rotten eggs are going to be very plentiful in the ensuing campaign, probably from both sides. However, as we recognize that our bread and butter is in jeopardy we will certainly not be found wanting in either the conduct of the campaign or in playing politics.

One of the pleasant features of our success is the cordial help we have received from all sections of the labor movement in our endeavor to line up the town. The secretaries of the Labor council, Teamsters, Beer Bottlers, Laborers, and Icemen's unions are even willing to heed any request we may make of them and at any hour, and if it had not been for their cordial co-operation we never would have gotten half the places lined up to our satisfaction, and when a reluctant proprietor recognizes that his meat may spoil for want of ice, that the beer drivers may be late with the barrel, and that the teamsters may accidentally deliver their goods last on their round the boss generally capitulates. These things are not done in a bull-dozing manner, but require a lot of thought, brains and common sense, for a slip may spoil the whole thing. This is especially true of houses where there is no card to take out and which do not depend on union men for their trade. Outside of this we have joined the boosting of the town and in common with the merchants we are with them in their cry of FRESNO FIRST and believe me, we mean it. Knockers of the town and of their local get scant shift in Fresno, and incompetents, drunks, as well as non-card men, do not find Fresno to their liking and after a day or two generally find it to their advantage to seek some other locality. This is as it should be, and we have never had cause to regret the policy we have adopted with such signal success.

With best wishes, I remain

Fraternally yours,

JULIUS BECKER.

BEATIN' IT.

Some people go to Heaven
And others go to Hell.
I've known some sent to Jericho
If they went I cannot tell;
But we went to Los Angeles,
The night was cold and rare,
And all of us were tickled, 'cos
We never paid our fare.

We got into a boxcar,
Laid on a paper sheet,
With paper blankets over us
To keep us in the heat.
T'was good as riding Pullman,
We did not have a care,
The only thing that worried us
Was we didn't pay no fare.

No porters wanted tipping.
Our baggage on our backs,
A vacuum in our pockets, for
We had no coin, alack!
We slumbered on so innocent,
And snored just like a bear,
And dreamt sweet dreams, in which it seems Nobody paid their fare.

When we awoke next morning
Rain water washed our face.
A handkerchief our towel,
To obliterate dirt's trace;
Long, long t'will be remembered,
We done it on a dare.
And don't forget we won our bet
We never paid our fare.

—JULIUS BECKER.

GALVESTON, TEXAS.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—As it has been quite a long time since anything was heard from Local 69 through the MIXER AND SERVER, I thought I would write a few lines.

Local 69 was making fine progress up to the time the storm of August 16, struck us, and played havoc with us. We had just signed up three new houses just prior to the storm, one of them being the long-fought Tremont Cafe. But the storm struck and played havoc with us. The storm washed three of the houses away that are large workers of our lodge men, and thirty other houses closed and have never opened yet. Everything is just about normal now. Some of the boys left town, some going to work at trades.

I suppose that every one knows that Local 69 owns its own hall (meeting hall.) We had just spent about $800.00 in repairing the hall when the storm struck it and ruined most all of the new papering and a large part of the plastering, but we are still here, and here to stay.

We are very thankful to G. E. B. and more especially so to the general office for the interest taken in our behalf, and for the assistance rendered the storm sufferers of our local. I am in receipt of a letter from the general office, bearing the post mark of August 17. (the storm was at its height at 2:38 o'clock a. m. August 17), inquiring of the conditions of the members of the International in Galveston, so you can see that was quick action on the part of our general secretary-Treasurer Jere L. Sullivan, and relief was sent to all of those who were in distress as soon as possible. I don't want to forget to mention Bro. W. E. Reynolds, International Organizer, for he did great work under difficult circumstances. The members of our local are all quite well satisfied and proud to say that they belong to an International Union like the H. & R. E. I. A. and B. I. L. of A. Local 69 was organized in June, 1896, and has passed through two bad storms, that of September 8, 1900, and August 16, 1915, and we are still on the job and doing fine, but don't let me forget to tell you all that the storm was the worst in the history of the town. Think of yourself, please, standing in water five feet, six inches deep at 2:38 o'clock in the morning, and the wind blowing 120 miles an hour, and it as dark as h— itself and three fires break out at that time of the night, if that is not the limit, what is? I want the public to know that we had a storm.

With greetings I am, yours fraternally,

M. W. LUSK,

President Local 69, 909 21st St., Galveston, Tex.

DENVER, COLO.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The convention of the State Federation of Labor opened here in Denver Monday. It was intended at first to hold it at Salida, Colo., but was transferred to Denver at the last moment. The delegates from Local 14 are Bros. Clarence Cox and Shell Harding and Sisters Grace Cornforth and Josie Costello. Organizer James Butler is a visitor here this week, being here to attend the convention. We are all glad to see him as he was formerly a member of Local 14, and was one of the best workers in the Local as well as he is in the International field now.

Local 14 won the prize Labor Day for having the best and prettiest float in the parade. It was donated by the Labor Day Committee and was a solid silver loving cup. It is now in our club rooms here and sure looks fine. The float was all decorated with flowers and banners which read: "WE WORK SIX DAYS," and "WAITERS AND WAITRESSES UNION LOCAL No. 14." There were two tables on the float with two waiters, Cecil Glascock and Emmet Vance doing the serving and May McCord as head waitress. The guests were served with fruit and a nice light lunch and it sure made a nice appearance and was the talk of all who saw the parade. One of the things that made a hit was Master Elmer McCord, son of our vice-president, Mrs. May McCord, who was all dolled up like a real waiter.

Work is very scarce here as our new chief of police has closed up all the cafes and the few that are open cannot serve a lady without an escort, and no drinks can be served them without a meal and the chief has given orders that a sandwich does not constitute a meal. We had hopes that they would open the town up for the Colorado

MASTER ELMER MCCORD.

The above is from a photograph of Master Elmer McCord. Last Labor Day his father, the late Fred McCord, was one of the most popular and well-known waiters in the business, being a member of Local 20 of St. Louis. His mother, Mrs. May McCord, is vice-president of Local 14, and certainly puts her heart in her work. Master Elmer is a coming waiter and says he wants to be what his father was, and some day Local 14 will be proud of him.

Fraternally yours,

JAMES HICKS.

Farm Congress which starts September 27, and lasts 16 days. They figure on 100,000 visitors here during that time and if they would loosen up a little it would give everyone a chance to make a little money, but instead of opening up the town they are putting the lid on tighter than ever. But hoping that we will all be able to make get-away money before January 1, I am,

Fraternally yours,

JAMES HICKS,
Press Secretary, Local 14.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Although in our infancy we are glad to say that we are growing every day.

Local 505 made no preparations for the Labor Day parade until what was practically the last moment. Bro. Cox, business agent, saw the opportunity to make a showing and asked the grand marshal for a position in the parade. Owing to the fact that most of the boys were working, we only had twenty men in line. Considering that we procured our charter on April 1, with sixteen members, and now have nearly seventy in good standing, we think this is some showing, taking into consideration the fact that we have not a big job in town, but are working every day to land one, and if we once land any one of the big houses it will only be a matter of time until 505 will have all the big houses and be paying per capita on 200 instead of 70 members.

Our Slogan is, "We are Young, Watch us Grow," and this is the spirit we are all working under.

Yours Fraternally,

JACOB SEWALL, Recording Sec. Local 505.

AUGUSTA, GA.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Local 870 is still on the face of the earth, but we don't know for just how long. We are all fighting with a hopeful heart to win. None of our members are out of employment at this writing.

There is nothing that would relieve the minds of the members of Local 870 and others in this city than to know just what the governor's intentions are toward the prohibition measure to come up at the extra session of the legislature, which will be called during the month of November. We have made every effort to induce the governor not to introduce the prohibition measure at the extra session, but we have not as yet received an answer from him.

Local 870 is taking an active part in the labor forward movement of this city, and we hope to have every label on the market soon. The Augusta Women's International Label League will display all union labeled goods and the names of the firms that handle them at the next annual fair, which will be held here during the month of November.

If in Georgia at any time, drop into the city of Augusta and call on some of the bar boys. They are chummy old skates, and will see that you have a jolly time, especially if you have a paid-up card. Some say that Georgia is dry. So it may be, but, my friends, take it from me, Augusta is not.

Fraternally yours,

J. W. BROOKS,
Recording Secretary Local 870.

CHICAGO, ILL.

DEAR SISTERS AND BROTHERS—For many years have agitators and builders in the local unions of Chicago preached, teached and resolved that the most important and necessary work for a successful organization among culinary workers must be the absolute abolition of "Vampireism."

For years these agitators have not only been blackmailed by those who have collected the extortion money, but among the rank and file of those who were forced to pay part of their earnings, wages, percentage or tips, they have been declared as "impossibleists," called dreamers and reformers.

Dreams, like ideas, sometimes become realities and facts, as dreamers and agitators often become philosophers and scientists, and it seems that the first great attempt for the hotel and restaurant employees of Chicago for the abolition of "vampireism" has been a complete victory.

Not only do the employees consider themselves victorious, but the management of one of the largest amusement parks in the entire world has joined hands with the employees in this great moral cause.

On Wednesday, September 15, 1915, Mr. Wm. Schmidt, president of the Riverview Park Amusement Company of Chicago, sent out invitations to business agents of unions and committeemen, who negotiated in behalf of the abolition of vampireism, the president and secretary of the grievance committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor and the employes of the park, to attend a banquet at the Riverside Park Casino in order to celebrate the splendid success obtained by the employes and employers under the new agreement.

Mr. John B. Hartke, one of the big stockholders of the park, acted as toastmaster. Mr. Hartke in addressing the banquet said:

"Ladies and Gentlemen—I am happier today than if some one would give me twenty-five thousand dollars—not because the park has made so much money this year. No we have taken in just sixteen thousand dollars less money this year than in the year 1914. But this has been due to the lack of sunshine and bad weather. I am happy because of the great moral victory and the establishment of honesty among our employes and employers."

Mr. Hartke said that he had offered five thousand dollars to anyone who could prove that any one of his employes were vampired, but that no one had claimed the reward.

Mr. Wm. Schmidt, president of the park, and a man of great idealism, proudly sat at the table with his employes and told them that he himself had some bitter experience with vampireism. When he worked as a journeyman baker in Germany he had been forced to donate two weeks' labor in order to procure a position and that it was there and then that he became a rebel and a friend of those who seek to abolish all forms of extortion and vampireism.

Mr. Schmidt promised that he would gladly recommend to all other employers to assist the hotel employes in the abolition of that system and would also advise them to deal with organized labor in the general promotion of the morals, and said that he would rather deal with organized labor than with unorganized, as he knew the great majority of them to be honest and capable craftsmen.

Brother Benjamin F. Parker of Waiters' Union No. 35, who is one of those waiters who has worked for the elimination of vampireism, was called upon by Mr. Hartke. Parker said it was the first time in his twenty years' experience as a waiter in Chicago that he had the real co-operation of large employers in the work of breaking up the vampire system and that every waiter and every honest craftsman should be extremely happy and welcome this day.

Sister Elizabeth Maloney of Waitresses' Union Local 484, was called upon. She expressed her hearty appreciation and thanked the park management, and especially Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Hartke, for their sincere co-operation.

Brother Albert Mayor, president of Waiters Union Local 35, who had appointed the committee last spring to begin this work, said that he was proud of his men, and that they had shown the park and the world that a waiter would rather depend and live on honest rewards than on dishonest methods, but that conditions often compelled a waiter to do things against his will and against his employers.

Brother George Grage, the manager and chef of the Casino, was called upon and said: "I am proud of my good and efficient cooks and the assistance and help given me by Cooks' Union Local 865 and their business agent; I am glad if we have given good service and pleased to see you all satisfied."

Other speakers who made the affair pleasant and attractive were B. C. Dillin and D. C. Wheeler, president and secretary of the Grievance Committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor. They both promised that they would report to the Federation the great assistance given to organized labor by the park and would call on Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Hartke as reference in other large dealings.

A great many of the employes spoke and thanked the management for helping to eliminate all forms of graft, and expressed hope in extending their organization to the big hotels this winter.

Fraternally yours,

FRED EBELING,
Financial Secretary Cooks' Local 865.

NEW YORK, N. Y.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—A few lines to the readers of the MIXER AND SERVER to let them know that we are doing business at the same old stand here in the big city and with the following officers to guide the ship of state, we look for a better, bigger and greater local in the metropolis of the East. The officers elected and installed by our International Organizer Wm. F. Kavanagh, as follows: Ed Nugent, president; B. J. Steiner, vice-president; A. Bach, financial secretary and business agent; H. Griffin, treasurer; Frank Huber, recording secretary; A. Sackman, chaplain; Louis Weiskopp, inspector; Fritz Voight, inner guard; B. Steiner, John J. Hickey and A. Bach, delegates to joint board; John J. Hickey, corresponding and press secretary; J. Hickey, E. Nugent and A. Bach, delegates to central body.

At our last meeting, Wednesday, Sept. 22, 1915, Organizer Wm. F. Kavanagh obligated seven candidates and a number of applications were referred to our investigating committee. We are going to increase our membership, so watch us grow, as we mean business.

With many thanks for the able assistance rendered us by Bro. W. F. Kavanagh, our international organizer, as well as the general office, I am, as ever, Fraternally yours,

JOHN J. HICKEY,
Corresponding Sec'y Local 244.

JERSEY CITY, N. J.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—"Oh, He's a Jolly Good Fellow" will be sung soon at the monster stag of the bartenders and waiters, to be held at Elks' Hall. The old adage is "laugh and the world laughs with you; weep and you weep alone." Well all laugh that night and have a good time. Affairs of this kind bring the boys together and that's what makes all organizations that promote such affairs a success.

Brother Muldoon, who is doing great work for the bartenders and waiters in this city, deserves great credit for the manner in which he is bringing up both locals to the front.

Brother Bill Kavanagh attended the bartenders' meeting, Local 488, Sept. 21. Bill certainly can put ginger in a meeting; when he arises on the floor you can make a safe bet he knows what he is talking about. Bill Bryan ain't got nothing on him.

The Alliance Board and the Local Joint Board are in good working order and are doing good work. Brother Stacey is a hard worker on these boards and in other work concerning the locals.

At the present writing we are beset with strikes in this city and Bayonne in the Standard Oil and P. R. R. Companies; that naturally affects our business to a certain extent. A delegation from the Central Labor Union visited the oil company plant and tried to effect a settlement, but the sheriff of our county wanted to swear the delegates in as deputy sheriffs; that's going some—and still the world goes on. So boys, if you want to become deputy sheriffs, come to Jersey, but leave your blackjacks behind, as the law is very strict here. But I should think that law also should apply to the strike breakers. Corporations are rich and it's hell to be poor. John D., Jr. is down in Colorado; he condemns the poor living quarters of the miners and he claims he will erect houses with small gardens attached; along with that he should give them fair wages and shorter hours, but this will never pay up for the good, red blood that was spilled needlessly by honest working men, in their demand for justice.

Union conditions prevail here in the parks and the halls, and the way some of the boys are hustling for the green and blue button is encouraging. Brother Kavanagh has, I believe, in the large sense of the word, caused this State-wide agitation for the label, and it has rebounded to our credit in the cafes, halls and parks by patrons demanding our button.

The convention of the New Jersey State Federation was held in Grand View Hall, Jersey City, N. J., and was a big success. This convention brought some recognition to the labor movement, and also to the business men of this section. I would like to explain the proceedings of the convention in detail, but I think I have taken up enough space in our MIXER. But, then, somebody has to write to THE MIXER once in a while, or some of our general membership would think we were not on the map.

There are several locals in the different cities that do not let us know how things are, and if we did not read over the receipts and expenses we would think they were buried. So write and let us know how things are in the Western wilds and Canada. Eddie Cahill, the bartender, told me to tell that bartender up in the wilds of Canada he was asking for him and wishes him luck.

Brothers Kessel and Volz will give a boxing exhibition the night of our stag. I wish the brother from Canada could witness it. It will be a hummer, with Brother Mann or Brother Doyle acting as referee, and Brother Reidy timekeeper. I guess I better call time before I get hit.

Wishing the general membership success, I remain

Yours fraternally,

FRANK BURNS,
Press Secretary.

CONNELLSVILLE, PA.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Just a few lines to let the general membership know that Local 71 is still on earth and getting along fine. We recently presented our new scale to the proprietors, and now have all the hotels lined up in our territory.

Mr. Furlong, proprietor of the Hotel Atlas, has sold out to Mr. George Snider. Brother Holly has accepted a position at the St. James, and his noble servant is at the Atlas. The Fayette County Fair has just closed. Two of our brothers were working at Dawson for the week, and it was some job; never again—too much race track. Local 78, how about that game of cinch; cold feet? I tell you you will have to go some to beat Brother Deferry. We still have a few brothers on the extra list. Bro. Ike Francis is still the same old Ike, as happy as a lark all the time. Next Tuesday is election day, and we are going to put the right men at the head.

Yours fraternally,

TOM EVANS,
Press Secretary Local 71.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Local 175 is still on the firing line and progressing finely.

The Buffalo Industrial Show will be officially opened by Governor Whitman. Seames & Zeitler will have charge of the catering, and will put about ten of our men to work, along with fifty waiters.

At a meeting held September James Lvdel was elected first vice-president, and Geo. Acker, trustee of Local 175.

Joe Ball, our inspector and chairman of the house committee, is always on the job.

Where some of our members can be found: A. W. Killinger at Tenyosts. Bro. Chas. A. Schirra is in business at 801 Genesee street, formerly Frank Nolder's place. Jack Best is with Eckert & Brennan, Hotel Majestic. Chas. Lewis is with Edw. Miller, ex-president of Local 175, on Broadway. H. Grege is at the Edward cafe. Chas. Weber and Fred Towe are at the Park Hoff. Bro. Harry Andrews is at the Seneca Hotel. Bro. Vincent Stockman, of the Silver Dollar, is on the sick list.

Wishing all members of the International success and prosperity, I am

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have not exactly kept to my promise as to writing to our journal every month. But having been away on the lakeside all summer, I have had little chance to do so. On account of this being a bad year, we have felt it somewhat in this city. I suppose it is the same throughout the country. With Labor Day behind us and the summer resorts all closed, things in this city are running in the regular business way once more.

Conditions in Rochester are about normal. The usual number of boys are on the out-of-work list, but with the approach of cold weather, clam bakes, concerts, dinners and ball parties, there will naturally be some work provided for quite a few. We have had the convention of the street and electric railway employes here for twelve days, and that has brought quite a little extra business to the city.

As you probably know, the Home Telephone Company's employes are still out on strike for better conditions. I wish them success, and hope their efforts will be rewarded. It has been a hard fight for them.

Local 763 will soon hold its election of officers, and I hope that the boys will pick able and ambitious officers to carry on the good work of building up the local to the standard A1, as I personally believe the success of a local depends a good deal on the ability and sincerity of its officers. Of course, the best of them need the co-operation of the rank and file in whatever they undertake.

In last Sunday's New York American I read an article, coming from Chicago, about Grandma Ganfield, the mayor of Warren, Ill. It stated that she insisted on opening council meetings with prayer, and further said, in a sarcastic way, that the older men in that city used to open their meetings just like the Waiters' Union. I feel very much inclined to let the worthy writer of such stuff know that the Waiters' Union, with its members, is a perfectly Christian one, and always opens, as well as closes, its meetings with prayer.

I read with much interest the doings of Toledo, O., as I personally assisted Miss Pangle some years ago in establishing better conditions for the girls there. She is a very sincere and hard worker for the Waitresses' Union of Toledo, and my best wishes for success are with her and the members.

Minneapolis, Minn., has an A1 business agent. Hurrah for Tom! He will make a good thing out of that local. My greetings and best wishes to him.

Fraternally yours,
PAUL HENNEBERG.
Press Agent Local 763.

SEATTLE, WASH.

A warrant was issued in Justice Brinkers' court yesterday for the arrest of Benjamin Earlywine, former headwaiter at Tate's, charging him with grafting from the employes of that establishment. W. A. Riordan and C. R. Reed, former waiters at Tate's, who swore out the warrant, claim that Earlywine compelled them to give him $5 each before he would furnish them with employment.—Post Intelligencer, September 15, 1915.

The above clipping is small, quite true, but how much it says. Another grafter getting off for Earlywine has shook the dust of Seattle off his feet and left for parts unknown, and we have the warrant, which we will keep alive and welcome him back with should he ever take the notion to return. This case has taken a good deal of time and patience, but the time has been well spent, and I trust will put heart in the faint members and non-members, for we will help both to pick up enough courage to report these grafters and get them where they belong—in the penitentiary. How any person can pay one of those human hyenas tribute to work under their tutelage is beyond the understanding of a regular waiter, but such is the case, and once in a while we meet with those, as at present, who rise to the occasion and throw off the yoke of this type of vermin and make conditions for themselves and fellow workers. Too much praise can not be given these members, and this local will do everything in its power to protect them and see that they get what is their due. I trust the secretaries over the country will make a note of this fellow Benjamin Earlywine and notify this local of his appearance, as we are going to try and follow him up and bring him to the justice he so richly deserves. His predecessor on this job, Geo. W. Ward, who was arrested on the same charge a year ago, is now an outcast in a foreign land, learning it does not pay to monkey with a buzz saw. If we keep on accumulating them, some country is eventually going to have a trench full of them, which I trust they will use gas on. I am trying to get a picture of this distinguished member of society, and if I succeed will have it published, so all waiters can become acquainted with him and make it a little harder for him to work his little game.

Fraternally yours,

ED. T. LEVI,
Financial Secretary Local 239.

NEWPORT, KY.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The evening of September 16 will be remembered as a memorable one in the annals of our organization. A regular meeting was held, and afterwards a banquet. During the meeting addresses were delivered by General Organizer W. E. Horne and Richard W. Garrity, financial secretary and business agent of Local 77, Boston, Mass. The few members who were absent surely missed a rare treat, as both of these gentlemen are orators in the highest sense of the word.

Organizer Horne, in words far beyond my limitations, showed the "whys" and "wherefores" it was necessary to increase the monthly dues. His reasons were stated in such a plain matter-of-fact way that after he had finished our members were in accord with him. He dwelt on many other subjects that affect our interest, which showed us that he knew the subject from every angle and in a clear, forceful and logical way pointed out the road to success. It was surely the greatest address we have ever listened to, and during the last few years we have had many other men of note make addresses at our meetings, but none excelled him.

Brother Garrity was brought to the hall by Organizer Horne, and he, too, is some speaker. He spoke mostly on general welfare and how to combat the nefarious influences that are being used to drive a legitimate business from the field. He pointed out what they were doing in Boston, and urged us to imitate them along certain lines, for the interests of the business, the citizens in general, and we in particular.

I believe these two brothers made us feel that the fire of unionism will burn brighter in our breasts and urge us on to the noble work we are attempting to perform. I sincerely trust we can have both of these gentlemen with us again, as their talks surely will have a tendency to make us better citizens and better union men. We represent a cause that calls for a high citizenship, and we will, by our acts, show our mettle. I know each and every member of our local will answer the call and be found not wanting.

After the meeting we adjourned to the banquet hall, where the rarest of viands were served in "Old Kentucky" style. During the serving of the lunch popular songs were rendered by a quartette composed of Bros. John L. Schultz, Paul Roman, George Evans and Paul J. Ryan. They are some singers, and the songs they sang were rendered in a style all their own, which helped to pass a most enjoyable evening.

Too much credit can not be given to "Tapper" Bush, Gus Crawford and Chas. Zolleis for the manner in which they handled the banquet. Near the hour of midnight we wended our several ways homeward after a very pleasant and instructive evening.

On Monday evening, October 11, we are to hold a grand dress ball at Central Hall, Ninth and Central avenue, in our city, and we invite all our brothers to be with us.

Fraternally yours,

FRED WEBER,
Business Agent Local 149.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—For the past year business here has been so light in our line that we have had at least from 150 to 250 members loafing, and at this writing we have a great many members working at other lines and keeping their dues paid up; but we have also a good bunch not in good standing on account of unemployment.

Not a week passes but what we have from one to several traveling cards deposited, and what becomes of many of these traveling members this local is at a loss to know. Hardly a week passes that some place don't change hands; then a change of bartenders. Invariably the new proprietor has a country cousin who wants to pay fifty bucks. He will do well enough for a month or so, but the new proprietor finds he ain't laying up any Jack on his new venture. Then it's a lamb he goes looking for one to unload on. All this makes it very soft and easy for our business representative. He has nothing to do but sign new contracts, in most places remove the card, and then educate the new bar boy why this and that was done. Oh, it is a pleasant job John Voorhees has here. Well, enough of that; now for something new.

The Anti-Saloon League of Missouri is going to try and turn a new stunt. They found out they had no luck with the people of the State voting it dry, so they are now going to work on the members-elect to the Senate and lower house. Their line of action will be to have no candidate for either house nominated unless he stands strictly for prohibition. Everybody interested in the welfare of Missouri should wake up at once and get busy, or in 1917 Missouri will be lined up with Kansas. Let us all get busy, find out who is going to run, and see where he stands.

The twenty-fourth annual convention of the Missouri State Federation of Labor opened at Moberly on Monday, September 18, 1915, with 175 delegates seated. Several locals from the State refused to respond. Also a State Trades Union Liberal League was created here to promote ways and means to combat prohibition in the future, and a complete roster of officers was elected. Too much credit can not be given to the officers and members of Bartenders' Local 652, Moberly, for the masterful manner in which they entertained the visiting delegates. The following brothers had charge of the social committee: Brothers Peters, Peck, Clark, the grand old man Jim Bucker, Stemm, Sparkman, Myers, Pulliam, Howard, Millering, Smith, Gous, Kuster and Carroll. The entertainment, lunch and refreshments served will long be remembered by all delegates in attendance. The headquarters of Gus and Ed. Willotts, where the Social Order of Jinks held their meetings and initiations, was a continual round of pleasure and enjoyment long to be remembered by all the old Jinks and the newly initiated. The following officers of the Missouri Trades Union Liberal League were elected: Joseph Houser, Brewery Workers of St. Louis, president; James Harvey, bartenders' Local 420, Kansas City; Roy Fulton, Brewery Workers, Kansas City; A. Althiet, Cigar Makers, St. Louis; F. Dunlap, Glass Blowers, St. Louis; H. Brooks, Firemen, Kansas City; W. W. Scott, Engineers, Kansas City; Owen Miller, Musicians, St. Louis; J. Reiger, Steam Fitters, St. Louis, and J. Moore, Building Laborers, Kansas City, vice-presidents; John L. Smith, Kansas City, secretary-treasurer of the Missouri State Federation of Labor, secretary and treasurer, and Louise Midlestadt, of the Bottle Labelers, Kansas City; John C. Voorhees, Bartenders' Local 420, and Joseph Hans, Brewery Workers, St. Louis, trustees. Fraternally yours,

MICHAEL P. FINAN,
Rec. and Press Sec. Local 420.

MIAMI, ARIZONA.

DEAR SISTERS AND BROTHERS—No doubt it has been some time since Local 680 has been heard from. We are enjoying good conditions, with a straight eight-hour shift and a fair wage contract, and all restaurants and cafes signed up and some few boarding houses. We expect to have all of them in a short time. We are looking forward to a most prosperous winter, and with a new restaurant opening up, an increase in membership.

We expect to put a business agent in the field on salary, so that the local's affairs will be properly looked after. Miami and Globe is a copper mining camp, and is thoroughly organized in all branches of labor, yet there are hundreds of idle men of all trades here, especially miners, and I advise all brothers and sisters to stay away and pass the word along.

Labor day was celebrated here in a true union spirit. The speakers of the day were Governor Hunt, Senator Wosley, Mayor Sears of Miami, George Powell, Brother McLunkey of the Western Federation of Miners, and Brother Lewis of the Engineers. There was a large turnout and every craft was well represented. The members of Local 680 are a very proud bunch of boys and girls, as we had the honor of winning first prize, which was $35 in cash, for the best decorated float, which was most handsomely arranged with a kitchen and dining-room and had a guest seated at the table being served by yours truly, while Brother Gakonovich was busily engaged in getting the orders out to the satisfied guest. Much credit is due Brothers Bright, Noble, Nicodarns and Clancy for the splendid showing of Local 680 in the parade.

The Arizona State Federation of Labor Convention will be held in Tucson, October 4, 5 and 6. Local 680 has elected Bro. F. S. Williams as their delegate.

With greetings to all affiliated locals, especially Local 631, I am Fraternally yours,

MRS. F. S. WILLIAMS,
Member Local 680.

PATERSON, N. J.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I take great pleasure in writing to you for the first time, and I wish to thank you for your co-operation in regards to Local 648, of Paterson, N. J. As you undoubtedly know from your vast experience of union labor affairs, the officers of the various organizations have a whole lot to contend with of a petty nature. The members have the same old kick no matter what it pertains to. But the consistency of the faithful few in this case is like patience—it is a virtue.

Now to come to the meat of what I wish to say. I wish to thank you most sincerely for the services of Bro. William Kavanagh, International Organizer. Brother Kavanagh arrived at the psychological moment, and I sincerely believe he saved Local 648 from going into the discard. As a body we have had a whole lot to contend with since the advent of Billy Sunday and the natural depression of business. But those things were nothing to be compared with the discord that has been going on in our local the past few months. But since Brother Kavanagh has come into our midst it looks as though he has solved the problem and saved the day for us. It appeared to me that a local man had impossible task set before him to bring about an amicable feeling among our members, but I can assure you that Brother Kavanagh has done what appeared to be the impossible. I can not say enough in favor of Brother Kavanagh, for he sure has put this local on the straight path. The members understand each other better now than they ever did before, and I am assured that you will hear nothing but favorable comments regarding our local in the future.

Business is picking up a little just now, and the political party representing local option in our municipality is almost obliterated already, but that is not stopping us from hustling just the same.

By the time this letter reaches you we will probably be installed in our new home on Washington street, which will be more convenient than our old one, and I am positive from now on we shall travel the road to success.

Thanking you again for your co-operation, I remain Fraternally yours,

JOHN WEBB,
Secretary Local 648.

WORDS YOU USE INCORRECTLY.

NEGLIGENCE—"Negligence" is a habit or trait. It does not mean "neglect." "Neglect" applies simply to a certain act or a succession of acts.

CONDIGN—"Condign" has come to be used for "severe." Condign punishment is supposed to be severe punishment. This is wrong. Condign merely means "suitable," "merited" or "adequate."

DISCOVER AND INVENT—To discover is to find something that has previously existed. To invent is to devise something that never before existed. For instance: Steam was "discovered," but the steam engine was "invented." The two words should not be used interchangeably.

LIKELY AND LIABLE—"Likely" infers any kind of probability. "Liable" implies only an unpleasant probability. A man is "likely" to win; he is liable to lose. Don't say "I am liable to be at home" unless being at home is a misfortune.

ENORMITY—This does not mean "size," but atrociousness. We may speak of the "enormousness" of a mountain; but only of the "enormity" of a fault.

LUXURIANT—Here is a word sometimes confounded with "luxurious." "Luxuriant" means "abundant." "Luxurious" means "given to luxury" or "supplied with luxury."

MUTUAL—Dickens grossly misuses the word "mutual" in "Our Mutual Friend." Many others fall into the same error. "Mutual" means "reciprocal." It does not refer to something two or more people have in common; like a friend or a home. Say instead "our 'common' friend" or "our 'common' home."—Cincinnati Post.

Our Aspiration

"Man wants little here below, Nor wants that little long," was the wise saying of Goldsmith; but hark ye, my brother, the little which man wants, he wanteth with vigor and he wanteth it now. For be it known that wants unsated are burdens which few of humankind carry with smiles and pleasure. As the savants of the olden time were wont to say: Verily the most necessary thing which man wanteth is companionship; without the communion of man to man and among men, he leaveth the paths of rectitude and righteousness and descendeth to dawdle among the swine. Man left without companionship is indeed a victim of the worries and tribulations of life. Man must goeth forth into the highways and byways and mingleth with his kind, and that concept of his wants calls into being association with others.

Associations are of many kinds and of many hues, some of them sticketh the knife blade unto the hilt into any idea which brings to mankind a chance to laugh, to enjoy the good things of the earth to look forward to a brighter and better tomorrow. Such an association this great land which we call America is now and has been sorely afflicted with; it has thriven on the pennies of the bigot and fanatic, and it strives and thrives as it accumulates frowns and fears. At one time in its history it carried the word American as a prefix; its work and endeavors were so contrary to the spirit of the word, that common protest from the lovers of American Fair Play uncoupled the prefix, chased it back to the end and made it an affix, and there you find it today. There are other forms of associations, one of which is your local union and your International Union. We who make up the almost Three Millions of Trades Unionists under the banner of the American Federation of Labor, believe, and implicitly, that there is no form of association which brings to the weary and heavy-laden toilers greater returns nor more promising rewards.

Trade Unionism is not a cure all, not even its most ardent advocates but what are ready and willing to admit that it has its limitations; but in its sphere of usefulness it transcends all other movements for the uplifting of the lowly, the heartening and strengthening of the weak. In the language of the late William E. Gladstone (The Grand Old Man of England) "trade unions are the bulwarks of modern democracy."

The trade union movement of America as voiced by the American Federation of Labor "stands unalterably for the abolition of all forms of involuntary servitude and devotes its time and efforts to make every day a day of better life."

Of the little wants of man, the sane, clean-thinking man wants his companionship to be of the best, and with that end in view he becomes attached to Trades Unions, where he knows he can secure any reasonable co-operation of his fellows and look forward with satisfied assurance that what he wants are equally the wants of his companions, and that in unity there is greater strength to secure than in scattered effort.

To paraphrase the saying of Goldsmith:

Our International Union wants little here below, but the little in its case is the co-operation of the men and women engaged in the Catering Industry of all America.

Every member of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League being interested in its welfare, inasmuch as the proceeds are part of the International funds, it therefore follows that, being the "servers" of condiments, liquors, etc., their good will would be of marked advantage to purveyors of articles of consumption either in Hotels, Clubs, Cafes, Buffets or Bars. The membership of the International Union consists of the very highest class of bartenders, cooks, waiters and hotel employees generally.

According to press dispatches printed several weeks ago, a manufacturer of automobiles in the city of Detroit began the distribution of something approximating $25,000,000.00 to persons who had purchased during a given period—one year—one of this automobile maker's cars. It seems that he had agreed that, if he sold 300,000 machines during the year, he would refund to each purchaser the sum of $65.00, and, according to promise made, began the distribution referred to. This maker of automobiles startled the country about a year or so ago with the announcement that he had voluntarily raised the wages of most of his employes to almost double the wages paid formerly, and practically twice as much as the prevailing rate of wages in that industry either in his home city or elsewhere. The machine which this manufacturer places on the market can be purchased at a remarkably low figure in comparison to the cars of other makers. It is not our purpose to criticize one way or the other the methods of the maker of these cheap-priced cars, but it naturally excites inquisitiveness and prompts numberless questions as to how great a profit other automobile makers obtain and retain. In fact, the worker is prompted to inquire if there is not, proportionately, as great profits in other articles of use, wear and consumption; and if that thought will stand without the necessity of propounding, there is a logical interrogation to follow, and it is: Who gets that excess coin? Wages and hours of labor, so we are advised by economic experts, are largely regulated by supply and demand. If there are one hundred jobs open and three hundred men seeking those jobs, it is a foregone conclusion that a species of competition ensues which slam down wages and increase hours of labor. If these one hundred jobs are given to one hundred men, there are two hundred men minus employment in that line of work, and they are going to make their presence known and felt by insistence of applications for employment to the distributor of jobs. Supposing that these one hundred job holders after working a week or two discovered that the hours of labor were needlessly long and the wages paid unusually small, and they began as individuals to approach the boss and seek for improvement in their conditions both as regards wages and hours of employment, what character of treatment would they receive—what would be the answer to such workers? More than likely the foreman, or whoever had the giving of the jobs to the seekers for same, would say: This morning there were seventy-five men at the gates applying for work; they neither asked for or expected to secure what you are seeking now; they were more than willing to take your job had you failed to report for duty; therefore, under the circumstances, I see no reason why we should consider your request, or even attempt to grant it. If you are dissatisfied and desire to quit, that is your privilege; we are ready to pay you off at a moment's notice. A reasonable foreman, a man who did not desire to excite animosities, would have used the foregoing or similar language, but there are one hundred chances to one that such an application would meet with—if you don't like what you are getting here, get out. Surely, there is a solution for such a condition. It does not seem exactly right, fair nor just to permit conditions to exist which make it possible for selfishness to profit by reason of an overcrowded labor market.

In the catering industry at this very moment and in all parts of America the number of unemployed bartenders, cooks, waiters, waitresses and catering industry employees generally are astounding. Possibly, you may not agree that the conditions are serious, but there is little doubt but what you will admit that the supply of workers in the catering industry exceeds the demand by a considerable number. Supposing that it was up to you, and it is proportionately your problem to solve, what method would you employ? How would you plan to overcome this very big and serious obstacle in our path? Is there a Moses or a Solomon hidden away in our ranks? Here is his big chance. If he offers a solution, one really practicable, he will write his name deep in the history of our movement.

AN UNERRING MARK.

The use of the expression, "Kept Press," has become more and more frequent in the last few years than ever before, and there seems to be good reason for the increasing use of the expression. Many of our readers have good memories, and others make it a practice of keeping on file at home their daily paper. If the former will turn back their memory cylinders, and the latter refer to their file of daily papers, they will be able to grasp the real problem and reach conclusions. In August The United States Commission on Industrial Relations released a synopsis of their report, and the MIXER AND SERVER began printing installments of same in the September (1915) number. Just as soon as the first section of that synopsis was turned loose certain daily papers began to hurl insistent invectives and abuse at the head of the chairman of the Commission; in fact, they seemed to direct their attack solely against him, despite the fact that the portion of the Report which they did not agree with was signed by Commissioners Lennon, O'Connell and Garretson.

Chairman Walsh was anything but the right man for such an immense job, and they proceeded to make a case against him. Miles of editorials and inspired news articles bore down on Chairman Walsh like an avalanche when it was made known that the Commission held the Rockefellers responsible for the turmoil in Colorado. The "Kept Press" held up to inspection the fact that the Commission was "divided," and renewed its efforts to discredit its findings. When the "Kept Press" discovered that, notwithstanding its ceaseless efforts to divert the attention of the reading public had failed, it changed from attack to printing laudatory articles of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and column after column, and in fact pages, of illustration were devoted to describing John D. Jr.'s trip to Colorado and his "economic cure-all" for the ills of the mine and other workers employed by the Colorado Fuel and Iron Co.

Give your memory a chance to recall what your "favorite" daily paper had to say about the United States Commission on Industrial Relations and Chairman Frank Walsh and his colleagues, Lennon, O'Connell and Garretson, and if you discover that it lambasted Frank Walsh and his co-workers, and then you find that John D., Jr., and Standard Oil generally is handled gently and kindly by the same papers, you mission, your search is finished, for that favorite paper of yours is one of the "Kept Press," and under its veneer of love for the common people you will find the unerasable mark—Standard Oil. The citizens of the United States have never been offered such an excellent opportunity of knowing just where their papers stand. For, while we are willing to concede that Chairman Frank Walsh and Commissioners Lennon, O'Connell and Garretson are not infallible, that they may have made some mistakes, we are willing to stake our chance on them in preference to the judgment of the "Kept Press," which, at best, is the friend of the people ONLY when Standard Oil permits friendship, and to no greater extent. The press which the workers must depend on, in addition to their own local labor papers and International Journals, are such papers as can pass through the suggested test. If they are with Rockefeller and the Dollar Barons, labor would be, indeed, foolish to support them.

BETWEEN OURSELVES.

Once in a while it is conducive to men and women to sort of take an inventory of things generally, and particularly of themselves and their activities—to look the old machine over, see if its working parts are rusting or require lubrication, and after making an appraisement of self-possessions, to amend matters somewhat.

Few of us are immune from occasional attacks of illness. The good Lord provides us with fairly healthy frames and constitutions, but he does not guarantee to keep that frame in working and healthful condition without our incessant co-operation; in fact, the application of the old saw, "The good Lord helps those who help themselves," means that each of us must do our share to keep out that which would be injurious to us and our health. Many of our boys and girls work indoors for long hours; they naturally believe that the labor which they perform is ample exercise for all purposes, but they fail to grasp the real meaning of the word exercise.

City dwellers as a general rule, do not look as healthy as the inhabitants of the country districts, yet no one who pretends to know aught of the country worker will advance the idea that they do less labor than city folks. The city worker, who has a mile or two to go to his employment, waits on the corner for the street car or a "jitney" to take him to work; the idea of walking those one or two miles seldom meets with his approval, for he concludes that the task of walking that distance would deprive him of just that amount of time and energy. In that view of matters the city worker makes a decided mistake, for, according to every authority which assumes to advise mankind on how to keep healthy, walking is one of the main standbys, in fact, they regard walking as a necessary recreation, and physical instructors even go farther than the medical profession and urge all workers to take brisk walks every day if they desire to continue enjoying the best of health.

Take our allied trades for an example; not one of our members but what are required to be on their feet for anywhere from eight to ten and some of them more, hours each working day. They naturally conclude that they have had a sufficiency of pedestrianism to last them until they are due to come on watch the following day. That is an error easy to fall into, and one which is reaping its victims by the hundreds. The foot work which we do in our daily labor is work, and there are no "ifs" or "ands" about it; therefore being work, we think that further foot work on the outside can not, by the greatest stretch of one's imagination, be classed as healthful recreation. But there is a difference and a very wide one which the writer will attempt to show. While working at the trade we are housed up in an atmosphere laden with the smell of food or drink in all periods of preparation or serving, while it can hardly be classed as unhealthful, yet it is not absolutely pure air which they breathe, this too, in spite of appliances used in many houses to cool or change the air and despite the claims of makers of such appliances that they make sanitation a foregone conclusion. Workers at our trades unconsciously absorb all the gases and thus make themselves less immune to ills which flesh is heir to. We know from experience that continuous work in such gas-laden air, bolting our food, hurrying away and all that sort of thing, undermines the constitution, lowers our resistance to attack, in fact, makes us easy victims to disease.

Here is the prescription of one of America's most famous physicians: "A full breath of fresh, spring air, a brisk walk along a grass-grown road, a plunge into the cool waters of the old swimming hole—if the water is pure and cold—or the morning shower if in the city; fresh green food as much as the appetite craves—but above all, walk, walk, and then walk in the open air."

While the referred-to medico prescribes spring air, the air of any season of the year is good if inhaled in the right manner and place, and that place is out in the open.

Get into the habit of taking a "breezer" on "shanks mare" and you will be surprised at the improvement in your physical well-being, you will not only be the better able to stand the daily grind, but will feel pleasanter over your tasks.

No man or woman who labors in our "work shops" can expect to retain good health without some measure of outdoor exercise. If you find that you are unable to devote a half hour to that suggested walk, cut it in half, use fifteen minutes, and if you do, you mark the prediction, that unless you are almost ready for the count, you will accumulate more ginger and feel better mentally and physically than if you had absorbed quarts upon quarts of so-called tonics.

Fresh air and exercise out of doors is one of the greatest recuperative agents known to mankind and that includes doctors.

Speaking of doctors reminds us of what one of the state boards of health began several years ago—the publication of a health almanac. Among the "healthograms" were some nuggets of wisdom: "An open window is better than an open grave;" "Sunshine is God's best germ-destroyer;" "Don't take medicine for sleeplessness—take a bath."

Good, robust health is a priceless possession; without good health, one is indeed poor; all the money in the world won't bring back to you what you wilfully destroy by thoughtlessness, and the possession of this world's goods to an ill man brings no happiness.

Don't waste your energy uselessly, and that is exactly what you are doing when you permit your routine of life to consist of labor and sleep without either recreation or relaxation.

One can enjoy life better, it will be all the sweeter, if they make it a practice to swallow lots of good air while taking needed and healthful exercise in the open.

Don't hurry forward the date when your friends will be bringing flowers to your bier—Old Father Time will get you soon enough, he needs no hurry-up calls.

JERE L. SULLIVAN.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

"Beyond the Rockies Lies the West"—Annual Pilgrimage to the American Federation of Labor Convention.

"What's the matter, Jere L., ain't our town good enough for you to stop at? You passed through and didn't so much as hesitate." In substance the foregoing was fired at the writer during our convention in San Francisco, Cal., last June. Some of our boys carried the impression that there was ample time to visit them, and they seemed a little bit peeved for what they imagined was an attempt to avoid them. After trying to explain matters, showing how exceedingly inconvenient visiting cities, either going or returning from our own convention would prove, my friends were not exactly satisfied, and it was only after promising several that a visit would be made during my trip to San Francisco that they let up. But to make the invitation stronger, they said, "Come to our town, Old Scout; bring your family along, and we will be glad to see you. And we will try to make your visit a pleasant one."

In the language of President Gompers, "Agreed to." That invitation was taken hook, line and sinker. Consequently my wife, daughter and myself left our headquarters city on October 18, arriving at St. Louis, Mo., the next day. At the station Sister Louise Kane and Brother Weiseman, representing the Local Joint Executive Board, saluted us, bade us welcome to the Mound City, and forthwith escorted us to the Majestic Hotel at Eleventh and Pine. The Sullivan family acquired the habit of carrying their appetites along with them, consequently we broke our fast soon after arrival. About that time Bros. Fay Huddleston, Herman Lange, J. Scully, Charles Baird and Conrad Schott joined us. A confab, lasting an hour resulted, after which we called on former business agent of Local 51 George Miller, who is now in business for himself. We spent the greater part of the next few hours in renewing acquaintances with the members of our locals. We have declared time and time again that our members, no matter where located, are great boosters for their respective cities. St. Louisians, members of our locals, are no exception to the rule. They know that they possess a wonderful city, and are willing to show it. Two splendid specimens of the auto family, driven by Ed. Neighbors and Lee Kueser, conveyed us through the business section of the city, thence out to the environs, and a stop at one of the many beauty spots created under the direction of August Busch, and known as Grant's Farm. The employees' club rooms and quarters, the stables, garage, and finally the very extensive collection of prize-winning horses, which, by the way, Ed. Neighbors takes special delight in showing for if ever a man loved fine horse flesh and knows it when he sees it, that man is Ed. Neighbors. I made an error when I said "finally the horses," for it took us many minutes to visit other parts of the farm, where some very classy dogs and blooded stock brought forth "ohs" and "ahs" from every member of our party. Mr. August Busch certainly has a fine discrimination; he knows what is what, and the best is his invariable selection. His willingness to allow non-possessors to enjoy his splendid grounds and gate at his excellent collection of thoroughbred animals mark him as a worthy successor to his sire.

From the Grant Farm we rode for several miles into the country, and on the return trip stopped at Sunset Inn, where we feasted our eyes on another one of Mr. Busch's edifices and enjoyed the hospitality to the extent of a light lunch and some of that amber fluid which has been told of in story and song. Once more we took to the "flyers" and enjoyed some more of the beauties surrounding St. Louis. Another stop at Busch's Garden and some more "eats" and drinks, after which we returned to the Majestic to prepare for the joint meeting of members of all of our locals, which meeting was held in Local 51's fine hall. Bro. Herman Lange, president of the Local Joint Executive Board presided, and with appropriate felicitations introduced the writer to a nicely-filled hall full of our members. After a somewhat extended address, during which the obstacles confronting our membership were given attention, suggestions were offered, which the writer feels convinced should be given a good fair trial.

St. Louis is suffering from a few tactical errors, made no doubt with the expectation that good would accrue therefrom, but it is my conviction that the magnificent generalship which made the Mound City a leader years ago will reappear, and when it does you can watch St. Louis move forward and all together, the one and only way to lasting success.

At the conclusion of my address Presiding Officer Lange called on "Fireman" Conroy, the mascot of Local 51, to address the meeting, which he did in characteristic vigor and style. Brother Conroy makes a cracking good trade union talk, and was in fine fettle on this occasion.

On Wednesday the 20th, chaperoned by Brothers Weiseman, Huddleston and Baird, we drove to Belleville to pay our respects to the boys of Local 117; we devoted a good portion of the day in Belleville and returned to St. Louis in time to join a theater party as the guests of the local joint executive board.

Wednesday, while visiting the boys of Local 117, my wife and daughter were the guests of Sister Louise Kane of Local 249, and C. H. Hinrichs of the Wm. J. Lemp Brewing Company sales department at a lunch, which they appreciated very much.

Thursday, the 21st, under the guiding hands of Brothers Baird and Huddleston, we invaded the domain of Local 332 and discovered Brother Hunter Keith, the hustling spirit of that local, busy as usual. After a general all-around discussion of trade conditions and the outlook for the future, we adjourned to the home of Johnny Boyd, one of the old war horses of Local 332, who has been confined to his home for several months on account of illness. Johnny is trying to take his enforced retirement as philosophically as possible and has by no means given up hope of getting back into the busy world of work in the very near future. If courage and the splendid care of Mrs. Boyd and Miss Boyd, Johnny's sister, won't put Johnny back on his feet in tip top shape before long we shall be surprised. The remainder of our day was devoted to visiting the members of Local 332, who seem to be enjoying fine conditions and steady employment.

We returned to St. Louis, where a number of our members joined us in a good, old-fashioned conference concerning plans and program to make the Mound City one of if not the best organized cities in America. While thus engaged, the best two-thirds of the Sullivan family were shown some of the historical land-marks, Sister Louise Kane and Mr. Hinrichs doing the honors.

We discovered that the local joint executive board of St. Louis meant to care for us every moment of our stay, in fact, had we accepted all of the good things which they had mapped out for us we would have been there until all the time allotted to our trip had been used up. The representatives of the local joint executive board seemed reluctant to bid us adieu, but finally brought us to the depot, where we began our trip to Kansas City.

The Sullivan family wishes to sincerely thank our boys and girls of St. Louis for courtesies and entertainment, which shall not fade from memory in a hurry.

Our allied crafts in the Mound City are getting closer and closer—they are chucking overboard every vestige of discontent—the watch word is "get together;" and the best part of the whole arrangements being perfected is that they mean to make good. Personally, I had the pleasure of meeting many of the old guard, men who have a continuous membership record which is an honor that they prize highly, and my one regret is that space limitations prevent more extended comment and appreciation.

This series of observations could be extended to considerable length by the insertion of names of our boys and girls whom we met. We trust they will forgive us for trying to make our comments brief.

Arrived at Kansas City at 10 p. m., Friday. Sister Sarah Greene and Brothers Joe Franklin and Mike Finan discovered us as we emerged into the waiting room of the splendid new union station. After the usual, "you're looking well," and all that sort of thing, which indicates "welcome to our city," we started for the Hotel Mercer. Until a late hour we chatted interestingly about the local trade situation.

Saturday, October 23, under the chaperonage of Brothers E. L. Hiles and Joe Franklin, the extensive boulevard system of Kansas City was tested by a three-hour ride. Kansas City has ample reason to feel proud of its parks, boulevards and play-grounds, all of which are an asset really worth while. Another municipal feature and one which is being extended, are the public bath houses. Several are in operation and more in process of construction.

Kansas City has a magnificent Labor Temple, one which speaks volumes for the labor movement. During our brief visit, we dropped in at the headquarters of all our locals and met quite a number of our members, all of whom seemed to be enjoying fairly prosperous times. Our girls in Kansas City are showing to the public a brand of aggressive trades unionism which commands attention and respect. Picket duty requires Spartan courage, and that is exactly what our girls possess and are putting into their daily effort. The employers have tried almost every scheme which they could devise to whip our girls, but so far have failed. On the day of our visit the hearing on an injunction case was heard; our folks aver that they expect favorable action from the court.

After spending practically a week in Missouri, it strikes me that there is a strident, vigorous note being struck. Our boys and girls appear to have laid aside their "Oh, what's the use" attitude, and in its stead there appears to be a real spirit of determination. A sure enough "we are going to grow and win" feeling among officers and members; they seem to have reached that point in their progress where they propose to make tangible the dreams of the recent past.

In a few words, as I see it, they are doing a whole lot of thinking, and once you start people to thinking, you have them ready to act.

Wishing all of our members Thanksgiving greetings, I remain,

Fraternally yours,

JERE L. SULLIVAN.

TAKING HIS MEASURE.

Over in the good State of Illinois there is now and has been quite a campaign going on, on the "WET" and "DRY" question. At a recent meeting in the town of Wheaton an embryo preacher, probably in the pay of the Anti-Saloon League of that State was spending a week-end, and on the Sabbath succeeded in being called on at one of the local churches to tell the brethren how the "Army of the Lord" was making the agents of the evil one hunt their hiding places in the city of Chicago. Getting warmed up to his task and holding a clipping from THE MIXER AND SERVER in his hand, declared that an item which we printed several months ago relative to the frightful effects of booze on iron in the State of Maine, was a criminal falsehood and originated with the editor of the THE MIXER AND SERVER; that there was no such thing as "booze" sold in the State of Maine notwithstanding all the allegations to the contrary printed in the so-called liquor-influenced publications. As a general thing we find better use for our time than attempting to chase to earth every nasty little accusation such as near sky pilots are accustomed to hurling to the poor dupes who permit them to infest the ministry, and from whom they manage somehow to extract fairly good compensation and a better living than the average attendant at their so-called "houses of worship" enjoy. In the present instance we are fortunate in having the original article from which excerpts were taken, and we herewith reproduce same and give credit to the publication which printed it in its columns—the New York World. The article was printed in the Sunday World of June 28, 1914, and reads in full as follows:

MAINE "BOOZE" TURNS AN IRON TUB BLUE.

Queer Stuff They Turn Out in Prohibition State, But Natives Thrive On It.

Bangor, Me., June 27, 1914.—Over in Portland they have produced a new brand of Prohibition whisky. The other day the sheriff's deputies seized what they supposed to be tubful of whisky, the contents of a five-gallon keg having been poured into a galvanized iron washtub for the purpose of dilution and some other things added to sharpen the taste.

The stuff turned the iron sides of the tub a bright blue. Floating around in the liquor were several corks and a broken cigar box, while at the bottom was a sediment of plain dirt.

It is said that Portland topers have been revelling in this sort of stuff for years. Tobacco leaves, prune juice, red and black pepper, oak and hemlock bark, molasses and alcohol are the ingredients commonly used, but the proportions vary in different parts of the dry district to suit local tastes.

Usually the quality of the liquor is judged by the "bite" of it. The hotter the better. A drink of first class, aged whisky would be ridiculed in most parts of Maine as a wishy-washy beverage fit only for mollycoddles. The Down East "soak" wants something that stings and burns all the way, and usually he gets it—single drink, warm from the bottle-holder's flask, 10 cents; half pint, 35 cents; pint, 60 cents to 75, according to circumstances; "quart," which is a "long-necked" containing about three half-pints, $1.50 to $2, the latter price being charged in drug stores for stuff that costs the dealer about 48 to 52 cents, but which is handsomely labeled and is represented, with many a mysterious nod and wink, as a little "good stuff that was intended for a private party who didn't call for it." Very many of the so-called drug stores in Maine do not make enough money on drugs to pay for their telephone service, but they make up bravely on the "private stock" that yields 300 per cent profit.

A druggist in one of Maine's larger towns says that within the last ten years he has been selling an ever-increasing quantity of whisky and gin to women—many of the customers being persons who pose as "temperance" advocates and were never suspected of bibulous tendencies. It is notorious that in "dry" towns the working people are spending more and more of their earnings for bottled whisky, chiefly patronizing the drug stores, and always taking home a "long-necked" on Saturday night.

The prohibitionists rave about the "open saloon," but seldom or never have anything to say about the handsomely fitted up drug store, which runs seven days a week and late at night, with the whisky and "dope" trade its chief dependence.—New York World, Sunday, June, 28, 1914.

IT IS SAID THAT—

The juice of a fresh onion, applied with a clean brush to gilt frames, not only cleans the frames, but acts as a "discourager" to flies. Grate the onion to obtain the juice.

GATE RECEIPTS.

The Big Ditch has turned into the treasury of Uncle Sam $4,000,000 in tolls since it was opened in May last year. If the Panama Canal, so early in its career, has done so well, what will be the result when real shipping is taken care of?

Section 141. All official announcements printed on the Official Pages of the Mixer and Server shall be read at the first meeting after the journal has been received by the Secretary and a copy posted at the local union headquarters for the benefit of all those who may have been absent from meetings.

We have repeatedly cautioned the officers and members of our local unions against the time-wasting practice of asking the General Secretary-Treasurer for funds to help them out during times of stress or strife, but it would seem that, notwithstanding our efforts, there are some of our members who pretend to carry the impression that there are no other requirements than advising headquarters that they NEED FUNDS and that we should make immediate remittance by return mail.

For the benefit of ALL our members, the following brief recital is offered, so that they may understand and appreciate what are the necessary steps to secure consideration from the General Executive Board, the only authority to make appropriations from the funds of our International Union excepting the general conventions when in session.

Section 157, covering strikes, reads as follows:

"Section 157. To the end that strikes may be less frequent and more effective, this Union will render financial support only to such strikes as have received the sanction of the General Executive Board before being ordered. This section shall not be construed to deprive any local union of the right to strike whenever they feel their interests can only be served by such course; provided that any local union ordering such strike does so entirely upon its own resources and risk, and has no claim upon the General Union for financial aid or upon other branches for financial or sympathetic strike support; and further provided, that no member of this Union be permitted to accept employment in the department where such a strike exists."

If your local expects trouble and the necessity of calling a strike seems necessary to win, the first step to take is to set forth in such manner as can be easily grasped all the facts leading up to the step which your local union contemplates taking. Twenty (20) copies, preferably type-written, must be forwarded to headquarters. The facts, plainly set forth, should include the information as to the number of persons which will be involved, and the amount of money which the local union solicits from the Defense Fund, whether the establishment was under contract previously, copy of the wage schedule in operation, and copy of the new schedule and agreement which the union desires to put in operation. When all of the "documents" are on hand at the General Office, the General Secretary-Treasurer mails two copies of the application and documents in connection with the case to each member of the General Executive Board. The members of the General Executive Board retain one set of the documents on file, returning the other set with their vote, AYE or NAY, and their reasons for so voting to the General Office. Inasmuch as the members of the General Executive Board are located quite some distance from the General Office, it naturally requires time to reach them and time to obtain their response and vote, and it seldom happens that any proposal submitted to them can be completed short of ten days to a fortnight; and until the majority of the members of the General Executive Board have returned their vote, the General Secretary-Treasurer is unable to advise interested local unions whether or not their application has been approved or disapproved. It has frequently happened that application for funds has been made by local unions after they have declared strikes, and occasionally the General Executive Board approves their petition for funds and authorizes the General Secretary-Treasurer to make remittances to a limited extent; but it is a safe conclusion to reach that the best method for any local to employ is to seek approval of their action FIRST, and then they are fully within the law and entitled to such financial aid as their case warrants and the General Executive Board may set aside for their use.

The General Secretary-Treasurer is only ONE member of the General Executive Board. He is NOT the whole Board. His one vote on any proposition equals one vote cast by any of his colleagues on the General Executive Board, no more and no less. Therefore, it is unreasonable to expect him to act independently and without authority of his co-members on the General Executive Board.

WANTED—INFORMATION.

Information is wanted concerning Edward Bauer, who was last heard from in Chicago, Ill. He left his home in Sandusky, Ohio about sixteen years ago and his aged father and mother are very anxious to hear from him. Any information in regard to his whereabouts will be greatly appreciated by his brother, William Bauer, 538 Ellicott st., Buffalo, N.Y. Digitized by Google

INFORMATION WANTED.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I would be pleased to find out the whereabouts of Ed. Vaughan, formerly of Local 14 of Denver, Colo., and also of Local 52 of Colorado Springs. If any one acquainted with this brother would please send his address to Dallas, Texas, I would be very much pleased to hear from them.

Yours fraternally,

Box 1365, Dallas, Texas.

New Counterfeit $10 Silver Silver Certificate.

Treasury Department, Washington, Office of the Secretary, October 23, 1915.

Series of 1908; check letter A; face plate number 79; Gabe E. Parker, Registrar of the Treasury; John Burke, Treasurer of the United States; portrait of Hendricks.

This counterfeit is apparently printed from photo-process plates on two pieces of paper, between which ink lines have been made to imitate the silk fiber of the genuine. The paper feels stiff and is brittle, owing no doubt to the paste used in putting the two pieces together. The number of the specimen at hand is D929621 and looks as though it were made by hand, as does the large blue X with superimposed TEN on left end face of note. The face of the note is not black, as is the genuine, but has a reddish tint

This note should be readily detected.

W. J. FLYNN,

Chief, Secret Service Division

SEPTEMBER 23, 1915.

Editor The Mixer and Server:

DEAR SIR—Years of strife and agitation seem to be the aftermath of prohibition wherever it is tried. In whatever direction we turn, the story is the same.

After over a half century of so-called prohibition, Maine has periodic outbursts of protest over flagrant disregard of her liquor laws. Just a month or two back, at a public hearing at Augusta, granted to the Rev. Wilbur F. Berry, Secretary of the Maine Civic League, the Governor of the State confessed his inability to enforce the prohibitory law in sections where it is openly violated.

In Georgia, where there has been mock prohibition for nearly eight years, the Legislature adjourned last month after having frittered away fifty days of valuable time upon proposed changes in the liquor laws. Practically no time was given to important matters crying for attention, and an extra session, at big expense, must now be called to pass a necessary appropriation bill.

Alabama adopted a prohibition law, effective last July 1, but already Anti-Saloon leaders are crying that it is not having the expected results. Commenting on the proposals of one of them, the Birmingham News says:

"The new (liquor) laws have not been in operation two months, and yet one of their foremost champions admits not only their virtual failure, but also the harm they are doing. But he believes that the way to remedy the trouble is with more law, with further attempts to repress, regulate and control appetites. Presently he or others will be complaining that thousands of people are debauching themselves with coffee-pot stills on their own premises."

Tennessee has had six years of so-called prohibition and just that many years of agitation, bickering, strife and bloodshed. After a continuous upheaval in her social and political life, after dark days that have led the State and her chief city into financial difficulties that have resulted in bankruptcy for the former, liquor is still drunk in the same or even greater quantities through her length and breadth.

Mississippi has been classed as a prohibition State since 1908, and yet in this year, 1915, we find a solon proposing a resolution to expel any member who comes to her State Capitol intoxicated!

In Oregon, where the amendment has not yet gone into effect, a prohibition leader is already speaking in churches and urging drastic changes in the untried legislation drawn up at behest of the Anti-Saloon League. He charges it will "transfer the saloon to the homes."

In Arizona, drastic enforcement of the amendment in effect since January 1, 1915, has already led to demands that the law be construed more liberally, or, if upheld by the courts, that it be amended. Among those urging the more liberal construction is A. R. Bucknam, Secretary of the Temperance Federation of Arizona, who worked effectively for the measure.

Wherever one investigates the lesson is the same. Peace and content never come with laws that invade the house and try to prescribe what man may or may not eat or drink.

Very truly yours,

T. M. GILMORE,
President National Model License League

ROCKEFELLER'S "UNION."

So Mr. Rockefeller has formed a union—a union of his employees of his Colorado Fuel and Iron Company—and perhaps imagines that he has solved the problem of just relations between himself and his employes. But with all his wealth and all his brains, and the brains that he could buy and suborn, he has missed his mark. Imagine an organization of miners formed by the richest man in the world, who employs its members. What influence can such a pseudo union have to insist upon the remedying of a grievous wrong or the attainment of a real right? And what about the representatives of the men "sitting around the table?" with Mr. Rockefeller and his angelic representatives out in Colorado. Should the miners' spokesmen have the temerity of insistence in the rightful demands of the miners?

The miners employed by the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company, of which Mr. Rockefeller is the head, have been whipped by means of atrocious brutality and hunger into submission back to the mines. And these miners have been formed into a 'union' by Mr. Rockefeller's benevolent altruism. But he has organized them and for that, at any rate, labor is truly grateful for when men come together to discuss, even in the most cursory way, their rights and their interests and welfare, there is afforded the splendid field for development and opportunity.

After what Mr. Rockefeller has done, that is to organize a "union" of miners in Colorado, he should carry his benevolent and practical purpose into full execution in all his varied industries and not wait until another massacre, the like of which occurred at Ludlow, should break out at one of his other industrial institutions. Do not stop at Colorado, Organize Rockefeller!—PRESIDENT GOMPERS.

PRESIDENT'S PAGE

BUFFALO, N. Y., October 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I desire to call to the attention of our local unions the fact that the Eighteenth General Convention adopted the following law:

"Section 64b. It is compulsory for all local unions to make an audit of their books quarterly (quarters ending March 31st, June 30th, September 30th, and December 31st), and to file a copy of the said audit with the general president within thirty days after the expiration of each quarter."

A number of local unions have failed to file their reports to day and it is urged that these reports be filed, in order that they can be properly recorded.

During the month I attended the convention of the Ohio State Federation of Labor, held in the city of Mansfield, Ohio. The following delegates were there representing our local unions and central bodies in that State: Thomas S. Farrell, representing the Cleveland Federation of Labor; Charles Bente, Local 68; Ed A. Whissemore, A. F. Just and Geo. Fitzpatrick, Local 106; Kitty Donnelly and Sadie McEachern, Local 107; Michael Goldsmith, Local 108; Arthur Burns, Local 169; Ed McEachern, Local 167; H. W. Newcomb, Local 170; Ralph Bowers, Local 732; Charles Trimmer, Local 852; William McCoy, Local 423; Theo. McKenna, Local 412; Geo. Flynn, Henry Baum and Harry Overmeyer, Local 216; Jas. A. Dolan and J. J. Graney, Local 212; J. F. Eichorn, Local 222; L. C. Herder, Local 429; Charles Moore, Local 499; Harry Harmon, Local 252; Louis Isle, Local 397, and Nida R. Pangle, Local 335; twenty-five delegates representing nineteen locals and one delegate representing a central body. These delegates also represented their organizations at the convention of the Ohio Labor Home Rule League and the Ohio State Conference Board, which were held prior to the opening of the Federation convention. A number of matters of urgent and vital interest to our members in Ohio were discussed and approved of and it is to be regretted that all of our local unions were not represented, as much good emanated therefrom.

At this writing our organizations in the State of Ohio are passing through a most strenuous campaign, fighting against the fanatical efforts to place their State in the dry column, and, while at this writing they are in the midst of the fight, every indication points to a great victory for our cause, and by the time this letter reaches our members we can well congratulate our boys and girls in that State, who took an active interest in the fight, for the noble work that they did.

Brother John J. Graney was honored by re-election to the office of president of the Labor Home Rule League; he is a very energetic and aggressive worker and is devoting much time and labor in endeavoring to keep our people interested and much credit for our success is due to his efforts.

Brother Thomas Farrell, our old reliable, was also honored by being re-elected to the office of first vice-president of the State Federation, which office he has held for several terms, with honor and credit to himself and the men and women that he represents.

The State Federation, by a unanimous vote, went on record in most emphatic terms, as being opposed to local or county option or prohibition in any of its disguises.

Our local unions should become more active in the work of their central bodies and state federations and much more good will be accomplished for their local unions and the cause that they are fighting for; without such activity a local union becomes stagnant and loses its aggressiveness.

During my stay in Ohio, I dropped off at Cleveland and visited the various headquarters of our local unions and found our boys and girls enjoying fairly good prosperity; they all work in harmony in that city and the results show what that gospel brings forth.

My expense account for the month is as follows:

To Cleveland	$ 4 60
Pullman	2 00
To Mansfield and return.....	3 10
To Buffalo	4 60
Chair car	90
Telegrams, car fare and checking.....	1 52
Typewriter ribbon	75
Postage	6 00
Traveling expenses	12 00
Total	$35 47

Respectfully submitted,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

MR. CHAS. HEINZ, Secretary, Local 316, Alamosa, Colorado:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of the 23d, wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"Local 316 gave a picnic and on account of bad weather and exceedingly bad roads it was not a success. The picnic was sanctioned by the unanimous vote of the members present at the meeting, and in case of a loss it was to be borne by the local and not by an assessment on the members. Some of the members that did not attend that meeting now contend that the loss should be borne by the members that attended that meeting and not the local. Is their contention correct, or should the local stand the loss?"

The local union having arranged for the picnic and provided a means by which any losses should be met in the event that there were any, makes that action on the part of the local binding on all of the members of the local union, whether they were in attendance at that meeting or not. (See Decision No. 624.)

It is my judgment that the local union, having taken the action stated above, should bear whatever financial losses that were incurred. With greetings,

Yours fraternally,
EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

MR. WILLIAM J. GUEST, Secretary, Local 285, No. 285 Weybosset street, Providence, R. I.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me the protest of Brother John Thompson against the action of Local 285, taken through their executive board, in directing the financial secretary of said local union to refuse to accept any further dues from him.

I have a statement from the secretary of Local 285, setting forth the reasons for taking the said action, which in the interest of Local 285 I will refrain from inserting.

Every person gaining legal membership into this International Union is guaranteed certain rights and privileges which are accorded him by the constitution of our International Union and every local union working under a charter, granted by this International Union, is bound to act in accordance therewith. The constitution of the International Union guarantees every member a right to protect his membership, and if he should in any manner or form violate any of the laws or regulations of the International Union or local unions, other than those fully set forth in the International Union constitution, he is entitled to the rights accorded him in Sections 169 and 170 of the International Union constitution.

Brother Thompson, in accordance with the statement submitted, was not accorded his full right to protect his membership, and, without considering the merit of his case, basing my conclusion entirely upon the rights granted every member under the constitution, I do hereby sustain his protest and do direct Local 285 to accept his dues as a member of this International Union (money order for three months' dues accepted in escrow by this office is herewith enclosed) until such time as the local union may, by its action and in accordance with the International constitution, legally sever his connection with said local union.

I am directing Brother Thompson to present his membership book to you as financial secretary of Local 285, to have due stamps placed therein for the months of July, August and September, 1915, and you are directed, as secretary of Local 285, to place said stamps in the said book upon its presentation; a refusal on your part to do so, will warrant this office in proceeding against Local 285 in accordance with Section 102 (new constitution). With greetings,

Yours fraternally,
EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 646.

MR. GEORGE C. WIESEMANN, Secretary, Local 51, No. 3204 Lucas avenue, St. Louis, Mo.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me your request for a decision on the legality of the election of Brother Charles E. Sullivan to the office of trustee in Local 51. It is held that his election was illegal on the grounds that he was a suspended member and did not become reinstated until the day of election, June 20, 1915.

I addressed Brother Charles E. Sullivan, under date of September 2, for a statement, but he has not seen fit to respond.

In accordance with the statements submitted, I find that on June 20, 1915, Brother Sullivan paid his dues for the months of April, May and June, 1915, which made him twenty days over the two calendar months, and in accordance with our International law, under suspension from the first day of June until his reinstatement on the 20th day of said month.

I find that the by-laws of Local 51 provide for the nomination of officers at the first regular meeting in June and that any member in good standing is eligible to be a candidate; it further qualifies that a member to be entitled to hold an elective office must be in good standing and an active member of said local for one year.

Therefore, in accordance with the evidence submitted, Brother Charles E. Sullivan was not a good standing member of Local 51 at the time of his nomination for the office of trustee and not entitled to have his name considered for said office, hence he not being an active member at the time of his nomination, the said nomination and his election later were illegal and I do so declare it. Local 51 is directed to proceed in regular form to nominate and elect an active member to said office. With greetings.

Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

MR. JERE L. SULLIVAN, General Secretary, Commercial Tribune Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have been requested to define the proper procedure to follow in the case of an appeal from the decision of the general president to the general executive board.

Appeals may be taken from the decision of the general president in accordance with Section 167. In order that an appeal to the general executive board may receive prompt consideration, it is necessary that duplicate copies (typewriter preferred) be mailed to the General Secretary for each member of the board (twenty copies in all); one copy for them to retain on file and the other to return with their vote recorded thereon. With greetings,

Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 648.

October 6, 1915.

MR. GEORGE WIESEMANN, Secretary, Local 51, No. 3204 Lucas avenue, St. Louis, Mo.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—In compliance with my advice of recent date, I am rendering the following decision:

Our laws permit a local union to adopt laws, rules and regulations for the guidance of their members, providing that such laws, rules and regulations do not conflict with the laws in the constitution of the International Union. It is therefore permissible for a local union to add to its by-laws a clause which would read substantially as follows: "No member of this local union is entitled to serve as an officer of this local union unless actually employed as a bartender or working as an officer of the craft."

It is understood, however, that the above must be a part of the by-laws of a local union and approved by this office, and unless a local union has same in operation before the day set for nominations, it can not be enforced against probable nominees. With greetings,

Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 649.

October 6, 1915.

MR. E. O. ENLOW, 1406 Corsicana street, Dallas, Texas:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me your appeal from the decision of the L. J. E. B. of Dallas, which sustained the action of Local 547 in directing that you refund certain moneys within thirty days or stand suspended from membership. After a careful study of all the evidence submitted, I find that the charges filed against you were proceeded with in accordance with our laws and that the evidence submitted warranted the action taken by the local union. Your appeal is therefore denied.

Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 650.

October 14, 1915.

MR. JOE KRESS, Secretary, Local 224, No. 262 E. Twenty-sixth street, Erie, Pa.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me the protest of Local 224 against the membership of Scott Lininger, who was elected and initiated to membership by Local 41, in violation of Section 11.

In a letter received from Mr. Lininger, he submits the following statement: That he arrived in San Francisco the latter part of March, 1915, went to work on the 20th day of April, made application on the 22d day of April and became a member on May 10, 1915.

In a letter received from the secretary of Local 41, under date of October 6, 1915, he submits the following: Mr. Lininger came to the office and made application on the 4th day of May, stating that he had a position to go to and wanted to be right before starting; he stated that he was from Erie, Pa., and I told him that the consent of Local 224 would be necessary. I sent a letter to the secretary of Local 224 and received no reply; we then agreed to accept him, he agreeing to take his chances on Local 224 protesting against his membership.

In consideration of the above statements, the protest of Local 224 is sustained, and I do hereby cancel the membership of the said Scott Lin-inger in this International Union, and do further declare the traveling card issued to him by Local 41 null and void. Local 41 is requested to make note of this cancellation on their next monthly report to the International Union. With greetings,

Fraternally yours,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 651.

October 14, 1915.

MR. W. C. DUNNING, Secretary, Local 820, No. 839 W. Work street, Sheridan, Wyo.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me the correspondence covering the status of the membership of Brother W. L. Rush. I find that after leaving the jurisdiction of Local 820 with a traveling card, that he deposited the same with Local 498, but through the neglect of the secretary at that time, the coupon was not returned in accordance with the law, hence while the said W. L. Rush was a good standing member of Local 498, on account of the failure of the coupon of his traveling card to reach Local 820, the said Local 820 suspended him from membership.

Brother W. L. Rush, having deposited his traveling card in accordance with our laws, can not be held responsible for the neglect of the secretary to return the coupon; therefore, the action of Local 820 in suspending him from membership is annulled. With greetings,

Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 652.

October 16, 1915.

MR. J. W. BROOKS, Secretary, Local 870, No. 955 Reynolds street, Augusta, Ga.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of the 13th, wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"There is a former member of former Local 828 here; he made application for membership; we took the matter up with the general office and they advised us that he would have to return the amount of money that he received from Local 828 at the time that they disbanded, in addition to the reinstatement fee. We advised the former member of the directions received from the general office and he refused to pay. Since then he claims that he has bought a half interest in the establishment. His name does not appear upon the license, nor can he show any papers sustaining his contention. Should he be recognized as a proprietor and allowed to work under our label?"

If this man were a member of the firm and part owner of the establishment he is working in, the said firm would not be entitled to the use of our label until such time as he would reinstate himself to membership. However, there is no evidence to show that he is a member of the firm, hence he is not entitled to work at our craft in any establishment displaying our label, and should the employer of the establishment referred to insist upon retaining him in his employ, our label should be removed. With greetings,

Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 653.

October 20, 1915.

MR. FRED MADILL, Secretary, Local 320, 326 Hulett Street, Schenectady, N. Y.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have before me the request of Local 320 for a decision on the claim of Brother John J. Henley.

Brother Henley bases his claim on the fact that the local union at a meeting held May 2, 1915, passed a motion to send a delegate to the I. U. Convention, and appropriated the sum of $150.00 to defray his expenses, and he was duly selected as such delegate, hence entitled to the amount appropriated.

The local union holds that while the aforesaid facts are true, that at a special meeting, held May 30, 1915, a motion was made and carried that the appropriation set aside at the meeting of May 2d to send a delegate to the I. U. Convention was illegal.

Brother Henley contends that as the call for the special meeting did not specify what business was to be transacted at the said meeting that any and all business transacted at the said meeting was null and void, and the action of May 2d remained in full force.

On the question of the legality of the vote taken at the meeting of May 2d, I desire to refer you to Decision No. 624.

On the question of the legality of the action taken at the special meeting held May 30, 1915, the by-laws of Local 320 covering special meetings read as follows:

"Art. 5, Sec. 2. The President with the consent in writing of seven members in good standing may call a special meeting, STATING THE PURPOSE OF SAID MEETING, and NO business shall be transacted except that for which the meeting was convened."

Brother Henley submitted the card that was sent out to the members for this special meeting, and there appears nothing on said notice which would indicate in any manner or form what business, if any, was to be transacted at the said meeting, and under the laws of the local union governing special meetings the members assembled at said special meeting had no legal right to transact any business of a legislative character.

Therefore, the action taken at the said special meeting, held May 30, 1915, was not in keeping with the laws of the local union, hence null and void, and the action taken at the meeting of May 2d remains in full force, and the local union is in honor bound to pay said claim.

With greetings,

Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

WAR VETERANS REFUSE TO LINE UP BEHIND FIGHT FOR NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

Washington, October 2.—Efforts to line up the veterans of the Grand Army for national prohibition have failed. Following the adjournment of the National Encampment, the Anti-Saloon League's Registration Bureau has been dismantled and the registration book has been put away in the archives of the Anti-Saloon League of America.

J. H. Larimore, editor of the National Daily, official organ of the Anti-Saloon League of America, published at Westerville, O., came to Washington to take charge of a movement to get the veterans committed on national prohibition.

When the books closed thirty veterans had registered, including twelve from Ohio and none from Indiana.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

What a sad awakening for the fanatical aggregation known as the Anti-Saloon League. There were thirty thousand veterans in the parade which President Wilson reviewed, and it is a foregone conclusion that there were several thousands more of the old soldiers who would have gladly participated and marched if they had been able to do so. Thirty out of thirty thousand, an average of one signer to each one thousand veterans. The Grand Army of the Republic and the men who constitute that splendid organization tramped too many miles and withstood too many hardships during the Civil War to ever swallow any bait which even remotely would deprive their fellow man of any of the liberties which their flag truly represents. Our hats off to the veterans. They are getting well along in years and their numbers are decreasing, but those who are still with us have lost none of that good common sense which they possessed during the years of '61 to '65.

A PRECEDENT-CREATING SITUATION.

In the November, 1914, elections the State of Ohio offered to the student of political effort and affairs one of the most unusual lessons of real broadmindedness which we doubt has ever been duplicated since Ohio was organized as a commonwealth. The nominee for governor on one of the party tickets was an avowed DRY advocate, but had stated that, if elected, he would endeavor to carry out the wishes of the majority. That may have been his intention, but close observers of the situation in the Buckeye State can not help but note that wherever the WETS are concerned and the DRYs seeking an advantage, the latter usually get a "shade," and profit greatly thereby.

Probably the governor overlooks the important fact that, if the voters could and did distinguish between the wet and dry question, taking the aspirant for governor's word as something to be depended upon, that he would be duly bound by his declaration and tote clean with all concerned. Had the voters of Ohio been governed by their views on the WET and DRY propositions, the former governor would have been re-elected with an overwhelming majority, and the present incumbent would not have the reins of office in hand, nor be able to cause many voters to sincerely regret their acceptance of his avowals.

Liberal voters will ultimately wake up and act in accordance with their convictions, and no part of same will permit them to repeat the mistake of electing to office candidates professedly opposed to what is generally termed personal liberty. The situation is a precedent-creating one, yet will hardly merit the unqualified approval of those who believe they were led astray and into the camp of the opposition to liberalism.

YESTERDAY, TODAY AND TOMORROW

If yesterday has gone, it can not be brought back.

Yesterday was today for the full twenty-four hours to the man who has the "Do-It-Now Habit." What he decided on doing today while yesterday was here, he accomplished; he has no regrets on the score of promptness.

Tomorrow never comes. If you are due to pay dues which are due today, pay your dues today.

Dues due today are not due tomorrow, they are due today, not tomorrow, for tomorrow is another day, it is not today.

The difference between today and tomorrow, in time, may mean suspension, and suspension costs something. In a number of known cases it figured up Fifty Dollars—a Death Benefit allowance. What is your standing with your local union? Look now.

WHAT OUR ORGANIZERS ARE DOING

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., October 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month:

September 28th, presided over a well-attended meeting, which was addressed by Brothers Anderson and McGinley, also Tim Daly of the Metal Trades Department.

September 29th, at Foresters' Hall, 13th ave., N. E. and Fourth street, Organizer McGinley and President Hall of the State Federation of Labor spoke, Fred Hester of the pressmen's union acting as chairman.

September 30th, in conference with Edward E. Peck and J. H. Wellmeyer, representing the Twin City Waiters' Association, and Frank Hoffman, John P. McGinley, James H. Anderson and the undersigned, representing the H. and R. F. I. A. and B. I. L. of A. This conference brought us a trifle nearer the point at issue.

October 1st, assigned to the Van Cleve School, at which Geo. Lawson, secretary State Federation of Labor; Al Weigel of the Cigar Makers' Union, and Tim M. Daly of the Metal Trades Department, gave an excellent reason why the voters of Hennepin County should vote "No" on October 4.

October 2nd, attended meeting under the auspices of the Business Men's Educational League, held at the Auditorium, to hear the Hon. Charles Towne, a former resident of Minnesota, speak against County Option. Mr. Towne today is a resident of New York and coming that distance for the purpose in mind, brought out thousands of people to hear him. His presence certainly changed considerable votes that were intended for the Drys.

October 3rd, a heavy rain storm failed to keep a good sized crowd from the Armory in the afternoon to hear Max S. Hayes, of Cleveland, and Organizer McGinley speak. In the evening we packed the Armory for Clarence S. Darrow, of Chicago, who, as you all are aware, can bring out facts that would make any ordinary Dry take to drink before he'd get through with him.

October 4th, with every member of our allied crafts on the job from daybreak to the closing of the polls hustling the voters out of their homes, a majority vote of 9,491 was rolled up. The early returns from outside the city limits came as a distinct shock to the Anti-Saloon element, because a decisive majority was looked for from the rural voters. We rolled up a majority vote in the rural districts amounting to 800. Yes, we must admit that Brothers Harthill, Creamer, Thompson, Morgan, and a number of others representing the Trades and Labor Assembly of Minneapolis rendered the beverage industries such support that ought not to be forgotten for many a day to come. Their work in and around the various shops of Hennepin County, morning, noon and night, was very effective.

October 6th, attended the meeting of the Trades and Labor Assembly to thank that body in behalf of our local unions and our International Union for the good work they performed in the recent County Option campaign.

October 7th, attended meeting of Waiters and Waitresses' Union, Local 593.

October 12th, to St. Paul, in the interests of Cooks' Union, Local 408. Mismanagement of affairs, both from a social and organization standpoint has put Local 408 in the rut that it finds itself in, but having confidence in Secretary Murphy, who has taken the reigns in hand, we hope for a better organization in the future at the Capitol City.

October 13th, appeared before the Board of Directors of the Licensed Retail Liquor Dealers' Association of Minneapolis, in behalf of our allied crafts. Report filed with the general office.

October 14th, to St. Paul, assisted Marie A. Cory, vice-president of the State Federation of Labor in instituting Waitresses' Union, Local 639.

October 15th, attended meeting of Cooks' Union, Local 458. Same was well attended.

October 17th, attended meeting of Bartenders' Union, Local 152.

October 18th, To St. Paul, again in the interests of Cooks' Union, Local 408.

October 19th, attended meeting of Waitresses' Union, Local 630, of St. Paul. From midnight to 5:00 a. m. the following morning, attended an open meeting of the Twin City Waiters' Association. Numerous questions were placed before Organizer Anderson, Louis Harthill, of the Trades and Labor Assembly, and the writer, and being answered along such lines as means a closer affiliation in the near future. They appointed a committee of six to confer with a like number of organized labor which met October 22nd, at the headquarters of Local 152.

October 21st, attended meeting of the Trades and Labor Assembly of Minneapolis. Question of the T. C. W. A. was discussed quite freely from a progressive standpoint, and in the presence of President Whalen of this association, who happened to be a visitor, a number of delegates voiced their sentiments that it was the best thing his organization had done as it was surely organized labor that saved their jobs on October 4th.

October 22nd. In the afternoon the following committee went into session on the matter of the Twin City Waiters' Association affiliating with our International Union; Fred Hester, Bob Creamer, Lynn Thompson representing the Trades and Labor Assembly; Sam De Lappe, James H. Anderson and William B. Joyce, representing the H. and R. F. I. A. and B. I. L. of A. with William Whalen, James Burnett, Bert Fleming, Geo. Lazar, Oscar Lindgeren, John Donohue and E. Stanley, representing the Twin City Waiters' Association. In session about one hour brought out some interesting points of progress of which both sides agreed, and it was known before adjournment what the recommendation would be of the committee to their meeting that would hold a session on Sunday afternoon.

October 24th, attended meeting of Bartenders' Union, Local 152, which was well attended. This local union donated liberally to the striking metal polishers, electricians, and also to the Trades and Labor Assembly, so as to send a representative of that Central Body to the convention of the American Federation of Labor at San Francisco. Same day the Twin City Waiters' Association went on record without a dissenting voice to affiliate with our International Union by making application for a separate charter.

October 25th, applied to general secretary for a charter to the Twin City Waiters' Association. Many of these members were formally affiliated with our International Union and in accordance with Section 22-a, are not eligible to membership in any other local union, except by the consent of the local by which he was suspended or expelled. I realize a task is ahead of me to legally reinstate these former members, and I trust that in as much as Vice-President Hoffman, Organizer Anderson and the undersigned accomplished the task that was assigned to us, that our subordinate unions will see their way clear to offer us a nominal reinstatement fee to successfully handle this matter. To say what we here feel would be a nominal reinstatement fee is what Waiters' Alliance, Local Union 35 has charged; that was $2.00 with traveling card, and I want to thank Local 35 for not tying our hands.

October 26th, will attend the mass meeting of Cooks' Union, Local 408, of St. Paul this evening, and immediately thereafter visit or attend the meeting of Waitresses' Alliance, Local Union 639, in the same building. Report of same will be given in my report of next month as to what success was achieved.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Fraternally yours,

WILLIAM B. JOYCE,
International Organizer.

P. S.—The members of Local 152 showed that their heart was in the right place and what they were made of when they voted to give Vice-President Hoffman a vacation of three weeks with salary, accompanied by a $100.00 check in appreciation for the good work performed in keeping Hennepin County in the Wet column. Work of that kind from any organization usually brings forth results worth having.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., October 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—My report for the last month is as follows:

The county option election in Hennepin county, held October 4th, was one of the victorious battles that our members of the affiliated locals have benefited by. The large majority of votes in favor of retaining members of the affiliated locals of our International goes to show what an organized effort means.

Had it not been for the organized workers of the city of Minneapolis and those who came here from other parts of the country to assist in this fight, chances are that the majority of close to 10,000 for the retaining of the jobs of the toilers would have been cut down considerable, and it is not more than right that a vote of thanks be extended through the Mixer and Server to those in the labor movement, who so gallantly fought in this, one of the hardest fights of this kind known.

The names of all who helped would be impossible for me to enumerate, but everyone is included in a vote of appreciation, and it is now up to the boys and girls working in the catering industry to take the advantage of getting the conditions that they are entitled to, as everybody in the employing classes of our members knows that they must recognize the fact that the organized workers saved their business, as well as the jobs of their own.

A good many of the boys and girls of our crafts have already affiliated themselves with the respective organizations to which they should rightfully belong, and the balance are coming in as fast as they can.

The Twin City Waiters' Association came to realize also that it was best to affiliate, and an application for charter has been forwarded to the general office.

The girls working in the catering industry in the city of Saint Paul have also decided to become unionized and Brother Joyce and myself had the pleasure of instituting their local, which was practically organized by Miss Mary Corey, one of the vice-presidents of the Minnesota State Federation of Labor, while we were busy in Minneapolis fighting for the bread and butter for our members and others engaged in the beverage and catering industry. The president and secretary of the federation were also instrumental in bringing about the formation of this local and from the observation I made at the several visits that I made to that city, I think that Local 630 will make a success, and I hope that Local 408 will also wake up and get to their senses. Locals 152, 458 and 593 are progressing along nicely and through the friendship of the other organized workers of this city, I have no doubt but that it will be a 100 per cent organized set of locals.

My expenses are as follows:

Postage, $1.60; car fare, both cities, $3.40; supplies, $1.25. Total, $6.25.

Fraternally submitted,

JAS. H. ANDERSON,
Special Defense Organizer.

CHICAGO, ILL., October 28, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of October:

On the 30th, I attended the meeting of Local 863; October 3d, the meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor; the 4th, local joint board meeting; at this meeting it was suggested to form a culinary crafts council, the delegates to the different locals to bring the matter up before their respective locals. Locals 35, 865 and 484 all agreed and elected their delegates, who met and elected Bro. Ben Parker, chairman and Bro. Al Stewart, secretary. On the 5th, we again met Mr. G. Knabe but got no satisfaction. He plainly stated to us that he could never forget the "punishment" he got during the strike. The same day attended the meeting of Local 35; I also met Mr. H. Marx by appointment to discuss several items concerning the organization of his places.

October 7th, meeting of Local 865. On the 12th, Brothers Hobby, J. Brady and I met Mr. J. Vogelsang and had an interview that lasted nearly two hours. Mr. Vogelsang is the president of The Chicago Restaurant Men's Association, and as such is a very influential man. Our interview was very cordial, and I am sure that we impressed him with the necessity of organizing the culinary workers; we will meet him again as soon as the secretary of that organization returns to the city.

October 17th, attended the Chicago Federation of Labor meeting; October 18th, culinary crafts meeting, also local joint board meeting; October 19th, attended meeting of Local 35, and on the 21st that of Local 865. On the 26th I went to Milwaukee to attend the first ball of Cooks' Local 872, on special request of that local; it was the first affair given by this local and was a big success. Chicago was represented by Sister Maloney and Brothers Ebeling and Stewart. The boys of Local 872 had arranged a magnificent buffet lunch, which was admired by all present; hotel and business men of the city were in attendance which was great encouragement to the cooks; about 2,000 people were present and I hope this will prove to be a stimulant to get the non-union cooks to join Local 872.

The Hotel Wisconsin changed crews lately and put ten members out of work. Brothers Bliss, Marot and Voelker deserve all credit due them for the interest they are taking in their local. Stick to it, boys.

During the month I visited restaurants, lunch rooms and big kitchens too numerous to mention separately, and found that the opposition to organization is gradually dwindling; at first they would hardly listen to me, but now they begin to ask questions and I hope, by keeping at them, I will be able to convert them.

While in Milwaukee I met Mr. F. Zonne, president of the Minneapolis Hotel Men's Association, and had a half-hour talk with him on the Chicago situation; he was on his way to the Windy City and promised me he would use his influence with the hotel men here, which will go a long way.

My expense account for the month is as follows:

A. MARTEL,
International Organizer.

CHICAGO, ILL., October 31, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month:

I have been working under instructions from Vice-President Foster during the past month, and I recognize that the Chicago situation is, as in the past, a hard problem to solve. After several months of earnest effort on the part of our International representatives I believe that we can now see several bright spots on the horizon.

I feel as though I should not specialize at this time, but am satisfied we are making history for our International Union. During the month I have attended all meetings as far as possible.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Stationery supplies	$0 70
Local car fare	4 00
Exchange on checks.....	20
Postage and telephone.....	2 95
 Total	 $7 85

CHICAGO, ILL., October 28, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of October:

From September 28th to October 5th, general work in the loop district. In the evening of October 5th, attended waiters' meeting and had the pleasure of installing the newly elected officers, and feel safe in saying that Local 35 made no mistake in electing them.

Our third vice-president, Foster, McCarthy and myself had several conferences with the officers of the Liquor Dealers, and finally got them to send a letter to all their member advising them to have their help join our International Union. I have attended the meetings of our locals, also the local joint board, and in the last two weeks have done general work in the west end of the town, and was successful in getting Local 649 on their feet again. Vice-President Foster will no doubt give full particulars covering the situation by letter or report.

My expenses for the month are as follows:

Local car fare.....	$4 60
Telephone	1 65
Stamps and stationery.....	60
 Total	 $6 85

Yours fraternally,

ROBT. LYONS,
International Organizer.

CHICAGO, ILL., October 30, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of October:

Since my last report, dated September 29, 1915, the Illinois Liquor Dealers, in convention assembled at Springfield, Illinois, adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas, That in view of the fact that we have at all times received the loyal and undivided support of the bartenders and waiters' union in every part of the State, where we have had to go before the public in local option elections. Therefore be it

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this organization that every member in this State make it his business to employ union help and to promote to the limit of his ability the sale of union goods."

The above resolution was introduced by Mr. Jno. Maskell, president of Local 2 of the Chicago Liquor Dealers' Protective Association.

THE MIXER AND SERVER

Too much can not be said for Mr. Jno. Haskell and his stand for union labor. The situation here in Chicago is one that requires time, money and thought. If the membership will have patience I believe that the December issue of the MIXER AND SERVER will have food for reflection.

The following is my expense account for the month of October:

Local and suburban car fare.....	$3 50
Telephone (local and long distance).....	3 50
Cards for meetings of Local 649.....	3 50
Printing of contracts and pledges.....	5 00
Postage	3 00

Total $20 50

Yours fraternally,

W. H. FOSTER,
Special District Organizer.

CHICAGO, ILL., October 30, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—During the month I have attended the meetings of our various crafts whenever opportunity permitted. I have canvassed the Loop district and other sections of the city for new members; assisted in restoring Local 649 to the roster of our International organization, and attending to many other matters that go to make up the work of an organizer. The prospect here seems brighter than it did on my arrival and I have hopes that the near future will reveal a situation that will satisfy those who at least understand.

My expenses for the month are as follows:

Local car fare.....	$3 65
Phone	60
Stamps and stationery.....	95

Total $5 20

HOQUIAM, WASH., October 21, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Enclosed find my report for the month to date:

On instructions from Vice-President Hesketh met Organizer Ben Gorton at Olympia, October 1st. Attended meeting Culinary Local 567 same date, two candidates being initiated. Brother Gorton assisted in the initiation.

October 2d visited members on duty of Bartenders' Local 556.

October 3d attended meeting of Local 556. Meeting fairly well attended. Boys showed up cheerful. Determined to stay to the finish, if it comes.

October 4th to Seattle conference with Vice-President Hesketh.

October 5th to Renton. Met President and Secretary of Local 667. Conferred on local conditions. Expect to return at some future date and make their meeting.

October 6th to Bremerton with Brother Gorton to investigate dispute between manager of Washington Cafe and Local 730. Brother Gorton still on job.

October 7th, to Seattle to attend meeting of Cooks' Local 33. Meeting well attended.

October 8th and 9th with Business Agents of Locals 33, 239 and 651. Visited number of members on duty, getting acquainted.

October 10th attended meeting of Bartenders' Local 651. It is certainly gratifying to see the boys sticking so loyally together, notwithstanding adverse conditions.

October 11th, 12th and 13th with Business Agent Campbell. Visited a number of bars in the city in the interest of Local 651.

October 14th to Centralia. Met Secretary Walter Conrad, of Local 836, and talked over local conditions. Will endeavor to make their meeting November 7th. On to Hoquiam, and called on Sister Trudeau, President of Local 804. To Aberdeen meeting of timber workers on same date.

October 15th to Aberdeen. Attended meeting of Central Labor Council.

October 16th visited members of Local 804 on duty, getting acquainted.

October 17th to Aberdeen. Attended meeting of Bartenders' Local 774. Boys in good spirits. I was asked to act with a committee to help settle some trouble at the Lobby Saloon, from which the card had been removed.

October 18th with committee. Succeeded in reinstating the bartender working there. Had new agreement signed up and card replaced.

October 18th with Secretary Janet Baile. Called on members of Local 804, notifying them to attend meeting in evening. Meeting poorly attended. However, I gave the obligations to one candidate.

October 19th to Elma. Met Secretary Hill, of Local 801, and talked over local affairs. Met several members on shift.

October 20th to Hoquiam. Trying to get the members of Local 804 to take some interest in their union, and with the able assistance of Sister Janet Baile expect to get results.

The following is my expense account to date:

Oct. 1—Raymond to Olympia.....	$ 2 50
3—To Seattle	1 70
5—Renton and return.....	30
6—Bremerton and return.....	50

ALBANY, N. Y., October 26, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of October:

My last report left me in Middletown, N. Y., trying to bring back to the fold Local 430.

September 28, held the final meeting and succeeded in putting the bartenders of Middletown back on the map. The following day picked up all bar labels and instructed the new officers to renew the contracts for all labels put out by the local hereafter.

September 30, to Peekskill as per instructions, where I found a very bad state of affairs, but after several meetings and by removing a number of labels we succeeded in reviving Local 851.

October 3, held a meeting of the members of Local 851 and a plan of action was adopted.

October 5th, to White Plains to pick up a number of bar labels which had been hanging in different establishments since the former local of bartenders went out of business.

Back to Peekskill to attend a meeting of Local 851; this meeting was very well attended and new officers were elected and Local 851 starts off with a clean sheet, and let us hope that the members will live up to their promise.

October 7, to White Plains to make sure that there were no more bar labels left in the town. I think it may be possible to get a local back there in some future time.

October 8 to New Rochelle. Went over the situation there and will say that the boys of Local 495 are a bunch of live wires, as far as the trade union movement is concerned.

October 9, to Schenectady where a strike of 15,000 men and women was on for a shorter work-day. Local 320 having requested me to help them straighten out several grievances, we took advantage of the strike and brought several places to terms.

October 14, the Liquor Dealers of Schenectady reorganized; the State president and State organizer were present at this meeting. I asked them for the privilege of the floor, which I was told I could have. After waiting for two hours the meeting adjourned and Henley did not get the floor. It may be all right—but. I attended over thirty meetings during the week of October 11th.

October 18th, to Glens Falls to see what could be done with the barboys' of that city. After talking with the most of them and trying to bring them back to their senses, I had to admit that I was defeated, while there are a few who want an organization. I did not think it advisable to send in for a charter, as the New York State Federation convention will be held there in 1916, I think it is up to the movement of Glens Falls to get on the firing line and help get the hotels where they should be.

October 23rd, received instruction from the general office to report to the offices of the New York Federation of Labor, which I did on the 24th. The work to be done for the State Federation is to help defeat the Revised Constitution which will come before the people on November 2nd, and it can be done if only the workers of the State will get on the job. I intend to go back to Glens Falls and force some of those has-beens into an organization.

All the meetings that I have attended during the past month were very well attended, and the members promised to boost for the members of our International Union.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Middletown to Peekskill.....	$1 26
Peekskill to White Plains and return.....	80
Peekskill to New Rochelle.....	55
New Rochelle to Schenectady.....	3 35
Schenectady to Glens Falls.....	85
Glens Falls to Albany.....	1 10

SEATTLE, WASH., October 23, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Find enclosed my report for the month of October:

I have visited the following locals and central bodies: Local 61, Tacoma, Cooks and Waiters; Bartenders, Local 707. I was unable to be at the meeting of Local 707, but hope to meet with them at a later date; I visited the officers and some of the members. Locals 567, 556 of Olympia; Local 730, Bremerton; Local 463, Cle Elum; Local 391, Roslyn; Local 555, North Yakima; all of these locals are doing well with the exception of Local 555—they are having a hard time trying to maintain their organization; they seem to think that there is no use in trying any longer; it is impossible to get a quorum to attend the meetings. I have made arrangements to return and am in hopes I will be able to show them the wisdom of maintaining a local of our International Union in the city, for if they don't it will be good-bye to their present conditions, and they are none the best at the present time. I have also visited the following central bodies: Seattle, Bremerton, North Yakima. I am pleased to report that the bartenders' locals throughout the state are going to stick just as long as the state is wet, and I don't believe that we are going to lose 2 per cent of the membership on account of the state going dry January 1. This speaks very well of the bar boys of the State of Washington.

I have also visited all of the locals in Seattle and will take them up in my next report.

I had quite a surprise in store for me when I visited their meetings, and I can not do the Seattle locals justice by making any short report, so, as I said before, I will take the Seattle locals up in my next report.

WORCESTER, MASS., October 24, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the past month:

Attended a meeting of Local 112 and assisted the local in their campaign in building up their organization; installed new Local 453, Lowell, Mass., and addressed several meetings while in that city. Attended the following meetings: Locals 81, 112, 77, 161; the musicians, machinists, polishers, Worcester C. L. U., cartridge workers, etc., in the interests of our crafts. With Vice-President Conley and committee from Boston C. L. U., I waited on the manager of the Quincy House in the hope of signing up the house and having the waitresses become members of Local 112. To Fall River in the interest of establishing culinary local in that city. To Worcester, in the interests of the culinary workers. To Springfield on similar mission.

In company with Vice-President Conley, attended a meeting of Local 161, Brockton; organized the bartenders, Leominster, Mass., and sent for charter.

The following is my expense account for the month:

JERSEY CITY, N. J., October 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of October:

September 26th, to Staten Island, New York, to Semlers Park, to secure information as well as to investigate conditions of interest to our locals here in New York City.

September 27th, picked up an application for Cooks' Local 719; also attended meeting of local joint board; 28th, addressed the Bronx Trade Council and Waitresses' Local 493 at Women's Trade Label League, 43 E. 22nd st., N. Y.; 29th, Hoboken, N. J., at meeting of Culinary Workers, Bartenders, Cooks and Musicians Alliance. Same evening to Union Hill, in company of business agent of Bartenders' Local 4, Hoboken, after new members and delinquents; 30th, addressed meeting of musicians of Hudson County, N. J., at request of our five locals here connected with alliance.

October 1st to New York City to attend meeting of Waiters' Local 1; seven applications received: I had the pleasure of obligating eight new candidates formally accepted to the membership.

I may report that attempts are being made to organize dual unions on the East Side, as the Hebrew trades have, up to date, refused to comply with the mandates of the A. F. of L. and secessionists are looking for a chance to wreck and tear down the institution it took years to erect, but we are holding our own; in fact, going one better by holding what we got and adding to our numerical strength.

October 2d, working here in New York City on a female cooks and helpers' proposition to organize. I believe the cooks are the key to the situation in this city, in fact, the sooner our culinary workers give this question their special attention and support, the sooner we can get from the bosses a full compensation for our labor.

October 3d to Jersey City, N. J.; addressed a mass meeting of all city employees at Teidiman's Hall, 180 Newark avenue; 4th, to New York City reported to joint board on matters referred to me to take up; 5th, evening, same hall, arranged for a mass meeting for female cooks and helpers with a committee for the 19th of this month at this same hall; 6th, to Jersey City to assist the locals there.

October 7th, addressed a mass meeting at McKinley Square Casino, Bronx, N. Y., held under auspices of local joint board of this city; while we had a fairly good attendance considering the fact that the weather was against us, we expect to try again, and in my next report I hope to be able to more fully report results accomplished.

October 9th, to Bayonne, N. J., looking over the field for the purpose of instituting (and I believe it possible) of a bartenders' local; 11th, at meeting of joint board, New York City; 12th, at meeting of Waiters' Local 219, East Side; the same evening to meeting of Waitresses' Local 493.

October 13th, appeared before executive board of Musicians' Local 310, New York City, with Brothers Lehman, Toby and Bach of joint board to interest them in the formation of an alliance with our crafts—assured of their co-operation. The same evening, with Sister Donner of waitresses' union, called to the attention of the executive board of Typo Union No. 6, at World Building, that the waitresses employed at the Times Annex Restaurant refused to join our union, and were assured of their co-operation to secure their affiliation. On the 14th, addressed the Central Labor Union of Hudson County, N. J.; 15th, to Jersey City, N. J., where I attended meeting of culinary workers; same evening to meeting of Essex Trades Council, Newark, N. J.

October 18th, reported to joint board, New York City on work assigned to my charge; 19th at No. 12 St. Marks place at mass meeting of female cooks and helpers; also attended meeting of Bartenders' Local 141, same hall.

October 20th to Hoboken, N. J., to Odd Fellows' Hall, to confer with the proprietor, at request of Locals 4 and 10; 20th, New York City, working with Representative of cooks' local, Brother Oberst, to secure new members and to adjust grievances at Palm Garden and Mannerchon Hall; proprietors of same assuring me of their willingness to have their chefs join this local.

October 22d, Paterson, N. J., to straighten out a matter of interest to Local 4, Hoboken, and Local 748 of this city; adjusted satisfactorily to both parties; same evening to meeting of Essex Trades Council, Newark, N. J.

October 23d, New York City, down town working in the interest of Bartenders' Local 118; same evening attended mass meeting of female cooks and helpers at 12 St. Marks place, Schuetzen hall enrolled more than a sufficient number for a charter and sent to general office for same.

Regret to report the loss of one of the best workers of our crafts in New Jersey—Brother Gustave Meister of Local 131, Newark, N. J. He was laid to rest, surrounded by his fellow unionists, on Saturday, October 23. He was business agent of this local for a number of years and attended a number of our International conventions.

My expense account for month follows:

Oct. 1—Jersey City to Newark and return.	$ 0 30
15—Jersey City to Newark and return.	30
22—Hoboken to Paterson and return..	70
22—Hoboken to Newark and return...	30

MILWAUKEE, Wis., October 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—My report for the past month's work is as follows:

On September 29th, a special meeting of the Chicago Waiters' Association was held in the K. of P. hall, and the principles of unionism were most ably expounded to those that assembled on this occasion by John Fitzpatrick, president of the Chicago Federation of Labor; Victor Olander, secretary of the Illinois State Federation of Labor, and Organizer Fred Hobby, and the efforts of these speakers seemed to be greatly appreciated by every one present, and we feel confident that this effort will bear fruit in the near future, and we are still working on the proposition of the amalgamation of the various organizations in the city of Chicago.

October 3rd, attended the meeting of the C. F. of L.

October 4th, attended the meeting of the Local Joint Executive Board.

October 5th, visited the Knab restaurant and interviewed Mr. Knab, but did not succeed in our mission of signing up the Knab place again.

October 7th, we visited the Berghoff Cafe and were accorded a very chilly reception by Manager Geiger, but we are not through with the Berghoff yet, as we will take the matter up with Mr. H. J. Berghoff and we feel that he will at least receive us in a more courteous manner than that received at the hands of Mr. Geiger.

October 12th, we had an interview with Mr. John Vogelsang, lasting one hour and ten minutes, and Mr. Vogelsang seemed very favorably impressed with the proposition we offered.

October 12th, attended the meeting of Local 35 in the afternoon and Local 456 in the evening.

October 15th, the Cook County Liquor Dealers sent out a letter to their entire membership in which they urged their members to insist on their bartenders joining the Bartenders' International League, and this letter will no doubt make our work a little easier in the Windy City.

October 18, attended the meeting of the Local Joint Executive Board in the afternoon, and the meeting of Local 507 in the evening.

October 19th, we started to work the loop district again in quest of new material for the bartenders' organizations, and it is certainly a tough proposition to try and interest the men employed in this section of the city.

October 25th, a communication from the general office to Vice-President Foster, conveyed the information that Local 64, of Milwaukee, was in need of some attention, and I was detailed to look after this matter. I arrived in Milwaukee the evening of the 25th, and had made arrangements for a special meeting for October 29 and I hope to be able to arouse the members of Local 64 from their lethargic state that they seem to be reposing in at present.

My expenses for the month are as follows:

Local car fare.....	$ 4 40
Postage and stationery.....	1 00
Telephone service	1 10
Oct. 25—Car fare, Chicago to Milwaukee.	1 70
	$ 8 20

STOCKTON, CAL., October 24, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of October:

September 30th, left Los Angeles, to attend the California State Federation of Labor convention, which convened October 4th to 8th, inclusive, in the city of Santa Rosa, Cal.; the following members of our International were in attendance as delegates: J. J. Sheehan, Local 378; Wm. T. Scully, Local 406; F. M. Ryan, Local 566; Ed. Malter and F. Sesma, Local 284; A. C. Beck, Local 31; August Zimmerman, Local 41; Wm. F. Furlong, Al. E. Steiner and H. J. Hoehn, Local 44; Hugo Ernst, Local 30; L. Hasselbach, Local 603; J. C. Sachs, Local 768; A. J. Smith, Local 591; G. W. McDonald, Local 754; L. L. Chase, Local 403; Jas. Redenbaugh, Local 572. A total of fourteen locals represented.

It is surprising and to be regretted that our locals do not take the necessary interest to send delegates to the State convention; the State Federation has in the past given our crafts their undivided support, and gone on record against Prohibition, and unless our locals take it upon themselves to protect their interest there is no telling when the federation will change their attitude. It is to be hoped that between now and next convention, which will convene in the city of Eureka, our locals will devise ways and means to send a full quota of delegates. Start a fund right now, don't let it go for the next meeting. Do it now, and be there. Remember that it will be on the eve of the State-Wide Prohibition election.

Nearly all the resolutions adopted were on subjects of organization and legislation. None of the resolutions affected us, but if our delegates had not been there, no doubt that some Prohibitionist would have introduced resolutions inimical to our crafts; therefore, I again repeat, see that your local is represented at the next convention to safeguard our interest.

A caucus of our delegates was held and transacted considerable business, among which was a recommendation to all our locals to form in each city, liberal leagues, and that our locals levy an assessment on our members to fight prohibition.

October 6th, Cooks and Waiters' Local 828, was launched, officers elected and installed, and no doubt with the spirit shown by the new members

THE MIXER AND SERVER

Santa Rosa will have a wide-awake local. All our delegates to the convention were present and they assured the baby local the hearty and loyal support of all our locals. Too much credit cannot be given to Brother Tom Vitaich, organizer of the State Federation for his consistent work in Santa Rosa, having been successful in organizing the bartenders and culinary workers in a very short time; also doing good work for the entire movement.

October 13th, arrived in Stockton and attended the meeting of Local 403, and on the 18th the meeting of Local 572.

October 18th, the injunctions issued temporarily against the officers of the Labor Council, the officers of Locals 572 and 250 John Does, came up before Superior Judge Young. Attorney Lister, of San Francisco, Cal., retained by the State Federation for that special case, submitted to the court many legal points why the injunction should not be made permanent, showing very plainly that no laws had been violated by the pickets in front of the Court House restaurant. Judge Young took the matter under advisement, and up to this date no decision has been rendered, but we are in hopes that he will soon give his decision in our favor, if not the State Federation will carry the case to the State Supreme Court, and no doubt that there at least we will receive a favorable decision.

During the month have attended the meetings of our locals, the Local Joint Executive Board and Labor Council; worked with a committee of Local 403, to devise ways and means to form a liberal league.

With Business Agent of Local 572, Brother Redenbaugh, have adjusted a few differences that existed, and expect that next week we will be able to display the union card in two of the best restaurants in Stockton.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Sept. 30—Los Angeles to San Francisco.	$10 35
Oct. 3—San Francisco to Santa Rosa and return	1 70
Oct. 13—San Francisco to Stockton.....	2 35
Baggage transferred in Los Angeles, San Francisco and Stockton.....	2 00

LOS ANGELES, CAL., October 21, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of October:

Since my last report we have been able to sign up a number of houses in the restaurant line, and are continuing the work of endeavoring to reconstruct the culinary situation in this city, being assisted by Brother Palmer, Secretary of Locals 17 and 27. We addressed the following organizations, seeking their co-operation in the campaign inaugurated:

Sept. 27—Called on the Secretary of Local 754, San Pedro, Cal., and matters of importance to the Los Angeles locals were discussed and acted upon.

Sept. 29—Attended meeting of Local 27 and had a large gathering. The question of the New Haven Restaurant was acted on.

Sept. 30—Attended meeting of Local 17, and in the absence of the President the Vice-President was asked to take the chair and assume the duties of the presiding officer. The meeting was well attended, as there was business of importance on the desk, that of changing the meetings from the evening to the afternoon, which is for the best interest of the local. The matter with reference to the New Haven Restaurant was taken up and a new member was taken in.

Oct. 1—Attended meeting of the Central Labor Council.

Oct. 1, 2, 3—Attended to the arrangement of the funeral of Sister and Brother Palmer's infant son.

Oct. 6—Attended meeting of the Local Joint Executive Board.

Oct. 7—Attended meeting of Local 17.

Oct. 8—Went to San Francisco, arriving there on the 9th.

Oct. 12—Called on the Secretary of Local 48 and got traveling card for a member working in Los Angeles.

Oct. 13—Attended meeting of Waitresses' Local 48, and helped them to install an officer in the local. They had a very nice meeting, but it was poorly attended.

Oct. 14—Called on the Secretary of Local 31, Oakland, and business of importance pertaining to members belonging to Locals 17 and 31 was taken up.

Oct. 15—Attended meeting of the San Francisco Labor Council. Had a very large meeting. Also called on the Secretary of Local 30.

Oct. 17—Left for Los Angeles, arriving there Oct. 18th at 8:00 a. m.

Oct. 20—Attended meeting of Local 27, and a committee was appointed to form a Liberal League. Three new members were also acted upon.

Oct. 21—Attended meeting of Local 17. Business of importance was taken up and a number of members were initiated and reinstated.

The balance of my time was taken up by calling on the proprietors, endeavoring to get them to sign up their establishments, and general agitation work.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Telephone	$1 00
Stationery	75
To San Pedro.....	50
Local and suburban car fare.....	1 25

Total $3 59

PORTLAND, ORE., October 28, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the past month:

Substantial progress has been made in the campaign for the organization of the cafeteria workers and negotiations are now under way to establish an equitable basis of settlement. The differences that exist as to hours, wages and conditions of the organized as compared with the unorganized houses are so great that some proprietors maintain the signing of our agreement would eliminate their profits and compel them to close their doors. A typical instance is the employment of waiters two hours and a half for their meals; after said time if their services are needed, fifteen cents an hour. Needless to say, they seldom get a chance to earn the fifteen cents. The employers hide behind the hypocritical plea that they are rendering the community valuable service in assisting to solve the problem of unemployment and destitution (for which Portland is notorious at this time) by employing as many men as they can for their meals.

The State law prohibiting the employment of Asiatics on all public or semi-public work has been violated for years by the Port of Portland Commissioners. Local 189, with the assistance of the labor commissioner's office, after considerable trouble, succeeded in securing the elimination of all Asiatic culinary workers from dredges and tugs.

Spent two days in Salem canvassing the culinary situation. The town is dry territory and looks like a deserted village.

My expense account is as follows:

October 1—Portland to Salem and return. $2 00
Postage 1 00
 Total $3 00

OAKLAND, CAL., October 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of October:

October 1st and 2d, with officials of Local 525, finished up several matters, including signing of new scale. On the 3d, at meeting of Local 525, case of Brother Chas. Jackson, charged with conduct unbecoming a member, was found guilty by the grievance committee and the findings of the committee being unanimously concurred in by the local, said brother will probably understand that he or any other member can not "bully" the rest of the membership and get away with it.

October 4th, to Santa Rosa, to finish up the work on the two locals in that city. The convention of the State Federation of Labor being in session, I had the pleasure of attending same as a delegate from Local 31 of Oakland. An attempt was made to introduce a resolution favoring a license system, which I am glad to report failed to carry. Delegate Hugo Ernst of Local 30 was chosen as delegate to the A. F. of L. Convention. Delegate Steimer of Local 44 was re-elected as vice-president for the Sixth District; Delegate Sachs of Local 768, was also a candidate but failed to secure enough votes to win. Better luck next time, John. Held meetings for both crafts, finishing up work on the bartenders; the culinary workers, however, have several more to be rounded up.

October 9th, back to Oakland. The boys and girls are still after the unfair cafeterias. The local is going to give a dance on November 5th, to raise funds to help carry on the work. As Secretary Sullivan, with the family, are expected in Oakland about that time, the dance is bound to prove a success; everybody wants to see if "the boss" has a dance step equal to the California standard.

October 10th, at meeting of Central Labor

Council, Brother Wm. Spooner, of Local 31, was elected as delegate to the A. F. of L. Convention, so I presume our crafts will be well represented.

October 13th, meeting of executive board of Local 31; October 14th, 15th and 16th, on general work; October 18th, with Business Agent Bard of Local 525, visited the bars of Alameda, finding several members suspended, as well as several who were not transferred from other locals.

October 19th, to Santa Rosa to complete the work on the culinary local. Held meeting of bartenders on the 20th, and assisted with the committee in drawing up a local constitution as well as wage scale. At the meeting of culinary workers on the 21st, nearly all the remaining applicants were initiated. With the assistance of the labor movement of Santa Rosa the culinary workers should be able to better their working conditions considerably. Their only danger lies in attempting to go ahead too fast at first. At this time I wish to acknowledge the great assistance given me by Organizer T. J. Vitaich of the California State Federation of Labor. Tom sure took interest in our crafts and deserves the sincere thanks of the boys and girls of Santa Rosa.

October 23rd, to Fresno. The labor movement of Fresno is not in as good shape as it might be, and of course that fact had its influence on our two crafts there. On October 24th, at meeting of bartenders, the membership turned out in force. Several matters in dispute were settled satisfactorily, the evident trouble being too much talk on the streets over nothing. There are several other matters to be smoothed out for the local, which were put over until a later date, as I had to return to the city of Oakland. Visited with Secretary Williams of Local 62. Found that local well established in fine headquarters, and a general feeling that they were well ready for the winter work. With Secretary Williams and the manager of the State Employment Bureau, took up several matters with the proprietors of the Hughes Hotel, and the Sequoi Hotel. The first hotel is considering opening a lunch room in addition to its dining room, which unfortunately, is owned to a large extent by a Chinaman. While the matter is not settled to the satisfaction of Local 62, however, I feel sure that it won't be long before the hotel will be thoroughly unionized.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Sept. 29—To Santa Rosa	$1 45
30—To Oakland	1 45
30—To Petaluma and return.....	1 00

DENVER, COLO., October 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—My last report left me in Pueblo; I remained until the 2d and then on account of the L. J. E. B. having some trouble with a house over a card and also receiving a telephone call from Local 52 in Colorado Springs, I hastened there.

On the 4th, visited Cooks and Waiters, Local 43; went to the Springs on the 5th and audited the books of Local 52. On the 6th, 7th and 8th, attended the Carpenters, the Federated Trades Council and the Cooks and Waiters, Local 52, and on the 10th visited Bartenders, Local 282, in Pueblo. On the 11th visited Cooks and Waiters, Local 43; the Newsboys on the 12th; the Assembly on the 13th, and Cooks and Waiters, Local 52 on the 15th.

On the 17th and 18th, attended Bartenders, Local 282, and Cooks and Waiters, Local 43.

On the 19th I went to Trinidad and tried to get enough of our craftsmen interested to form a local, but it is useless to try at this time—it may be different in the future.

On the 22d, went to Colorado Springs. I think we should have a lot of help and encouragement here for the next few months; they are making a hard fight here as this is about the only town left with good jobs and they are prone to give them up, and in connection with the proprietors are doing all they can to keep the local from making progress. The members here are deserving of a lot of credit.

The following are my expenses for the month:

October 5—Pueblo to Colorado Springs....	$ 1 35
8—Springs to Pueblo.....	1 35
15—Pueblo to Springs and return.....	2 70
19-21—Trinidad and return.....	5 40
22—To Springs	1 35
23—To Denver	2 25

HOUSTON, TEXAS, October 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for October, including the last five days in September.

Up to October 7th, I have received and distributed $1,500 to our flood suffering members of Galveston, Texas City and Port Arthur; Galveston getting $1,340, Texas City $125, and Port Arthur receiving only $35; I explained in my last report why Port Arthur did not receive more funds. Beaumont Local 751, had taken care of our members in Port Arthur. I wish to state here that Beaumont Local 751 was only eleven months old at the time of this great storm, which speaks well for one so very young, and that's not all—Beaumont local is a 100 per cent local.

On September 26th, to Galveston and return in the interest of our flood and storm suffering members. I made arrangements with our members of the Texas City local to meet them at a meeting to be held Sunday, October 3 at 10 a. m., and with the members of Galveston Local 749, at 3 p. m. of the same day, and also with Galveston Local 69 on Tuesday, October 5 at 8 p. m.

On Sunday morning, the 3d, I was present at a meeting of Local 752, Texas City, where I distributed $125 to members of that local who had suffered in the storm! I wound up this meeting and caught a train for Galveston, where I had a meeting at 3 o'clock the same afternoon and distributed funds to the members of Local 749.

On October 5th, back to Galveston, where I attended the meeting of Local 69, where I finished distributing the last installment of $500 of the $1,500 I had received from the general office.

This winding up the distribution of funds, I then proceeded to Houston, where I could devote all of my time towards organizing a culinary local in that city. At this writing we think we have virtually got Houston organized, and believe we will be ordering a charter before this reaches the general office. Houston seems to be the center, just now, for labor organizers, as I have met the following named international organizers here in the last week: Bro. Adam Huebner of the Brewery Workers; Brother Wines of the United Garment Workers; Brother Ross of the Bakers; and Brother Stewart of the Sheet Metal Workers. We attended meetings of the various locals as well as the meetings of the Trades and Labor Council, where we had the pleasure of meeting members from every local in the city.

On the 17th, attended meeting of Local 750 of this city; two new candidates were initiated. Brother Wines of the United Garment Workers addressed this meeting and made a very interesting talk, which our members seemed to appreciate very much, especially that part of his speech where he dwelt at length on the importance of our affiliation with all branches of labor and the patronizing of the union label and what it means to us from a prohibition standpoint.

My expenses for the month are as follows:

September 26—Galveston and return.....	$2 50
October 2 and 3—Galveston via Texas City 1 75
3—To Houston	1 25
3 and 5—Long distance telephone..	50
5 to 7—To Galveston and return..	2 50
Two duplicate receipt books.....	25
Postage, street car fare and stationery....	5 50
Typewriter work and supplies.....	3 50
 Total.....	 $17 75

A STRONG MAN'S JOB.

Some time ago a colored man applied for work at a building operation and was taken on. The first duty assigned him was carrying planks from one corner to another. The planks weighed a whole lot more than a heavy conscience, and as the colored man wearily trudged along he became exceedingly thoughtful.

"Look yeah, boss," he remarked finally going over to the foreman, "did I tell yo' what mah name was when I started in to work?"

"Why, yes," answered the foreman, wonderingly. "You said it was Thompson."

"Dat's jes' what I did, boss. Dat's jes' what I did," was the smiling rejoinder of the colored party. "But I was afraid dat yo' done made a mistake and fink it was Sampson."—Philadelphia Telegraph.

CONFISCATION WHICH FAILED TO LAND THE BACON

When the Anti-Saloon League held its convention at Atlantic City, N. J., in July, Purley Baker and his Board of Strategy caused to be announced an alleged convention of an organization which styled itself the Catholic Prohibition League. This convention, so it was alleged, was holding sessions at Atlantic City, and no doubt many readers of the daily press carried the impression that there was such an organization, and that it was co-operating with the Anti-Saloon League and would prove an ally of immense power and influence.

In commenting on this alleged new organization in the September number of THE MIXER AND SERVER, we said:

WISHING IT INTO EXISTENCE.

"Ever since the Anti-Saloon League established its general printing plant at Westerville, O., Editor-in-chief Cherrington has had, and, seemingly, taken advantage of his bucolic surroundings to conduct a series of dream experiments, some of which did not exactly develop into 'world beaters,' nor, for that matter, did they produce any effect, except, probably, indignation among a certain class of citizen voters of America. At the recent pow wow of the Anti-Saloon League forces at Atlantic City, N. J., there was advertised to meet what was called the Catholic Prohibition League. But in spite of a careful and vigorous search by interested parties, there was no such organization meeting at Atlantic City during the week which the Anti-Saloon League occupied a small portion of the Million Dollar pier. It is true that a few men who lay claim to being of the Catholic faith, and who are on the pay-roll of the Anti-Saloon League, met the newspaper men and handed out the usual bunch of hot air about the immense crowd of delegates in attendance, but facts are facts, and can not be made to serve the Antis at this time. The great big convention dwindled down to an ordinary aggregation, unable to fill comfortably one of the halls on the pier; that is to say, that the combined forces of the Anti-Saloon League delegates—principally employees of that organization—and the so-called Catholic Prohibition League, were scarcely able to fill one of the auditoriums on the pier. Whoever heard of the Catholic Prohibition League before Editor-in-chief Ernest Cherrington took over the habit of dreaming in a cross-road Ohio town. Cherrington may be forced to conclude that wishing things into existence don't always pan out, for that little bit of politics—trying to impress the country that the Catholic Church was working with the Anti-Saloon League—may prove quite an obstacle before the summer flowers begin to fade."

Heretofore the Anti-Saloon League found no particular obstacle to its campaign of confiscation. It took unto itself titles as they were needed, and it hit the high spot of confiscation when it called itself "The Church in Action," caring little whether any of its supporters were affiliated with church organizations, but knowing only too well that with such a title the unsophisticated would be impressed with its prestige and alleged power. Baker, Cherrington et al. had been so successful in dealing with Protestant church organizations, bluffing their way with such marked progress, that they became obsessed with the idea that it would be an excellent move to grab another church title and add to their seeming possessions. This condition of mind lead them into the field with zeal and fervor, and forthwith they began to gently ease news items into their publications about the formation and progress of the Catholic Prohibition League. Their first exhibit of that alleged organization did not prove the big winner which they expected, and upon returning to headquarters at Columbus, O., they began to lay plans and outline a campaign which they hoped would bring home the bacon, and without anyone questioning their right to same.

On the 16th of October the result of their planning became evident, for on that date there appeared in several of the Ohio papers a double column display advertisement which had the following scare head: "CATHOLICS OF OHIO FOR PROHIBITION."

The first paragraph of the referred to ad read as follows:

"The Catholic Prohibition League of Ohio held its first convention in Columbus Thursday of last week. Representative Catholics were present from all parts of the State, and reports showed that Catholics are swinging into line for the State-wide Prohibition Amendment, and that the organization is proving effective in many of the larger cities of the State."

The average reader of the daily papers, not knowing that the headquarters of the Anti-Saloon League are located at Columbus, and their printing and publishing plant just outside of that city, at Westerville, O., would probably conclude that there surely had been such a convention, and that the Catholic Church, despite conclusions to the contrary, had actually lined up with the Baker-Cherrington-Wheeler et al. aggregation, known as the Anti-Saloon League, and had aided in forming branches "in many of the larger cities of the State." Investigation disclosed the fact that in none of the larger cities had any such organization been formed, and further, that the alleged convention supposed to have been held at Columbus, O., was, if it was ever held, a gathering of the employees of the Anti-Saloon League. The dreams of Baker-Cherrington-Wheeler were knocked galleywest before their advertising campaign had fairly begun, for on the day following the appearance of the double column display ad, the Catholic Church authorities gave out an announcement, which was printed in the Sunday papers (October 17, 1915).

A perusal of the announcement, or interview, whichever you wish to call it, shattered the hopes of the Anti-Saloon confiscationists, who, more than likely, realize now that they monk-eyed with a buzz-saw with mighty sharp teeth. The following is the announcement, as taken from the Cincinnati Enquirer, Sunday, October 17, 1915:

REPUDIATES "CATHOLIC DRY LEAGUE."

Archbishop Asserts That it Misuses Church's Name.

Condemns the Movement as a Palpable Fraud.

Because Bishops of Ohio Cannot, in Conscience Indorse What Is Contrary To Doctrine.

Archbishop Moeller, ranking prelate in the hierarchy of Ohio, yesterday repudiated the so-called Catholic Prohibition League of Ohio and stated that the organization's use of the name Catholic is "misleading, unwarranted and unauthorized." "I know that I have not approved any organization of that character, and I can say the same for Bishop Hartley, of Columbus; Bishop Schrems, of Toledo, and Bishop Farrelly, of Cleveland," said the Archbishop.

"The very purpose of the organization is contrary to the Catholic doctrine of freedom of the will and, obviously, none of the churches' Bishops can do otherwise than repudiate the same. It may be that one or two Catholics, for reasons of their own, have banded together in an organization of this kind, but that is their own affair. They have no right, however, to make it appear that the Catholic church as such is behind the movement, or even that it has the moral support of any of the Bishops of this state.

MOVEMENT IS A FRAUD.

"In their attempt to accomplish what, I contend, legislation will never bring about, prohibitionists have not hesitated to go to any extreme and the advertisements now appearing in the newspapers seeking to impress the public that the Catholic church is supporting the movement bears out this fact and is a palpable fraud.

"As the head of this metropolitan See, I wish to emphasize that no Catholic layman or priest has the right to use the name of the Catholic church as an indorser of any movement without the sanction of the Bishop of the diocese in which he resides. The Bishops are the proper authorities to say what is Catholic and what is not. The Bishops of Ohio have not as yet delegated this authority, and it is certainly unbecoming, to say the least, for those in no way associated with the church to make unwarranted use of its name to further their hobbies.

"For the reasons stated above, I absolutely repudiate the so-called Catholic Prohibition League of Ohio and condemn the same in so far as the use of the name Catholic may indicate that it has the official sanction of the church or the hierarchy of this state."

COLUMBUS PRELATE QUOTED.

The Archbishop then called attention to an utterance of Bishop Hartley, of Columbus, in which that prelate says that "The Catholic Prohibition League is the contradiction in terms adopted by a new set allied to the Anti-Saloon League. How strangely out of joint is the word Catholic in such an association. The old heretical sect of the manachees, undone by the logic and eloquence of St. Augustine, finds its counterpart on our own soil in the prohibition party." Speaking of the attempt of some Catholics to bring the church into politics, the Columbus prelate says: "How wanton and false are the movements of those who would dishonor their royal mother by attempting to make her a scullion in political trickery."

The repudiation comes at an opportune time, for had the "grabbers" of the Anti-Saloon League succeeded in getting by with their plans, they would have "pointed to Ohio with pride" and made their "Church in Action" shibboleth the strongest political club which was ever used on hard-headed law makers and aspirants for office.

As predicted in our comment in the September number of THE MIXER AND SERVER, the attempt of the Purley Baker "nickel pickers" aggregation bumped up against "an obstacle before the summer flowers began to fade" and that obstacle is the highest authority in the Catholic church in the Buckeye State, who does not hesitate to brand the Anti-Saloon schemers and their alleged Catholic Prohibition League as A PALPABLE FRAUD.

PATRICK CROTTY DEAD.

GENIAL SPIRIT WHO HAD A HAPPY WORD FOR EVERYONE.

Patrick W. Crotty, one of Holyoke's best-known and most highly respected residents, died in the House of Providence Hospital, after an illness which lasted two weeks. Mr. Crotty had been ailing for some time before he actually took to his bed, and his condition was not considered really serious until shortly before his death, when he was removed to the hospital.

Mr. Crotty was born in Ireland, but came to this country when a little lad, settling with his family in Leeds, where he spent his boyhood. When a young man Mr. Crotty entered the employ of the New York Central Railroad, and for a time was located in Albany. From there he came to Holyoke, and for a period of twenty-five years or more has been a familiar figure in Holyoke business life. During all this time Mr. Crotty was employed as a bartender, with the exception of a few years, when he entered into business for himself. Several years ago, Mr. Crotty was a member of the firm of Crotty & Casey, liquor dealers, with headquarters on Main street, and over two years ago he embarked into the business world again, conducting the P. W. Crotty stand at Sargent and Park streets. He later sold out to Tourville & Lepere, and since that time had been employed by P. J. Murray & Co.

Mr. Crotty was prominent in the fraternal life of the city. He was a staunch member of the Holyoke Lodge of Elks, Wampanoag Tribe of Red Men, Holyoke Aerie of Eagles, the Loyal Order of Moose and the Catholic Knights of America. He was a long-time member of the Bartenders' Union, and for a number of years served as its President.

Physically Mr. Crotty was one of the biggest men in Holyoke, and he had a heart to match his big body. At one time a few years ago he weighed 335 pounds, but his long illness had pulled him down a lot.

Although identified with the liquor business for many years, Mr. Crotty was a total abstainer. His specialty in the drink line was buttermilk, and he consumed quarts of it daily.

Mr. Crotty had a never-ending fund of Irish wit and humor to fill the passing hours with. One of his many excellent qualities was his devotion to his family. For years he never missed spending Sunday with his mother in Leeds. At home he devoted himself to the care of Mrs. Crotty and his son.

He leaves a widow, who was Miss Georgianna Lanoue; a son, Howard, and one brother, Dennis Crotty, of Leeds. The funeral was held from his late home, 45 Wolcott street, followed by a requiem high Mass in the Blessed Sacrament Church. Burial was in Calvary Cemetery. Members of the Holyoke Lodge of Elks acted as pallbearers at the funeral.—Holyoke (Mass.) Transcript.

UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

The following is a continuation of the summaries of the report of The United States Commission on Industrial Relations. The first installment appeared in the September (1915) number of the MIXER AND SERVER.

It is suggested that our members write their Senator and Congressmen urging that the entire report of the Commission be printed in sufficient quantities for general distribution among the workers of America; in fact, this suggestion should be carried into effect; otherwise the complete report will never become public property to the extent that is necessary in order that the great mass of the people may become acquainted with the tremendous facts disclosed by the investigation carried out under the supervision of the Commission.—Editor, MIXER AND SERVER.

Supplemental Findings and Recomme- ndations of Commissioners Lennon and O'Connell.

The Commission on Industrial Relations today made public the supplemental findings and recommendations by Commissioners John B. Lennon and James O'Connell.

The Commissioners protest against the claim that the faults that may exist in trade union organizations can properly be considered among the causes of industrial unrest, and assert that such faults disappear as soon as trades unions are recognized and permitted to grow strong.

They urge strong labor organizations as the paramount remedy for industrial unrest.

The supplemental report dissents from the recommendation that a new Federal industrial commission be created for the administration of all labor laws. It urges that instead of creating new machinery, the Department of Labor be developed and given ampler funds for carrying on its work.

The supplemental report is signed by Commissioners A. B. Garretson and Frank Walsh, chairman of the Commission.

"Our signatures are appended to the report of Mr. Basil M. Manly, Director of Research and Investigation of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations submitted to the Commission at its session held in Chicago during the months of July and August, 1915, except that portion of the report recommending a system of mediation, conciliation, investigation and arbitration, applicable to both State and Nation, which proposes to create a commission of three members, together with an advisory council of 20 members, 10 representing employers and 10 representing employees. The entire plan is set forth in the report of the staff as submitted to the Commission on Industrial Relations; also in a report to the Commission by Professor George E. Barnett, and in the report of Commissioner John C. Commons. From these recommendations we dissent for reasons assigned in this statement.

"The evidence submitted to the Commission at public hearings, together with the evidence secured by special investigators, has been fairly set forth in Mr. Manly's report and with even justice to all, whether employers, employees or the public."

CRITICISMS NOT JUSTIFIED.

"Our fellow Commissioners who are representative of the employers, contend in their statement that the report of Mr. Basil M. Manly for the staff is deficient in that it does not properly present an indictment against labor on the grounds of fostering and promoting violence in trade disputes, jurisdictional disputes accompanied by strikes, limitation of output, sympathetic strikes, contract breaking, apprenticeship rules, refusal to use non-union materials, alleged graft and so forth, and that it does not include these things among the fundamental causes of industrial unrest. All the evidence submitted to the Commission, as we understand and interpret it, proves that these things in so far as they do exist are in no sense causes of industrial unrest, but, on the contrary, are evidences of existing industrial unrest and are evils that are incidental to a situation wherein labor has at times been forced to fight with such weapons as it could command for advantages and rights that in justice should be freely accorded to the wage earners. So long as labor organizations are forced by employers to fight for the mere right to exist, and so long as wages paid to labor are so low that the unorganized wage earner often sees no choice except that between resorting to such weapons or seeing himself and his family sink below the poverty line, just so long will these evils at times manifest themselves as symptoms of the worker's desperation. The union, fighting for its right to live, is sometimes forced to tolerate acts that would not be countenanced if its entity were secured and its energies were not absorbed in fighting for existence.

STRONG ORGANIZATIONS THE CURE.

"Experience shows that the evils complained of rapidly disappear in labor organizations as soon as the organization prevails over the opposition of the employers and establishes its right to organize. Strong unions mean decent wages, and decent wages raise wage earners to a plane of thought and action where all their acts and mental processes must no longer be directed toward a desperate struggle for the very right of themselves and families to live.

"Organized labor fully realizes how unfortunate it is that labor in its struggle for existence has occasionally been driven to consider its immediate advantage at the expense of the true economic principles that must govern in the long run. All the energies of organized labor's representatives have been exerted to minimize or eliminate any tendency toward limitation of output or jurisdictional disputes, but, at the same time, organized labor insists that these tendencies where they exist are the logical and inevitable outgrowth of evils in industry that can be removed only by trade union action by the wage earners. We could cite evidence at great length to show that the tendencies complained of so far as they exist at all have grown out of the hard necessities with which labor has been confronted. It is enough here to quote briefly from the testimony of the distinguished economist, Professor Jacob H. Hollander of Johns Hopkins University, given before this Commission in New York City on January 20, 1915. Professor Hollander in discussing the limitation of output, said:

"We lose sight of the fact that trade unions and unionists are not soldiering in the matter, but they are animated by a very high degree of fraternity in the matter, that they are willing to adopt the same principle if it is a matter of piece work instead of time work, that the endeavor of society should be to bring back industrial conditions from that unwholesome mess into which they have slumped, from this abnormal disproportionate allotment of workers to particular fields in excess of the requirements of those fields.

"We must without deviating one iota from the proposition which you have stated that it is socially unsound that workmen should do less than they properly could—society should seek to bring about conditions where they will do what they can without involving displacement and unemployment on the part of their fellow workmen."

"We hold that the report of Mr. Manly contains no statement that is unworthy of credence and that will not bear careful investigation. The conclusions and recommendations are warranted by the statement of facts and the accumulated evidence in the hands of the Commission."

THE EVIDENCE.

"All evidence accumulated, whether by special investigators or at public hearings, will be submitted to Congress, and we trust the people of our country will demand that it be published in full, particularly the following, which are well worth the most careful study by all persons interested in human uplift. The reports cited below have been prepared by competent investigators and were submitted to the Commission after careful investigation and verification by Director Basil M. Manly and by members of the Commission, and are the latest information upon the various subjects covered by them.

EXTENT OF UNREST.

"The principal duty imposed, under the law creating the Commission, was to seek to ascertain the causes of industrial unrest and offer such recommendations as we believe might alleviate that unrest. There can be no question but that unrest exists, in some instances, to an alarming extent. Thousands and tens of thousands of our people feel that they are deprived, under existing conditions in industry, of an opportunity to secure for themselves and their families a standard of living commensurate with the best ideals of manhood, womanhood and childhood. They resent the fact that the existing system of the distribution of wealth which creates at one end of our industrial scale a few multi-millionaires and at the other end thousands and tens of thousands of men, women and children who are at all times in a situation where they are uncertain as to where their next meal will come from. Hungry, poorly clothed and without the opportunities that a fully rounded life requires, they become filled with a sullen resentment that bodes no good for the future of our Republic.

"We have found men and women who are inclined to ascribe this condition to the fact that the Government exercises no power of mandatory character to prevent strikes and lock-outs. Many have been the propositions submitted to us for compulsory arbitration or, at least, compulsory investigation with power to recommend a settlement. Some have proposed an elaborate machinery to be set up by the general Government, and of a similar character by the States, providing for conciliation, mediation, arbitration and investigation, all of which, while without definite compulsory features, establish a legal machinery that must of necessity exercise an influence in that direction.

"The plan for the creation of an industrial commission, both National and State, proposes to assign to a commission of three members the administration of all labor laws of either State or Nation, giving to them powers far in excess of those exercised by the President of the United States, or the Governor of any State. This we believe to be Bureaucracy run mad, and a subversion of Democracy dangerous to the civil and social liberty of all citizens. We hold that all power should be in the final analysis with the people, and we, therefore, dissent from any such plan."

NEW GOVERNMENT MACHINERY UNWISE.

"The activities of such a Commission supplemented by the proposed advisory committees of employers and labor representatives would be so balanced as to prevent substantial progress, and tend to perpetuate present conditions. Such a plan conceives of labor and capital as static forces and of the relations between them as always to remain unchanging.

"We believe that the work now being done by the Department of Labor in industry generally, and by the Board of Mediation and Conciliation, dealing with interstate public utilities, is better than any that could be expected of any additional board that has been suggested to this Commission. We believe that the Department of Labor, with further experience and larger appropriations, will develop a high state of efficiency in adjusting labor disputes that are capable of being adjusted by any one other than the parties directly interested, and will adequately carry on the work provided by the law creating the Department of Labor, to wit:

Section 1. The purpose of the Department of Labor shall be to foster, promote and develop the welfare of the wage earners in the United States, to improve their working conditions and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

Section 8. The Secretary of Labor shall have the power to act as mediator and to appoint commissioners of conciliation in labor disputes whenever in his judgment the interests of industrial peace require it to be done.

"We favor the extension of the Newlands Act to cover all employees engaged in interstate commerce, such as the railroad telegraphers, the shop and track men employed by railroads, the employees of express companies, of the Pullman Company, of commercial telegraph and telephone companies, and other public utilities performing interstate service that, in the interest of the Nation, must be continuous.

"The evidence submitted to this Commission is substantially to the effect that where trade union organization exists among the workers, there, at the same time, exists the least amount of industrial unrest of a character that is dangerous to the peace and welfare of our Nation. It is true that the union men and women are not satisfied with their conditions; they are not, however, despondent as to the possibility of securing better conditions; they know what the unions have accomplished and they have an abiding faith that their further desires can be attained.

"Instead of any elaborate machinery for the prevention of strikes or lockouts we are convinced, from the testimony gathered by this Commission, that the most effectual course that can be pursued to bring about general contentment among our people, based upon a humane standard of living, is the promotion of labor organization. The most casual investigator will soon discover that in those lines of industry where organization of labor is the strongest, there is the least danger of industrial revolt that would endanger the fundamental principles of our Government and the maintenance of a nation with respect for law and order. Where organization is lacking, dangerous discontent is found on every hand; low wages and long hours prevail; exploitation in every direction is practiced; the people become sullen, have no regard for law or government and are, in reality, a latent volcano, as dangerous to society as are the volcanoes of nature to the landscape surrounding them."

THE ONE TRUE REMEDY.

"We, therefore, urge as the great remedy for such unnecessary industrial unrest as we have found, more, and more, and still more, organization of labor and of the employers in each industry as well. The education of the trade unions has been conducive to a higher and better citizenship. In recent years there have come to our assistance scores and hundreds and thousands of people outside the ranks of unionists—ministers, professors, journalists, professional men of all kinds—who have reached the conclusion that is herein stated, that the most efficient cure for such industrial unrest as should be cured, is union organization.

"We hold that efforts to stay the organization of labor or to restrict the right of employees to organize should not be tolerated, but that the opposite policy should prevail and the organization of the trade unions and of the employers' organizations should be promoted, not, however, for the sole purpose of fighting each other, but for the commendable purpose of collective bargaining and the establishing of industrial good will. Organizations of employers that have no object in view except to prevent labor having a voice in fixing the conditions of industry under which it is employed, have no excuse for existence, as they are a bar to social tranquility and a detriment to the economic progress of our country. The evidence before the Commission shows that organized labor has no desire, nor has it attempted to control the business of the employer. It insists that it has a right to a voice, and a potent voice, in determining the conditions under which it shall work. This attitude, we are sure, will be continued in spite of the opposition of any so-called employers' organizations. This country is no longer a field for slavery, and where men and women are compelled, in order that they may live, to work under conditions in determining which they have no voice, they are not far removed from a condition existing under feudalism or slavery.

"In emphasizing with all the force at our command the necessity of collective action by wage earners through strong organizations, if the problem of industrial unrest is to be solved, we wish again to quote from testimony of Professor Hollander. He undertook to sum up for this Commission those conclusions regarding the solution of this problem that have been reached not only by himself, but by the great body of economists in this country and abroad. He said:

The opinion of political economists in so far as I can voice it is that social unrest, which is manifest not only in this country but in every industrial country, is due to the existence of economic want or poverty, if by that we understand not on the one hand pauperism or on the other economic inequality. By poverty I mean the existence of large areas of industrial society in receipt of incomes less than enough to maintain themselves and those dependent upon them in decent existence. We believe that is the consequence, not of any absolute dearth—that the world produces enough to go around, that it is therefore not a question of insufficient production, but of defects in distribution. * * * There is a view among economists that there is nothing in any current theory of wages that precludes the laborer from obtaining a sufficient wage, and that if he fails it must be in consequence of the fact that he enters into the wage contract on a plane of inequality. The wage contract, in short, is the result of a bargain between the employer and the employee, and if the employer is in a superior competitive position by reason of combination and the laborer is unorganized, he is at a bargaining disadvantage which is certain to redound to his hurt.

I think political economists accordingly then are in agreement that trade unionism is essential as a means of bringing the workmen into industrial bargaining on a plane of equality.

* * * *

You have asked specifically what the remedy (for poverty) is. It means a very decided revolution of opinion as to trade unionism. The general attitude among employers of labor is often open and decided opposition to organized labor. Until society recognizes the unwisdom of that attitude and demands that the laborer must enter into his wage bargain on a plane of competitive equality, society has not lifted its finger to remedy that evil."

THE PUBLIC'S DUTY.

"We submit the report of Mr. Basil M. Manly as our report, asking for it the fullest possible consideration by the men and women of our country who are interested in the social and moral uplift of humanity.

"Labor must work out its own salvation. Wage workers can attain that degree of well-being to which they are entitled only by their own efforts. The general public can not be expected to do for them what they fail to do for themselves, nor would it be desirable that those rights and benefits to which they are entitled should be handed down to them by the Government or by organized society as grace from above. But the general public is vitally interested in the efforts of wage workers to win for themselves equal justice and such a degree of material well-being as will enable them to maintain themselves and their families in comfort, security and health. Society's interest in the triumph of labor's cause should spring not only from the love of justice and the human sympathy that animates every good citizen, but from a realization that industrial and social evils menacing large groups of the population can not continue without eventually bringing disaster to society as a whole. While inviting the aid of every good citizen, we, as representatives of organized labor, urge that this aid be directed not solely to seeking new legislation or new Government machinery designed as a cure-all, but to giving moral support to labor's own efforts, and insisting that trade unions be fostered and encouraged as the most effective agencies making for the wage workers' progress.

ACCURATE INFORMATION.

In a communication received at headquarters recently, we were informed that headquarters was accused of asking the impossible of the organizers of the American Federation of Labor, that we sent to such organizers an avalanche of printed matter and that it was a days' task to read the instructions imparted, and that further we exacted from all applicants such unheard of superiority that few of the workers at our allied crafts were able to get by, or words to that effect.

Perhaps some of our traveling members may have heard similar allegation, and it is principally on their account that the following is offered. We have no complaint to offer against the men and women who carry commissions as volunteer or as general organizers of the American Federation of Labor; we have time and time again testified to the splendid work which they have done for our International Union, if it had not been for that fine army of untiring workers we would not be able to boast of our magnificent organization—for they helped and helped wonderfully—to put us where we are today; the Ninth organization in point of membership among over one hundred National and International Unions.

The American Federation of Labor prints and furnishes to all of its organizers a little book entitled "Instructions to Organizers." On pages 30 and 31 of the 1914 issue of that book, and on pages 29 and 30 of the 1915 issue, will be found the following:

Hotel and Restaurant Employes' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League of America.

Any person employed in a hotel, dining car, cafe, steamboat, restaurant, summer garden, summer resort, buffet, or bar, or similar resorts, as an employe, except such other crafts as are already organized, are eligible to membership in this organization. Ten bartenders, cooks, wine clerks, waiters, waitresses, or hotel and restaurant employes, may secure a charter.

Charter and outfit, $13.50. This covers ten members only. All in excess of that number are payable at 35 cents per member. Outfit includes about everything (press seal included) required by a local for the transaction of business.

Per capita tax to International Union, 20 cents per member per month.

Dues to local Unions, not less than 75 cents per member per month.

Initiation fee for new members to locals, not less than $2, except where new Unions are being formed, when the fee is open for sixty days, the new Union being allowed to make its entrance fee.

Where there are not enough of one craft to secure a charter, it is permissible to organize a mixed local, comprising all branches of our allied crafts.

Colored workers at the trade may be organized into separate locals.

Six months continuous good standing entitles members to $50 death benefit.

Union house or bar labels displayed in any city where no local of the above International Union exists are being displayed without authority.

All charters granted with the distinct understanding that locals MUST affiliate with city central and State Federations.

Any organizer of the American Federation of Labor or any corresponding official of any affiliated organization of the American Federation of Labor, shall be paid the sum of $5 as an organizer's fee for instituting and organizing a local Union; additional remuneration may be approved and paid by the local organized.

The foregoing has not been changed materially for several years, in fact the only change being in the amount of per capita tax, previous to the Denver Convention it was 15 cents and the change in our laws at that convention necessitated changing the figures relative to tax in the instructions. The 1915 issue of the book was printed previous to our convention, therefore the change in monthly dues as provided for by the San Francisco Convention could not have been made a part of the instructions.

Headquarters also sends to the organizers of the American Federation of Labor a type written sheet which substantially sets forth the desires of our International Union; the following is a true copy of that sheet:

Any person employed in a hotel, dining car, cafe, steamboat, restaurant, summer garden, summer resort, buffet, or bar, or similar resorts, as an employee, except such other crafts as are already organized, are eligible to membership in this organization. Ten bartenders, cooks, waiters, waitresses, or hotel and restaurant employes, may secure a charter.

Charter and outfit $13.50. This covers ten members only. All in excess of that number are payable at 35 cents per member. Outfit includes about everything (press seal included) required by a local for the transaction of business.

Per capita tax to International Union, 20 cents per member per month. Dues to local Unions, not less than $1 per month for male members, not less than 75 cents per month for female members.

Initiation fee for new members to locals, not less than $2; except where new Unions are being formed, when the fee is open for sixty days, the new Union being allowed to make its entrance fee.

Where there are not enough of one craft to secure a charter, it is permissible to organize a mixed local, comprising all branches of our allied crafts.

Colored workers at the trade may be organized into separate locals.

Six months continuous good standing entitles members to $50 death benefit.

Union house or bar labels displayed in any city where no local of the above International Union exists are being displayed without authority.

Any organizer of the American Federation of Labor, or any corresponding official of any affiliated organization of the American Federation of Labor, shall be paid the sum of $5 as an organizer's fee for instituting and organizing a local Union; additional remuneration may be approved and paid by the local organized.

It frequently happens that an insufficient number of one craft are employed in a city to warrant establishing them into a local by themselves. Where such conditions exist, it is permissible to form a mixed Union, which can accept as members bartenders, cooks, waiters or waitresses. We have a number of such locals, and without exception they are getting along very nicely.

When an application for charter is being made, the applicants should be required to write their full name and address on the application blank; should the writing be indistinct, it is suggested that the organizer submit a plainly written or typewritten list of the names. That method prevents error and allows the general office to add the names to the mail list of our official magazine, the THE MIXER AND SERVER which, by the way, is sent without direct cost to the members every month; that is if the members are in good standing in their local Union.

A local started with the very best craftsmen generally succeeds; hence seeking the highest skilled workers means unquestioned permanency.

While we are anxious to aid our craftsmen and women to establish local Unions; we look to the organizers to determine whether those whom they seek to form the proposed local are of good character; we don't expect angels, but we do want those as members who command respect; others are neither desired nor will they be permitted to hold membership in this organization.

If the applicants seem indifferent and lukewarm, let them alone; it would require more time and patience to educate them than they are worth.

Our aim is to organize all competent crafts men and women; our ideals are those exemplified by the best in the labor movement of our country, we will not be satisfied with anything less than the best.

The above instructions have been sent out during the last four or five years, and we believe they set forth in explicit language our wishes. We do not urge the organizers of the American Federation of Labor to devote time and endeavor to attempting to organize impossibilities, persons who seek an immediate return for their $2 investment, for it has been our experience that such persons instead of being an advantage to our organization, prove to be the contrary. The passage about character needs no defense, the men and women of our organization have quite enough of a load to carry without taking on as excess baggage, those whose records are such as to make them undesirable to us and the men and women who employ our crafts. The one amendment to the instructions which the undersigned would like to suggest, and that is the amount we offer to an organizer for organizing a local Union. It is worth more than the amount allowed, to seek out capable workers and induce them to establish local Unions.

JERE L. SULLIVAN.

THE OLD-TIME TAVERN.

Considering the wealth of attention that has been given to hostelries from long before the days of Cervantes and Shakespeare down through Washington Irving, and almost the present, there must have been resident in those places of temporary sojourn a fascination which the home life, with all its admitted attractions and comforts, has never been able to afford. The very mention of Joe Willet's tavern, or the Boar's Head Inn, arouses a lickerish feeling in the hearts and minds of the most ascetic; the thought of the symbolic bush, as well as of the time-honored legend, "refreshment here for man and beast," produces a curious mélange that minglest memories of the arrival of Paul at Rome, as read about in earliest years, with Falstaff roysterer with boon companions, Red John, of the White Company, taking his ease by the bright fireside of an English forest caravansary, and Sancho Panza of blessed memory haunting the spits of the kitchen while his lovelorn master apostrophized the stars in praise of the peerless Dulcinea del Toboso.

These once palpable realities have mostly disappeared before the encroachments of the cabarets, and the demand of the six-cylinder on the more ornate establishments which print bills of fare alien as to language and produce a kind of food foreign to other than the sophisticated palate. Music has replaced mush, and the "reach-and-cut-butter" methods given away to personal service in which obsequiousness endeavors to cover a multitude of shortcomings in the forms of little platters that contain some fair samples, but fail ever to fulfill the promise of a real feed following in their wake.

It wasn't so when John Johnson ran the "hotel" at Sinking Spring. Approach to that ancient village from any direction is in itself enough to give the hardy wayfarer an appetite. And John knew it, provided for it, and took the keenest of all delights in seeing the guest stow away an amount of provender suited to the precedent demand created therefor by the trip, the scenery, the kindly greeting, and the wholesome air that ever bathed the green hills in which the little town is situated.

The traveling man of thirty years ago or thereabouts asked nothing better than to spread out his wares in John's "display room" and then hie himself into the capacious dining hall. Small dishes were unknown. Big tureens with the tops hospitably removed ran up and down the table, while the center dish containing the piece de resistance was of such ample dimensions that perfect strangers could have helped themselves out of the extreme edges without getting acquainted if John hadn't seen to it that they melted and knew each other by the fourth mouthful. And the hot bread, white from the oven and smoking deliciously! And the pickled tongue and corned beef, and the "slaw" and the preserves, and the maple syrup and hot cakes, and honey from the hive! Bless you, it was more than Tantalus could have asked for on which to break his extended fast; yet for a man to fail to get clear around was all that John required to bring up his unfailing reference to the perils of dyspepsia, a thing he'd heard of as ailing city folks, but, thank the Lord, he nor his knew nothing about.

And it was not only in the dining room, but in the rooms above and in the stable, where the horses were given the best of fodder and oats and hay, that comfort reigned supreme. A rendezvous, also, of the elite of the village was the "hotel," where they congregated as the sun sank behind the big poplar and told the story of their lives, grown increasingly important as to minor details through repeated rehearsals. It was a Roland for an Oliver, as the village wit measured weapons with the city drummer, the first reciting his most approved anecdotes to an accompaniment of Olympian laughter, while the latter told his with a blank countenance, but twinkling eyes, and then leaned back seriously until the floodgates of mirth broke forth as an earnest that the point had gone home.

Folks lived well those days and none better than in that region. The absence of strong drink never bothered the native element, although it was rumored around that when the two fellows that had the State rights for a patent churn stayed a month at the hotel the supply of medicinal bitters that had been carried for years in Copeland's "store" was entirely exhausted, and that their complaint—whatever it may have been—was as bad at the end as when they started doctoring themselves. Yet this may have been an unworthy canard, for John's wife was a blue ribboner, keen to the odor of the demon, and to whom the flames that licked the everlasting brimstone were patently due to the alcoholic breaths of suffering sinners who failed to repent of their thirst until it was, alas, too late.

If one could only go back to those times—to the glorious days before John, resistlessly impelled by the first lappet of the rising wave of the high cost of living, increased the price of a meal from two bits to thirty-five cents—thereby creating much talk and no small amount of indignation, if one could go back would it be all there as of yore? We fear not. There are some phases of life as irrecoverable as the memory of that which preceded the drinking of Lethe's waters. Among these are the days of the old-time country village hotels, the old-time grub, the old-time landlords, and the old-time appetites. They have gone from Ohio forever, the best imitations left being mere shadows of a former wondrous substance, their most spacious allurements giving a hollow promise to the eye, only to break it to the stomach that had once reveled to the full in a dinner at the Johnson Hotel. And, oh, yes, we forget to mention the pumpkin pie. Stranger, excuse these tears!—Editorial in Cincinnati (Ohio Enquirer, August 22, 1915).

LOOKING BACKWARD.

I guess every normal human who passes 50 looks back about as often as he looks forward, back to the days that were golden. For time has softened every tragedy and hallowed the smiles and tears that were a part of our daily lives, away back yonder.

My mother spent much of her time reading to her children. How she found the time I can not tell. She did find it and the books that touched us deepest were "Little Men" and "Little Women." They were more than books to us. The characters had the breath of life in their nostrils. No Bible ever received a more respectful hearing than did those two volumes. They were gospel to us and to mother, and we read and reread them.

Perhaps you will remember "Nat," nobody's boy, who lived through the pages of "Little Man," a child whom Father Baer and his great-hearted wife, "Joe," had taken into their home and their lives.

I think mother loved the character of "Joe," and found herself like "Joe," who loved her boys and would rather associate with them, play with them and weep over them, than to wear a crown.

And "Nat;" well, I was "Nat," all right, for "Nat" was a fearful liar. He lied without logic or reason. So did I. He lied when the truth would have been far better, and I followed in his footsteps. He was pleaded with and cried over. He was threatened and whipped. And he kept on lying. That, also, was my experience.

In the northwest corner of the old kitchen stood a great cupboard. It seemed then a giant bit of furniture. The lower part contained sheets, pillowcases, tablecloths and the napkins that were used when company came. The upper shelves contained odds and ends. Close to the ceiling one could find a mousetrap, parlor matches, and there was a mammoth cake of maple sugar. How I loved the sweet stuff. I would carry a bit of it for hours and nibble it around the edges. I heard mother tell some women visitors, once, that I always ate the ruffles off my cookey first. As they laughed, I concluded that I had done something smart.

So one day I climbed the shelves, which was forbidden, helped myself to the maple sugar, climbed down and ran out of the kitchen door and was caught red-handed, for there was mother by the door.

How easily and foolishly a child lies. I swore that I had done nothing; that I had nothing in my pocket; that I had not touched the maple sugar; that I didn't even hunger for it, and out by the pump she searched me and found the evidence that damned me.

Without my knowledge she had been listing my perjury for that week, and told me that kindness had been futile and the time for a settlement had arrived. It took place in the little bedroom at the north end of the house.

I can see her now; how grave and sorry she looked; how her lips trembled, what a sense of duty possessed her. She told me that to lie was to sin almost past redemption, and that I must be made to remember. Then she handed me a whip, held out her hand, and told me that I must strike HER one blow for each falsehood that stood against me.

Why, that was what Father Baer did in "Little Men" to cure "Nat" of his tripping tongue. It made me angry. I saw red. To think that any human should try out a story scheme on me. I boiled and raged. I struck the hand twice, and one of the blows was very much of a blow.

And then my heart came right up in my throat and choked me. I fell to the floor and grovelled and cried. I told her that she might kill me, but that I never could strike her another blow.

If Mark Twain, of blessed memory, was writing this, he would say: "And then I grew up and went into the newspaper business, and haven't told a lie since," and from Mark's pen it would sound funny.

I did not know whether I lied more or less after that bedroom tragedy, but the scene is alive this minute, although 40 years have elapsed since it was lived. She sleeps in a little cemetery far away.

I wonder if she knows that I would like to kiss the hand I struck and tell her that I'm sorry.—A. M. H., Times-Star, September 21, 1915.

WHEN IS A "BONE" IN BASE BALL?

"Honus Wagner Declares That Fans Frequently Misjudge Players Who Look Bad on a Good Play."

There should be no set method of playing a game of ball and the policy of "mixing them up" can only be conserved by chance-taking on the bases and at bat. I have often been asked: "When is the proper time to try to steal?"

I always answered this question by illustrating the bad boy at the fruit stand. If he hopes to steal a banana or apple he watches his opportunity and generally tries his hand when the merchant is not looking.

That has been my rule to steal on any occasion when I could get away with it, regardless of the number of outs and conditions of the score, inning or the game. It is a case of using judgment and common sense, and there are no set rules or principles governing what a man will do on the bases.

Some fans get a wrong notion about things and on their account I deplore the use of the word "bonehead." Perhaps if some of them looked in a mirror they would see reflected a real "bonehead," but instead they apply it to ball players when the charge is unfair and the player has done his part. I will cite two instances:

In a game in Pittsburgh we had not scored off Alexander at the dawning of the ninth, and Adams had held the Phillies. Bill Hinchman tripped to the fence with one man out and Alex wisely walked the next two men to set the stage for a play at any base or for a double play. Alexander pitched a high curve ball and Baird missed it, Hinchman being trapped off third. The crowd shrieked in disgust, but changed to wild cheers of joy when Killefer threw wild and let Hinchman score.

As the crowd broke up I heard cries of "luck," "bonehead," &c. The spectators figured that Hinchman had blundered us into a victory. Unfortunately, they were too ignorant of the real principles of the game to know that the "squeeze" play was on with Baird and that Alexander had broken it up with his wide curve. But it was Hinchman's place to go in with the pitch and not wait for the ball to be hit. Hinchman won the game and played his end perfectly only to be termed a "bonehead."

My namesake, Heine Wagner, of the Boston Red Sox, told me a good one of how he endured the roasts for being a "bonehead" on a really bright play. Heine was on second base and they had a hit-and-run play on. He started for third, but instantly saw a soft liner going square into the shortstop's hands. Unable to get back, Heine stood still and let the ball hit him.

The crowd hooted and jeered and one Boston paper roasted Wagner and hailed him as "the worst bit of ivory in the business." They didn't realize that Heine's quick thinking had averted a double play. In getting hit he prevented the catch from being made and a double play resulting from a toss to second. As it was the batter was protected and credited with a base hit. The batter, thanks to Heine's quick bit of thinking scored the winning run, but for days Heine walked around facing charges of being a "bonehead."

A lot of unthinking people rub it in on Fred Merkle when the flimsiest chances come up. Merkle, a fine fellow and a grand ball player, has to undergo taunts that dozens of real "boneheads" escape. I think that the worst injustice heaped on Fred was following the last game of the 1913 world's series. I did not see the play, but I carefully noted the descriptions of it and at this late day I want to give the opinion that Merkle did not pull a bad play and was merely a victim of his own hard luck.

The play in question was in an early inning with Eddie Murphy on third and Baker up. Baker hit sharply to Merkle, who bluffed a throw for Murphy. Baker, coming down the line, dodged Merkle and Murphy streaked home. On a crippled leg Merkle had tried to get two men and didn't get any. And everywhere in the land a deserving ball player was roasted and laughed at the next day.

Merkle only did what we all try to do and often fail to do. It is nothing new for a man to play for two men and not get either.

Fans will cry "bonehead" when a mishap is mechanical and not one of bad judgment. I have heard a lot about the trick of stealing third —when it should and when it should not be attempted. When you make it you are credited with a great play, no matter under what foolhardy conditions you tried it. But if you try it under any promising condition and get caught on a close play you are a lobster.

Let me tell one on the scribes. They take shots at us almost at will and I guess I have a right to get back at them with an incident that occurred in the only newspaper men's ball game I ever saw. The manager of one team was crazy to win over his rivals and in one inning when he had the bases full he hissed into the ear of the runner at first:

"Steal second, you lobster."

"I can't," replied the first base occupant. "There is a man on second and third."

"I don't care," cried the manager. "Run or I'll knock you off that bag."

With that the learned baseball authority threw a handful of dirt at the poor runner, pushed him off the bag and started him toward second. When the commotion ended and the ball had been thrown wildly four or five times, the three runners had scored. Would you call that chap a "bonehead" or credit him with taking chances?

Long Branch had an Americanized Cuban in left field in an exhibition game against us two years ago and he was very fresh in his criticism of the big leaguers. He quarreled with Byrne and Viox and put himself in bad. Viox finally had a chance to "show him up." Jim hit a long home run into the bushes and the Cuban had some trouble finding the ball. Viox circled the bases once and then started around again.

The Cuban emerged from the bushes with the ball as Jim was approaching third on his second time around. The Cuban threw on a line direct for home plate and then tore madly in, following up his play. Gonzales, the Cuban catcher, was in on the joke and he took the ball and pinned it on Viox ten feet from the plate. The umpire called Jim safe and for the rest of the game the Cuban exploded Spanish cus words.—Philadelphia Ledger.

WHAT TUBERCULOSIS COSTS IN WAGES.

Workingmen are always aroused when an employer or a group of employers suggest a reduction in wages. How many of the men who read this article ever stop to think of the enormous sums of money they are losing in wages every year due to one preventable disease, TUBERCULOSIS.

A careful study of 500 Boston men who had consumption, and most of whom died with it, has revealed the fact that these 500 men alone lost over $425,000 in wages as a result of this disease. The investigators in this study were not guessing; they actually looked up the wages that the various men had been getting when they were taken sick; the length of time they were sick, and thus the amount of money they lost could easily be figured up. Each of these men lost on an average in hard cash nearly $1,000 in wages alone, to say nothing of the enormous loss to his family and the community and the uncomputed suffering that this disease caused. It was found that out of the 500 men, 495 had to give up their work because of tuberculosis, and that the average number of weeks of complete disability when they could do nothing, ranged from 58 to 89, depending on whether the men were living or dead at the time of investigation. The average rate of wages was about $11.50 and the total loss amounted to $426,039.

A most conservative estimate would place the number of deaths of workingmen from tuberculosis last year at 50,000. If on an average, every one of them lost $1,000 in wages, the total wage loss would amount to $50,000,000 in one year. The actual loss is probably considerably larger than that sum, a number of writers placing it as high as $150,000,000. It will be plain, however, to every workingman from these figures that an attack of tuberculosis means a serious loss in money, happiness, and health. How can this disease be warded off? Just a few suggestions may save you money. Read them carefully.

1. Live in the fresh air as much as you can. You may have to work inside, but by keeping a window open and by getting a few deep breaths of outdoor air at frequent intervals, you can help to insure your health. If you are at home, keep the windows open, and always sleep with plenty of fresh air circulating through the room. Outdoor play and exercise are to be preferred.

2. Eat all the good, plain food you can digest comfortably. Eat a variety of foods, not all meat or all vegetables, but some of various kinds, such as fruit, meats, fish, vegetables, milk, eggs, etc. Your stomach, bowels, liver and other digestive organs require three things primarily, nourishing foods, liquids, particularly water, and bulk. Many things you eat, such as some vegetables, do not nourish the body, but they are needed for bulk in your intestines to prevent constipation. What you eat will determine to a large extent your ability to resist attacks of tuberculosis and other diseases.

3. Rest is as necessary to health as is food or air. Some people require more rest than others, but every workingman or woman should try to get at least eight hours of rest every night or day in bed. Besides this, everyone should find opportunity to rest and relax while at work between periods of work. One may relax without stopping work, simply by changing or shifting one's position or task. If you work hard with your hands during the day, a certain amount of mental work at night may be a recreation. It is monotony of work, doing the same thing over and over, day in and day out in the same way that kills. Anyone can break the monotony if he tries.

4. This leads us to suggest a recreation or play or exercise as a part of your daily life. Don't play so that you become tired out, for then the play is dangerous. Everyone needs some play, but not too much. You can't work all day and dance and carouse all night and keep your health. Sooner or later the strongest constitution will break and the resistance to disease will become so low that the onset of tuberculosis or other disease cannot be avoided.

5. A hundred more rules and suggestions might be given, but enough has been said, to show that the safeguarding of your health against tuberculosis depends to a large extent upon you. If you live a clean, regular life, your chances of escaping tuberculosis are far better than those of the man who burns the candle at both ends and who pays no attention to his greatest wealth, his own health.

SMOKE STACKS AND CHURCH STEEPLES.

The annual list of magazines and periodicals in general circulation, produced under union and non-union conditions, was issued by the International Typographical Union the latter part of March. In looking it over one does not need to go over many pages to discover that 99 per cent of the trade publications, each the organ of a particular commercial line, are union, while the religious publications of the country, seventy of them out of a possible one hundred and twelve, are published by or in non-union shops, in shops where wages are the lowest, hours the longest and working and sanitary conditions bad and an eye-sore to the community infested by them. "By their works ye shall know them."

Imagine, if you can, seventy out of one hundred and twelve religious publications gotten out under unfair (or worse) conditions, the family circle besmirched with this trash, and children sent to Sunday School to become contaminated with the products of non-unionists. Then judge for yourself what the lowly Nazarene would do if He were to come to this earth and investigate this curse. "They that sow the wind shall reap the whirlwind."

The workingman, from time long ago, has heard "Good will to man" preached on Sunday. He also knows that the sanctimonious, slave-driving taskmaster practices another game the other six days of the week. "Whatever a man soweth that shall be also reap."

Seventy religious publications, of nearly all denominations, the product of non-union and unfair labor, constitute a sad commentary on those church edifices erected to the glory of God, while the poor, half-starved, underpaid and overworked wretches whose toil produces their books, magazines and church publications are crying to heaven to be freed from such slavery. What a divine pleasure it must be to these wage slaves to find this quotation from the Bible in their pay envelopes: "Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you."

What sort of love must these wan, weary and haggard victims of the religious press have for mankind and particularly for ministers and church pillars who, fattening in the vineyard of God, and praying long and loud, forget that many of God's children employed by them are near-hungry all the time and have no place to lay their heads, because they are paid such scant wages. "God is not mocked; for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

The fashionable congregation of the fashionable church lives in the fashionable parts of cities, surrounded by palaces filled with warmth within, from the eaves of which the melting snows of winter drop upon the frozen hovels where poverty hides its haggard face on the very threshold of hypocrisy. And when this wage slavery, created and fostered by religious press employers, cries aloud for relief, the church and its pillars raise their hands in holy horror because the labor union wants to create better conditions for such victims. Let us sing: "Come ye who are weary and heavy laden."

How many sermons have been hurled from the pulpit against this infamy, this huckstering of childhood, this immolation of men and women, on the altar of greed? Who are the members of soulless corporations and manufacturers' associations who spend thousands of dollars to defeat all legislation for the benefit of the people? They are all prominent pillars of the church. All are men whose consciences are as hard as their marrow bones are soft. The church, per se, has guilty knowledge of these facts. It has preached to these "vampires" an eviscerated gospel tailored to fit the consciences of its wealthy pew holders; it has trimmed its theological sails to catch the wafted smiles of men of money. And the men of money, complacently aware of the winking ministry, evolve the sanctimonious scheme of serfdom in the printing office; of religious publications of this country. The church of Christ's day crucified Him. The church of today would probably electrocute Him if He reappeared.

The workingman has seen the pillars of the church "praying" on bended knees on Sunday, and "preying" on their fellowmen (non-union employees of the religious press) the rest of the week. The workingman knows that the severest task master is generally the most devout pew holder. The workingman looks with suspicion upon "apostles of Christianity" who collect so much per word for misconstruing the teachings of Christ. In short, the workingman knows fraud when he sees it, and will have as little of it as possible.

The fact that seventy official church publications are produced under non-union conditions is conclusive evidence that the church has strayed from the path marked out for it by its immortal twelve walking delegates under the supervision of the Grand Master Mechanic of the universe. Truly, "By their works ye shall know them." —The Bricklayer, Mason and Plasterer, (Indianapolis, Ind.).

GREEKS AND THEIR GIFTS.

By GRANT HAMILTON, Legislative Committeeman
American Federation of Labor.

During the temporary cessation of the activities of the uplifters and philanthropists, who are waiting for the decision of the United States Supreme Court upon the constitutionality of minimum wage legislation, it will be profitable for the wage earners to consider carefully the nature of such legislation—to consider the source from which come these insistent demands for minimum-wage legislation.

The heart and core of the movement is a group of professional social regulators who wish "to do things for (or to) the poor wage earners," and who, while arranging their halos, feel a fine glow of personal gratification in helping the unfortunate. In addition to this professional group there is a coterie of employers of unusual discernment and keen appreciation of the policies that will best promote "their" interests, which has given its endorsement to the regulation of wages in private employment by legislation. This in itself ought to be sufficient to arouse concern among wage earners, who are the persons most vitally interested in higher wages. Workers ought to receive higher wages—they must receive higher wages—but is there no other way than that arranged for manipulation by uplifters and those of like predilection?

There is another way by which betterment may come into the lives of those who do the world's work—through organization. By organization the changes that come into the working conditions of the workers correspond to the development within the lives of the workers. As the wage earner catches a vision of better things he reaches out to make them real. He himself grows in initiative, in assurance and in resourcefulness.

Organization develops character. It develops in the workers a knowledge and an appreciation of their power. It teaches them their rights and reveals their opportunities. It develops insistence and resistance.

The general establishment of regulation of wages and hours of work by governmental agencies will foster and induce dependence. It is conducive to inaction—to expecting some outside authority to take the initiative in correcting wrongs, preventing injustice and to assume responsibility for existing conditions. It deprives the wage earners of direct responsibility and power to regulate matters which vitally concern their lives and their welfare.

A peculiar danger threatens the wage earners of the United States in minimum-wage legislation. Under our scheme of government the courts are ultimately the agents to which is entrusted the rights and the liberties of the people. This makes the courts the most powerful single governmental element.

The wage earners have had some bitter experiences with having the courts interpret industrial relations. Their assumption of the right to issue injunctions to regulate labor relations in industrial disputes and their interpretation of the Sherman Anti-trust Act so as to outlaw labor organizations and make criminal their normal activities, are warnings against empowering courts with authority to control industrial relations through court reviews and court decisions upon rulings and awards of labor commissions.

After having for years been hampered and injured by injunctions that forbade men to strike, to picket, to pay strike benefits, to meet peacefully to discuss their wrongs and methods of securing relief; after having been denied by the courts constitutional and necessary rights; after the many judicial decisions and opinions that have either directly or indirectly declared that the labor power of workers is necessary to the employers' right to do business, and since the right to do business has been interpreted as a property right, the labor power of employees has been made subject to all the regulations and interpretations intended for property.

After all these experiences are wage earners willing to delegate to government agencies control over wages and hours of work?

Under the American system, therefore, to delegate authority to governmental agencies is to agree to place ultimate control in the judiciary. Every such agency is infected with the American exaltation of the judiciary—every committee and every commission adopts the customs, the spirit and the methods of the judiciary. Wherever minimum-wage legislation has been adopted court review has been provided in almost every case.

The wage earners of California have been somewhat dazzled by the virtues imputed to the legislative method of promoting their welfare. Though they firmly opposed minimum-wage legislation, yet they inclined favorably to an eight-hour day in private employment. The recent attempt of California employers to secure control over apprentice regulation through the pernicious open-shop bill is a forceful demonstration of how susceptible legislative regulation is to manipulation by employers.

During the last session of the Utah Legislature an attempt to lengthen the work day in the mines came within an eyelash of being successful. The measure did unanimously pass the State Senate, and was about to be railroaded through the house when a friend of labor objected, thereby affording opportunity for the workers to be heard in opposition to the infamous scheme, with the result that the measure was defeated.

The union printers of Sydney, Australia, are facing a serious situation. A decision has been rendered by the Judge of an Industrial Arbitration Court permitting apprentices to be indentured solely to operate linotype machines, thus destroying the apprenticeship regulations of the union, which provided opportunity for a thorough course of instruction and experience in every division of the composing room.

These experiences ought to convince the wage earners that they can trust their welfare only to economic action.

To be sure, organization, with its concomitant of benefits, does not yet embrace all of the workers, but the remedy for that is more organization. Let all skill, thought and resources be devoted to the work of organization, and none be lost in vain search for magic quick methods, and the new life in the cause of labor will bring wonderful impetus and development to the organized labor movement.

ALONG THE FIRING LINE

A "LEAK" IN THE STRATEGY BOARD.

THE MIXER AND SERVER has never carried any false ideas with regard to the program which the so-called "Church in Action" proposed to carry out just as soon as they could see their way sufficiently clear to begin operations. The "Strategy Board" of the Anti-Saloon League is what can be called interlocking, something on the order of "interlocking directories" which cut more or less of a figure in the expose made public by the Congressional investigation of something about a year ago, and which in substance means, that the members of the Board of Directors, Officers, Executive Committee, etc., of the Anti-Saloon League are active in other anti-organizations and so-called Christian Associations under innumerable titles; and being thus placed they plan their campaign with the end in view of finally "cutting off" any and everything which does not actually come under their supervision and guidance. In one State they are publicly engaged in promoting what they call Sunday or Sabbath observance, in another they are engaged in creating censorship over the theaters and "movie" shows and pictures, in another they are preparing the public against the use of tobacco by anti-cigarette laws; in still other States pool and billiard rooms are "agents of the evil one" and must be obliterated. In fact one could fill pages with the things which the antis intend to prohibit as quickly as they succeed in crippling the beverage industry of America. If the readers of THE MIXER AND SERVER imagine that the foregoing is an exaggeration or minus foundation let them peruse the following article and be convinced:

CANDY AND PIE NOW UNDER BAN OF ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

Enthusiastic Adherent of Prohibition Enumerates A Startling Number of Pleasures Which Must Go—Tea, Coffee and Cake on the List—Suggests Closing of Tobacco Shops and Delicatessen Stores and Would Abolish Dancing—Tea, Coffee, Wearing Apparel and Other Personal Habits To Be Tabooed.

The following letter from a member of the Anti-Saloon League and the comments upon it in the New York Evening Sun furnish an interesting piece of evidence as to how far people should be allowed to ride their favorite hobbies, and when they should be obliged by public opinion to come to a halt:

A news dispatch from Topeka, published in The Sun a few days ago, gave some hint of the extremes to which "Prohibition" will presently run in this country if the sanity of the people at large does not put an immediate curb upon it. It appears that the new State Civil Service Commissioners of Kansas have promulgated a set of rules under which users of cigarettes are to be barred from public employment as well as those who drink. We received about the same time a letter signed "Herman Trent, of the Anti-Saloon League," and dated from 148 Tenafly road, Englewood, N. J.—apparently a real person—in which the following startling declaration occurred:

Speaking now in my personal capacity, and not as a member of the Anti-Saloon League, I will say that I regard the anti-liquor crusade as merely the beginning of a much larger movement—a movement that will have as its watchword "Efficiency by Government." If I had my way I would not only close up the saloons and the race tracks. I would close all tobacco shops, confectionery stores, delicatessen shops and other places where gastronomic deviltries are purveyed—all low theaters and bathing beaches. I would forbid the selling of gambling devices such as playing cards, dice, checkers and chess sets; I would forbid the holding of socialistic, anarchistic and atheistic meetings; I would abolish dancing; I would abolish the sale of coffee and tea, and I would forbid the making or sale of pastry, pie, cake and such like trash.

EXAMPLES OF FANATICAL LEGISLATION.

To the ordinary man this may seem the mere raving of wild fanaticism. As a matter of fact everything Mr. Trent has listed has the advocacy of large groups of otherwise intelligent people, and all but one or two items have been included in prohibitory bills introduced in the Legislature of one or more States. Indeed, we can recall several favorite subjects of prohibition which Mr. Trent omits—probably because he didn't think of them—as, for instance, "peek-a-boo' shirt waists, abbreviated bathing dresses, novels of all sorts, but especially love stories; chewing gum, hatpins, flowers at funerals, ditto at weddings, kissing, soda water and the presence of women on the streets unaccompanied by men after sundown in summer or 8 p. m. in winter. We are neither jesting nor exaggerating. All these things have been proposed and advocated with more or less weighty arguments. They have all been and daily are included in forecasts of the future when the world becomes really well regulated.

COMMENTS ON OREGON LAW.

Neither do we believe Mr. Trent is jesting or exaggerating. The tone of his letter suggests that he is in deadly earnest. The principal topic is the new Oregon law which compels the recipient of alcoholic liquor from another State to file an affidavit with his county clerk that it is to be used for sacramental purposes only. Mr. Trent thus comments:

"Yes, that little clause in the oath that any receiver of liquor in Oregon must take was put there by means of a trick, and that trick was thought out by the officers of the Anti-Saloon League of Oregon, as I happen to know. Now, the question is, What do people like your correspondent propose to do about it? The joke is decidedly on them. Oh, how they hate tricks and jokers in State laws, these liquor fellows who used to be such adepts at slipping in the jokers themselves! What superior moral beings they are! They wouldn't stoop to such moral baseness as the Anti-Saloon Leaguers are guilty of—not they! They believe in 'personal liberty' they do—liberty to drink what you please—whisky, gin, beer, cider, rum, pure alcohol, varnish, arsenic, prussic acid, liquid paint or any other poison.

"When Oregon's law goes into effect that State will be the highest and driest spot on earth. Please take note that the slips bearing the signed oaths must be filed with the county clerk and that he must treat them as public records, allowing access to them at any time. Now, what we Anti-Salooners propose to do is to keep consulting those records, follow them up and see what each receiver of liquor has done with it. It will not be hard to find out whether he has used it for sacramental purposes, and, in case he has violated his oath by drinking the liquor as a beverage, prosecute him for perjury to the limit of the law and let him rot for a few years in jail. Do you think that will hold them?"

SHOWS SPIRIT OF INQUISITION.

Assuredly the writer of the above is not joking. He is animated with the fervor of the Spanish Inquisition of a Scotch conventicle. He is quite sure of what is right, or rather of what is wrong, regardless of any one else's views and—vengeance is his, not the Lord's. As he can not whip or burn in the present age, he would have the evil doer rot in jail.

These cases which we cite, the action of a State Department and the declaration of faith of an anti-saloon zealot, seem to us to be highly instructive. They are characteristic of the prohibition spirit, the will to rule the private lives of men and women with the iron hand, strictly for their own good, of course, but without the slightest regard to individual will. The prohibitive tyranny grows and becomes bolder with use, and each shackles that it imposes on the community is an encouragement and an incentive to devise another. There is no end to it. Mr. Trent takes pains to say that he speaks for himself and not for his League. We think it likely that few of his associates would be as sweeping as he, but all of his fads have their supporters; some of them are no doubt favored by one group and others by another.

TOBACCO NEXT.

Quite certainly when or if the liquor "crusade" be won a large party will be formed to back up Dr. Pease and the virtuous Annette Hazleton in warring on tobacco. After the Demon Alcohol, the Siren Nicotine! The movement is almost here, and war on theaters, cards and dancing may not be far off.

THE MIXER AND SERVER follows The New York Sun in this instance, in fact, believes that Trent is not only a real person, but the possessor of the "plan of campaign" and in a moment of thoughtlessness sprung a verbal "leak," in fact guilty of "telling tales out of school."

J. L. S.

HOW PROHIBITION OF THE SALE OF LIQUOR AFFECTS THE CULINARY WORKERS.

During the campaign here in the city of Minneapolis on the county option question, I took occasion to address a personal communication to Mr. Geo. B. Safford who is at the head of the Anti-Saloon League forces and the Hennepin County Dry Committee, upon the subject of the effects of prohibition of the sale of liquor on the culinary workers.

To my surprise I received a reply (not an answer) to my letter. Mr. Safford absolutely evaded the interrogation of my communication and put forth a plea of ignorance of how making Hennepin County dry would affect the culinary workers and in the next line admitted that it might work a hardship upon some of us. Still he said he could not understand how "making old Hennepin dry" would be a catastrophe to the culinary workers, for surely the people will have to keep on eating and will surely have more money and better appetites for the reason that they will not be able to get liquor. And in the daily press and on the platform the dry speakers have been very positive in informing their listeners that it will be very easy to get liquor if the saloons are voted out by sending out of town or going to St. Paul after it. Did you ever hear of such "lodging"?

In my reply to Mr. Safford, I surprised myself, so to speak, for as I went deeper into the subject, seeking a plausible explanation of how prohibition would affect the culinary workers and the restaurant business, the facts became so simple and plain that I determined to place them before the brothers and sisters of our big International for future reference, which they might refer to in case they, too, are confronted with prohibition fanaticism, as we are here.

The following facts are perhaps well known to all who may read this article, but you may be in a predicament similar to the one from which I have just extricated myself, if you are asked how prohibition will affect the culinary worker.

In the first place, it is well known that liquors are used to a large extent, as an appetizer, as a stimulant, and as an after dinner beverage by the moderate drinker, who are 95 per cent of the drinking population. This is more often the case with that class of men and women who go to make up the business element of the population of our large cities; and they are generally engaged at their respective occupations in the down-town districts where are also located the saloons and the restaurants and cafes where it is possible for this class of people to satisfy their appetites for alcoholic beverages. It is a general custom for such people to patronize the cafes and restaurants down-town for their noon lunch, where, in many instances, liquors are served or at least permitted with lunch. With prohibition comes the elimination of alcoholic beverages from the restaurants and cafes but it does not destroy the appetite of the consumers, and therefore they have, in the majority of cases, laid in a supply at home and when the lunch hour rolls around they are inclined to "grab a jit" and go home where they may obtain a cooling bottle of beer or a refreshing glass of old wine with their lunch. And so a large portion of the restaurants lunch trade is driven away by prohibition.

Then we have another class of trade—the wage earners who are accustomed to patronizing the restaurant for their noon meal. With the coming of prohibition we always find a surplus of labor and a consequent reduction of wages, a raise in taxes and other similar results, which all go toward compelling the wage earner to carry a cold lunch from home because they are unable to afford the price of a meal in the restaurants and often can not produce the necessary "jit for a jitney" ride home. And so the restaurant is again the loser.

Then there is the transient trade—great hordes of traveling salesmen, etc., who are all more or less accustomed to moderate indulgence in alcoholic liquors. They always "hop, skip and jump" the dry towns, at least they do not waste any time there, and so the restaurant man has another reason for his desire to sell out cheap.

The night trade in a dry town is about as abundant as are apples in the desert; walk the streets at night and you are all alone, as early as 10 p. m. So the restaurants close at 8:30 and the lights are all out until 5 a. m.

So with a full crew in the kitchen and dining room the restaurant man finds it necessary to reduce the day force and "can" the night help, and those who are lucky enough to hold their jobs remain at reduced wages and are compelled to work from 14 to 16 hours per day. And still this man Safford had the nerve to state that he did not think that prohibition would be a catastrophe to the Culinary Workers. Do you understand, dear reader?

And there are still other dire results of prohibition for us to consider.

The bartenders, the brewers and maltsters, the bottlers, the teamsters, and many others who will be thrown out of work by prohibition will all be looking for a job. Any old kind of a job, as one would say, will do temporarily. The culinary worker's job is not immune to the attack of the unemployed, in fact, it is the first for the man who is broke to look for, because he knows that he will be sure to get something to eat, anyway. In fact, we often find good cooks and waiters working at other crafts, which become affected by prohibition, and this is more often the case with the bartenders. So there is a surplus of labor and you are liable to lose your job—at least suffer a reduction in wages or be compelled to work longer hours.

Here are some figures for you to study over; they are a lesson in themselves. This is an absolutely true abstract taken from the last U. S. Census in 1910. By the term culinary workers, I have taken into consideration all restaurant, cafe and lunch-room owners, cooks, waiters, waitresses, and porters, not employed in stores, etc.:

	States.	Population	Cul. Workers	Per Cent
Kansas	1,690,949		8,151	.00485
Maine	742,371		4,315	.00581
Minnesota	2,075,708		15,128	.00728
Cities.
Topeka	43,684		258	.00590
Portland	58,571		376	.00642
Minneapolis	301,408		4,023	.01334

Do the above statistics prove anything to you? Please take notice that the state of Minnesota has 50 per cent more culinary workers than has either Kansas or Main. There was no prohibition territory in this state at that time. The city of Minneapolis has twice as many culinary workers as have either Topeka, Kansas or Portland, Maine. Think it over.

Another thing—look in your roster and see if you can find a H. & R. E. I. A. and B. I. L. of A. local in either the state of Kansas or Maine. Think it over.

Our fourth vice-president, C. W. McCurdy, in Des Moines, Iowa, recently wrote me that conditions were rapidly becoming worse in that city for the culinary workers and that recently five restaurants went broke in one single day.

Des Moines saloons were closed on February 15 last. I was there then, and I left the latter part of March, because I lost my job, just as I have tried to picture to you herein. I know by experience. I have traveled through Kansas and Oklahoma, too, but now you could not send me through either state if you would donate railroad fare; I know they are no good for a culinary worker.

Now, brothers and sisters, start and read this all over again: then the next time you run into a prohibition campaign get busy; don't wait for some one else to start something: just go to it and fight like hell until the last vote is cast. Get to the union men in your town and make them help you; they owe it to you to try and save your jobs and you can force them to come clean. Take it up with the central body in your town and put it up to them so that they can not squirm out of doing their part. Do your duty to yourself, your wife, your children and your fellow workers. Fight as you never fought before.

Yours for success and personal liberty.

Fraternally,

H. WADE MILLER,
Press Secretary, Local 593.

HOW PROHIBITION WOULD "SAVE THE BOY."

Distorted Result of Unnatural Trench Work.

We hear so much from the prohibition orator about "saving the boy." There is an argument that refutes this statement, for besides the boy that the prohibitionist want to save, there is another boy whose welfare must be looked after.

The Anti-Saloon League wants to save the boy from the saloon and the "temptations of liquor."

If the home influence of a young man are of the proper kind there need be no fear of the failure of the young man to succeed in life. In this nation there are vast numbers of families in which the children are familiar with beer, wine and whisky, and in these same families it is a rare thing to find an intemperate member.

In Belgium, beer is as common a drink among the children as milk is in the United States, and in Belgium, we find more people over 80 years of age than in any other country of the world.

The young man and young woman of today who want to achieve moral success in their lives must realize the existence of that law known as the "freedom of choice."

All morality is based up this law.

The young man who is placed in a narrow trench at one end of which is a goal, and who is placed so that he is facing this goal and must walk toward it and cannot leave the path—this young man is not exercising free will nor does he deserve any credit for what he is doing because he has not had the opportunity to do otherwise.

True morality is gained only after the individual has decided what is bad and what is good and only after he has resisted the bad and has achieved the good.

So the young man or woman living in the cloistered home—a home in which a constant surveillance is maintained to keep from the young folks the attractions, the happenings and the occurrences of daily life in the outside world, coming from this cloistered home, when the barrier of restraint is let down, is apt to fall.

Constant association with the benefits and privileges of nature soon teach us by experience how to correctly use the benefits and privileges.

There need be no hue and cry of "save the boy" in regard to the liquor question if that boy receives proper home training and if he, himself, is the right kind of a boy.

If a father or mother must fear for the welfare of their boy when he is out of their presence, and if there is any doubt in their minds as to his conduct and his possible danger when he is away from home, then the parents of that boy are to blame.

Again we hear that if we wipe out the liquor industry we will save the next generation; we will have boys and girls who have never seen a saloon. Here, however, the argument of the prohibitionist runs counter to a law of nature.

Men drink because of their appetite for drink; because of a natural desire, a natural craving for the beverage which they drink. Grant the absolute abolition of the liquor business as represented today by the legal manufacture of these beverages and it is safe to say that the drinking of alcoholic beverages or some similar substitute will continue.

Every nation has some national beverage and this has always been true and always will be true.

If the beverage is misused, regulation of its use follows, but it is folly and foolishness to believe that they can be made to disappear. Prohibition does, without doubt, stop the legal manufacture and sale, but it does not stop the manufacture and use of the beverage.

Moreover, the method of making these beverages is so simple that it is folly and foolish to believe that the production of these beverages can be made to disappear.

Prohibition does, without doubt, stop the legal manufacture and sale, but it does not stop the manufacture and use of the beverage.

As to that other boy. A dispatch from Bluefield, W. Va., March 12, says that a 9-year-old boy, said by the federal authorities to be the youngest bootlegger on record, was arrested in a raid by the United States marshal's posse in the mountains, twenty miles from Norton. According to revenue officers, he was found with an 18-year-old cousin operating a complete still which had a capacity of 30 gallons. This dispatch was printed in the Kansas City Star, March 12.

Here then, is one of the results of prohibition. The boy becomes a bootlegger, a moonshiner, and the tool of the blind tiger. He not only is in constant contact with the beverage, but further than that he is an associate in an illicit business.

The patent medicine, vile whisky and imitation beers, drugs, etc., that are dispensed in dry territory through the illicit sellers, will have a worse effect upon the boy than those beverages which are made under the government's supervision and which are sold in places which are licensed and regulated by law.

There is another boy, and that is the son of a wage earner, whose wage depends upon his position with the liquor industry. How about the hundreds of thousands of boys whose fathers are employed by the distillers, brewers, bottle works, allied industries, etc., and to whom prohibition means the loss of their income and the loss of their daily bread.

Is it fair to assume that after a man has spent a number of years of his life as an apprentice and finally has achieved a position of trust through experience, bought by many years of service, to ask him to cease that occupation which is paying him a living wage and accept in exchange, employment as a common laborer?

This is what the prohibitionist demands. Aside from the loss of the individual man there is the loss to his family. His boy loses the opportunity for an education, he is prevented from getting the proper kind of food and clothing. There must be stinting and economy in the family budget.

Moreover, in a State like Ohio, for example, where last winter there were 200,000 unemployed: 200,000 men who were out of positions and were walking the streets ready to take any position would add an additional 100,000 men.

The casting of these extra thousands of men into the army of the unemployed would flood the labor markets and the disastrous results which would follow would affect not only those men who had lost their positions, but would affect those who are holding positions.

We must remember that all classes of labor are represented in the liquor industry. For example, thousands of teamsters take the beer and whisky to the consumer.

Then there are the brewers, the clerks, the stenographers, glassworkers, office boys, salesmen, carpenters, lithographers, printers—all these must seek work elsewhere.

Prohibitionists say that they can go into other lines of work; easily said, but hard to do.—Trade Union News (Philadelphia Pa.)

GOODNESS CAN NOT BE VOTED

Into Existence, Says Rabbi, Emphasizing Education Before Legislation.

Rabbi David Philipson, of the Rockdale Avenue Temple, in his sermon on "Let There Be Light," yesterday morning, said in part:

"The entire story of the rise of man from lower to ever higher stages is a commentary on that ancient but ever modern word 'let there be light.' The ills from which mankind is still suffering are due largely to a disregard of that command. All real and effective reforms are simply a diffusing of light. Campaigns of education are altogether of this same character.

"In our free country the notion is widespread that goodness can be voted into existence. It is still to be largely learned that legislation cannot make the people virtuous. All the laws that are not prepared for the enlightenment of the people become dead letter laws. Education must precede the statute among a free people if the statute is to be effective."—Cincinnati Enquirer, Oct. 3, 1915.

PROHIBITION DID NOT WORK THERE.

Delegates who represented local Typographical Unions from Massachusetts at the convention of the New England Typographical Union, held at Portland, Me., were furnished with splendid opportunities to learn how near they have come to solving the liquor problem in prohibition Maine, according to a writer of the Worcester (Mass.) Labor News, who was among those who attended the convention and took advantage of the opportunity offered to make a careful study of the situation as it exists in Portland, and, as he was informed, also exists in all the larger cities and towns in Maine.

In Portland, within a stone's throw of the police station, booze can be obtained in at least fifteen saloons, which are as wide open as they are in Worcester or Boston.

In all the hotels booze may be obtained at all hours of the day or night, and in any quantity, and no questions asked.

At banquets, smoketalks or outings no trouble is experienced in securing all that is desired, and to the visitor to Portland there is absolutely no telling but what he is in a wide-open town.

Maine has enjoyed (?) a prohibition law for more than sixty years.

For more than forty years, or while he lived, Neal Dow, the greatest exponent of prohibition that ever lived, it is said, was responsible for the present law, and in memory of that great so-called statesman and prohibition advocate, who made a vast fortune by selling blankets at a great profit to the soldiers during the Civil War, the system is being hypocritically continued, through the machinations of a combination of aristocracy and political tricksters.

There exists in Maine a queer political situation, which it is said has for many years been responsible for not only keeping Maine in the prohibition column, but for the lack of enforcement of the law.

The Republican party is accused of not enforcing the law, because it is unpopular with the masses.

The Democratic party, which, by the way, is now in power, takes the stand that if the present enforcement of the law is good enough to suit the Republican machine, they see no reason why they should also make their party unpopular by enforcing it.

But the real reason, as it is explained by those who are just looking on and who are positively disgusted with the system, is that both Republican and Democratic machines understand each other thoroughly, and that with influential citizens and liquor dealers they are in league, and contend that all are better off with the present law on the statutes than with a license or local option law.

These are of the opinion that a certain few are getting a good rake-off and that as long as the people can be fooled the present system will be continued.

They realize that prohibition, as it is being operated in Maine, is colossally hypocritical, but, they explain, the voters in the cities are powerless because they are outvoted by the people living in the rural districts, who not only are acquainted with existing conditions, but evidently do not wish to be.

The conditions in Maine are similar to those which existed in Vermont prior to the adoption of license in that State some ten years ago.

Graft, dishonesty, rotten politics, and all other evils existing in Vermont during prohibition times, and referred to in the Labor News, according to residents of Portland, exist in Maine, and they are hoping that something will happen some day that will settle for all time the liquor problem in the State of Maine.

Residents of Portland and other cities in Maine look upon the present system as hypocritical in the highest degree. They realize that such a system as is in operation in Massachusetts would be preferable, but their hands are completely tied by the vote of the rural communities, who through ignorance have voted to maintain the present obnoxious law for nearly sixty years.

A close observation of the Maine prohibition law as it is in operation in Portland cannot help to convince any but the most prejudiced that prohibition is a colossal farce.

BUTTERMILK AND BACTERIA.

The popularity of buttermilk as a food and a beverage is attested by its widespread sale. Any drink which can succeed in invading the precincts of the saloon and compete for sale, as buttermilk now does, side by side with alcoholic beverages deserves attention. The plan of allowing milk to undergo fermentation of such a character that the products are not unpleasant or unwholesome for human consumption, yet serve as preservatives to prevent undesirable types of decomposition, is not new. The fermentation product chiefly depended on in such cases is lactic acid, although in certain types, alcoholic fermentation may also be in evidence. Buttermilk belongs to the acid type; it usually contains from 0.6 to 0.9 per cent of acid. Strictly speaking, buttermilk is a by-product of butter-making; but with the development of the milk industries, the demand for buttermilk has frequently been met by fermenting the skim or separator milk which remains as a by-product of the cream trade. The fermented product is not literally buttermilk, but it may be indistinguishable from the latter in composition and properties. The use of these fermented milk products has been favored, not alone for their intrinsic food value, but also for accessory reasons. The specific fermentation products have been reputed to have a "tonic" action in the digestive tract. Special virtues have been attributed to the lactic acid bacteria, particularly in relation to putrefactive changes in the alimentary tract. Aside from any alleged therapeutic virtues, there can be no doubt of the nutrient value of the beverages. With the growing attention devoted to the bacteria which milk may harbor, and the recognition of the dangers which they may entail, it is not strange that buttermilk also should demand bacteriologic consideration. Heinemann, of the Department of Bacteriology and Hygiene at the University of Chicago, has demonstrated that the presence of lactic acid in milk will destroy the germs of dysentery, typhoid, diphtheria and cholera. The slower milk sours, the greater is the danger of disease germs surviving. Acids other than lactic acid are frequently present in buttermilk. This beverage, Heinemann reminds us, should therefore be looked on with suspicion, especially if heavily polluted, unless it has been prepared from pasteurized milk. There is, however, says The Journal of the American Medical Association, a remnant of satisfaction to all lovers of the fermented product to learn that the chances of buttermilk becoming a carrier of infection are small.

Brother G. L. Stanley who formerly occupied a position on the official force of Local 696 and who is still a member of that old local, paid headquarters a visit during the first days of Autumn and delivered quite a load of good cheer and kind wishes from the boys of our Norfolk local. Brother Stanley had been vacationing in the hills of Arkansas and was the picture of rugged health, something which he did not possess previous to his trip to the state which made the "fiddler" famous and the "traveler" likewise.

Always pleased to hear from the boys of the Old Dominion state who, despite the fact that their good old state is dry, maintain 696 as of yore—in the best of good standing.

OUCH.

The best little all around well wisher for your local union don't amount to three whoops in the place of perpetual heat in comparison to the member who digs into the field and locates the boy and girlie who has not heard anything about the Union, and who in his own crude but sincere way tells 'em just what the union amounts to and what it is trying to bring about, and finally converts them to the idea of "united action" and brings their application to the next meeting of the union and never rests until they have ridden the good old goat and become acquainted with every kink on the back of that faithful animal. Between the two, we somehow lean, (and make two portions of the lean, please), toward the live wire who stows away his good wishes and hops right into the game and tries to help the union to move forward on the road which its founders marked for it on the industrial map. Get among the live wires and quit the good wishers bunch.

AUTUMN ROMANCE.

Were you a leaf gold tinted,
And I a wondering breeze,
We'd gaily go a-flying
Where streams are lullabying
Through woods by autumn minted,
To far, old, welcoming seas,
Were you a leaf gold tinted
And I a wandering breeze.

Were I a sunbeam youthful,
And you were the guardian tree,
Whose gold and crimson treasures
I praised in amorous measures,
My words however truthful,
Would doubted be by thee,
Were I a sunbeam youthful
And you the guardian tree.

Were you green garlands wearing
And I the harvest sheen
With serenade of passion
I'd sing September's fashion,
Till, modest green forsaking,
You'd blaze, a brilliant queen,
Were you green garlands wearing
And I the harvest sheen.

Were I the moon of reaping
And you the ripening grain,
In my blue dome supernal
I'd brew a draft nocturnal
To set the world a-sleeping
And flood your bright domain
With the glory ever sweeping
Round castles far in Spain.

CHAT OF THE CRAFT

NEUTRALITY WHICH INJURES.

We have read so much about neutrality of nations that we should be able to understand its meaning, although every man one meets has his own definition of being neutral, and some of them become quite unneutral in trying to press home on others their views.

There is another species of so-called neutrality, however, which, to say the least, is decidedly injurious to the cause of labor.

"I am neither a union man nor am I a non-unionist; I am a neutral," is what those men and women who are engaged in the catering industry say, in substance, when they decline to become attached to one of our local unions. Being in sympathy with us and our movement may be all right for those who are not employed as bartenders, cooks, waiters or waitresses; but as we understand the meaning of the word sympathy, it cuts mighty little figures in caring for and supporting a movement such as ours, for we can not go to the printer nor to the family of a deceased member and tender gobs of sympathy in lieu of current coin of the country.

Neutrality which sets up so-called social clubs, but which are dual unions under that cover, may be regarded as neutral factors, but we are from Missouri and must be shown.

The men and women employed in the catering industry are indebted to our International Union for the protection which they enjoy. Such protection may not be as noticeable as other things which could be mentioned, but it is there nevertheless, and it was produced by our effort and the expenditure of our money.

Getting down to brass tacks, so far as the catering industry is concerned, our International Union, despite the fact that it does not enjoy the affiliation of a large number of those men and women, is the one and only agency in all of North America which has prevented the fanatical aggregations—the so-called Church in Action—from obliterating the industry in many States and Provinces.

Neutrality, which sneaks its protection from the coin of others, from the activity of others, is not neutrality. It is taking sides with our natural opponents; it is, in fact, a help to them and a handicap to us. It is, in a few words, AN INJURIOUS NEUTRALITY, which we call by its proper name NON-UNIONISM.

If there were any chance to consider seriously the suggestion of John Wannamaker that the United States tender $100,000,000,000 to Germany and buy Belgium from their control there would be a fine chance for some able bodied kicking to transpire in this great and glorious land of the free, and dollars—most held by such men as Saintly John, of Philadelphia. If John had not gotten so close to "Billy" Sunday he might be induced to direct his generosity toward the owners of investment which Sunday and the Antis confiscated when they brought about dry laws in several states which need not be enumerated. Such a sum of money would go a long, long way toward helping genuine Americans who were deprived of a means of earning a living to learn a new trade, and not be forced to eadge their way while so doing; some of that immense sum could be used to construct decent and passable highways, something which America woefully needs and some of it could be used to bring to book the Junta of Trouble whose agents and advocates are bending effort endeavoring to create friction between the employers and employees of the United States.

If Wannamaker is so deeply concerned in the distress of Belgium and her people, why don't he encourage them with his money to come to America and settle down on some of the immense uncultivated tracts of Arizona, Oregon, Colorado which were made dry by his friends of the fanatical aggregations which we have little doubt he helps support in their social warfare. He could induce his boon friend, "Bill" Sunday, to act as chaperone and show them how to make a good living, providing Billy's "inducement" was financially large enough.

What is that saying about charity? Let some of it be displayed on this side of the big ponds.

CHOOSE AND CHEWS.

Luke McLuke says that "a dyspeptic is a man who has to choose his food carefully and then chews it carefully." All of which may remind some of our boys and girls who handle and serve food, that many of the patrons where they are employed do neither, and the wonder of it is, that they seem to be burly sons of guns, who seem to have cast iron stomachs and troubled with vulgar health.

QUICK FINISHES.

Many a fellow brings his vacation to a sudden close by trying to run an ace full into four tens.

Bryan tried to butt into the miracle class by transforming an eagle into a dove.

Painting the town red at night brings a blue morning.

The man with the grip is a traveler, if he had a bundle and walked he would be a tramp.

Laziness and hard luck are inseparable twins.

If thinking harsh things of another meant imprisonment, what a snap graft contractors would have building jails.

Some men get stewed before they boil over, and it is the latter condition which keeps the hurry-up-wagon busy.

Some fellows credit is so good that about the only thing they are able to borrow is trouble.

"FOOLS IS RIGHT."

Two friends were hanging on a bar and speaking of the war
And wondering what all those guys should shoot each other for.
"What fools those fellows are!" said one. "What fools they are to fight!"
The other man agreed with him and answered: "Fools is right!
The Kaiser sure will lose his goat—he hasn't got a chance
To win from England, let alone from Russia and from France."
"Aw, rent a hall!" the other said, "You're talking like a yap.
When this here war is ended France will not be on the map."
And so they argued back and forth until they came to blows,
And ere the barkeep stopped them they had smashed each other's nose.
And one of them had just remarked: "What fools they are to fight!"
The other had agreed with him and answered: "Fools is right!"

CHEMISTS TRY OUT JAGLESS DRINK FOR 1916.
"Whatcha goin' t' do when the State goes dry?"

This question, which, since the last election, has been one of absorbing interest to thousands, may be effectually answered at the New Washington Hotel roof garden tonight, when chemically-prepared substitutes for alcoholic beverages—yet which contain no alcohol—will be served at the subscription banquet given delegates to the convention of the American Chemical Society. These beverages, four in number, have been invented—or concocted—by the local chemists, and they are going to try them out first on the members of their own profession.

The experiment is being watched with considerable interest by J. C. Marmaduke, manager of the New Washington Hotel, and by many others. The first is known as the "Washington cocktail," and the others are "Puyallup-ade," "Loju" and "Washington creme-de-minthe." If it is found the drinks nearly approach the beverages for which they have been substituted, they will be served regularly at The Washington. Those who have had the privilege of tasting them in advance of the banquet say it is impossible to detect the difference in the taste between the new drinks and the old. As to the effect they have nothing to say.

The banquet, which is to be an eight-course affair, will be the climax of a day of recreation for the chemists. Dr. Horace G. Byers, of the University of Washington chemistry department, will preside, and Dr. E. C. Franklin will be toastmaster.—Seattle (Wash.) Times, September 2, 1915.

THE AFTERMATH.

Observers have been keeping silent vigil, waiting for the some thing to happen which usually does after Sundayism attacks a city and their watchfulness has been rewarded. A tigress at the Philadelphia Zoo began to show unmistakable signs of trouble, she had somehow gotten hold of one of the Philadelphia papers containing a review of the "Trail Hitters" enlists in the army of Zion, she seemed to absorb the array of near facts described therein and with a peculiar wheeze in her voice turned her head, grabbed her tail in her mouth and before her keepers could prevent her, she had bitten four inches from the end. One of the keepers reported to Superintendent Corson that he believed the sight of the paper with Sunday's name and the effect of a Bryan Cocktail put Juliet, the tigress, on the hummer. Good thing that the two legged "Trail Hitters" have no furry appendages, if they had more than likely there would be some sights in between where the Schuylkill and Delaware flow on to the sea.

FOUR QUARTS TO A GAL.

Young and inexperienced Miss writes to the editor of Queries and Answers column in one of the daily papers as follows:

"I expect to give a dinner to four girl chums next week and have decided to serve ice cream as dessert. How much ice cream should I order?"

The editor responds, without batting an eye: "Order 16 quarts and you will be safe. This follows the old rule of 4 quarts to a gal."

How can you reconcile your action in purchasing non union products with your advocacy of "See that the man who serves you wears our button?" Raise your rain stick or you will get wet.

THE MORATORIUM.

I think that the man who owed me ten
So long I've forgotten when
He touched me for it, must have shared
The war timidity and declared
A moratorium.

One poem which I sold last year,
That gave at least one reader cheer
(The author), isn't paid for yet
The editor's declared, I'll het,
A moratorium.

I've held a promissory note
So long I know it now by rote
And can recite it sans a blunder,
I wonder if the signer's under
A moratorium?

If you cannot collect your dues
Don't fret yourself into the blues.
Some day, mayhap, the clouds will drift
Away and, as they scatter, lift
The moratorium.

But here's a thing, 'tis hard to spy:
Judge why, old man, can't you and I
Take refuge, till the war is over,
In that delightful field of clover—
The moratorium?

—St. Louis Republic.

GIVE THIS THE ONCE OVER.

Your local union may not be as perfect as you would like it to be, but you can't advance it to a perfect machine by simply finding fault. You can do much better work in its behalf if you try to find a remedy for what ails it.

Progress, from a numerical point of view, is attained only by those unions whose membership have the habit of putting into practise similar methods as made the organized labor movement the power which it is today. Very few men voluntarily sought out a member of a local union and asked that their application be taken up for consideration. There are a few, it is true, who entered the organized labor movement of their own initiative, but, in proportion to the many who were invited, they are a decided minority. If you are acquainted with any person working at the catering industry whom you feel is the right material; is "there with the know how," so to speak, that is your man, and if he has all of the ability and sense which you ascribe to him as possessing, he will take your advance in good-natured discussion. Once that point has been reached, it is up to you to furnish reasons for your convictions: why you are a member of a union, and it is peaches to pickles that you win him as a convert. Why feel timid about such matters? You were asked to become a member. Is there any good reason to feel that the other fellow is immune to your persuasion and reasoning?

Brother Albert Forni, who has been Secretary of Local 304 of Hartford, Conn., for several years, sent us a communication recently which is in the nature of a valedictory, for Brother Forni has resigned as Secretary in order to take over the City Hotel at Putnam, Conn., which he has purchased and will conduct as one of, if not the leading catering establishment of that thriving city.

Brother Forni has made an army of friends during his residence in the city of Hartford, and among them practically the entire labor movement of that city; he leaves Hartford with loads of good wishes for his success, and that wedded to his unquestioned ability, should be quite an asset to him and the city of Putnam.

The members of Local 304 will miss the active and aggressive work of their former secretary, but in making the sacrifice they feel that Brother Forni will, despite absense from their ranks, keep in sympathetic touch with the progress of Local 304 and its members.

We join with the many friends of Brother Forni and wish him the greatest measure of success in his new field of endeavor.

A REAL HOME.

"And what is a home? It is, of course, quite different from a house. It is something which is put inside a house. It is a building not made with hands. It belongs to the things which are unseen, rather than to the things which are seen. A house is a product of human handicraft, a home is a creation of the heart. A house is constructed out of matter, a home is such stuff as dreams are made of. A house is four walls with a roof, a home is a complex memories and associations and affections. A house is built by gold, a home is built by love. A small and shabby home may be set up inside a spacious and costly house. We have all been guests in places where we felt there was more house than home. On the other hand, a palatial home may be erected inside a cottage. A house can be built in a year. To build a home is the work of many seasons. A man can have numerous houses, he can have but one home."—Exchange.

Every hat with the United Hatters label purchased by our members materially assists the members of that organization to remain steadily employed. Make a mental memorandum of the foregoing and besides giving your own patronage put in a word of boost to those who are not members of a labor organization.

REVOLUTIONS.

Before Man parted for this earthly strand.
While yet upon the verge of Heaven he stood.
God put a heap of letters in his hand,
And bade him make with them what word he could.

And man has turned them many times; made
Greece,
Rome, England, France—yes, not in vain
essayed,
Way, after way, changes that never ceased.
The letters have combined: something was made.

But, ah, an inextinguishable sense
Haunts him that he has not made what he should.
That he has still, though old, to recommence,
Since he has not yet found the word God would.

And Empire after Empire, at their height
Of sway, have felt boding sense come on,
Have felt their huge frames not constructed right,
And drooped, and slowly died upon their throne.

One day, thou sayest, there will at last appear
The word, the order, which God meant should be.
Ah, we shall know that well when it come near.
The band will quit Man's heart—he will breathe free.

—Matthew Arnold.

JUSTICE AT LAST.

After years and years of unjust accusation and prosecution, New Jersey has been exonerated. A New York health commission reports that New York breeds its own mosquitoes and that they are quite as pestiferous and annoying as the New Jersey brand. We expect Bill Kavanagh on receipt of this information will call a conference of our boys who live near the meadows and jubilate. As an added attraction we suggest a tug of war between two teams composed of New Jersey and New York "skeeters" to be refereed by one of those "trench diggers" from Northern Indiana or Southern Michigan. Oh, joy!

WHAT A MILLION IS.

An income tax is paid only by 444 persons in this country whose income exceeds $1,000,000 a year.

An income of $1,000,000 a year is 5 per cent on $20,000,000. Either amount to the average human mind is virtually unimaginable. A million a year is about $2,740 a day, $114 an hour or $2 a minute.

It is a fifth of what it is said to be costing Germany every day to make war. It would pay a salary of $1,000 per annum to 1,000 persons. It could pay $4 mileage for the whole distance to the moon, or put a girdle of dollars 40 times around the earth.—Philadelphia Evening Ledger.

UNION LABEL BOOSTERS.

Some of our members advise us that they are unable to secure underwear, hosiery, and knit goods, such as knit ties, sweaters and jackets with the Union Label attached in their cities and that their dealers make the claim that such goods cannot be obtained.

For the information of such members the following Official List of Manufacturers of union Made Textile Goods of the character described is offered; this list is taken from the official magazine of the United Textile Workers of America:

Manufacturers of Union Made Textile Goods.

Wright-Health Underwear—Cohoes and Troy, New York.

Waterford Knitting Co.—Waterford N. Y.

Wm. Moore Knitting Co. (Inc.) Granite Mills, Wm. Tierney, Mgr., Cohoes, N. Y.; selling agents, Thos. Muir & Co., 253 Church street, New York City, N. Y., and Jas. Malone, 346 Broadway, New York City, N. Y.

Moore & Tierney, Erie Woolen Mill—James Tierney, Mgr., Cohoes, N. Y.; Selling agents, Thos. Muir & Co., 253 Church street, New York City, N. Y., and Jas. E. Malone, 346 Broadway, New York City, N. Y.

Titlow & Pleiffle—Hosiery—Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Unity Hosiery Mills—Unity Brand Hosiery—Milwaukee, Wis.

Cache Knitting Works—Logan, Utah.

Everlasting Garter Co.—77 Bedford street Boston, Mass.

W. H. Martin—Wellmade Shop Apron—518 Andover Street, Lawrence, Mass.

Logan Knitting Factory—Sweaters, Jackets and Hosiery, Logan, Utah.

If any of our members are seeking information which is not contained in the foregoing, it is suggested that they communicate with General Secretary-Treasurer of the Textile Workers, whose address is 86 and 87 Bible House, New York City, N. Y.

If your local dealer will not stock up with Union Label knit goods after securing information as to where he can obtain these goods it will be fair to assume that he is not as friendly to labor as we believe he should be; therefore it devolves on you and your fellow workers to "convert" a dealer and then give him your patronage. The most convincing argument which we know of is the proper expenditure of union made wages with concerns which TRY to keep on hand FAIR GOODS. Fair goods as we understand the term, mean Union Labeled Goods.

THIS SOUNDS FINE ON A COLD NIGHT.

Supposing that every time you wilfully absented yourself from a meeting of your local union—wait a minute, now, don't hurry to the next paragraph, it may berottener than this one, can't tell how you may view it—but supposing that for every absentee mark against you during the year were to be turned into a double jitney—ten cents, and that ten pennies were collectable without putting the screws down real hard, a sort of offering on your part which you turned over to the secretary, and he in turn forwarded these one hundred mills to headquarters, and they were set aside for the purpose of erecting a home for old, disabled and otherwise knocked out members where they could spend their declining years, eating the very best which a bountiful land could supply and money procure and all of that sort of thing—a perfect Resting Place, a REAL ON-THE LEVEL HOME, without a breath of or even a suspicion of a breath of this thing which people call charity. You know what I mean, a sure-enough place which when you are about close to the selvage and feeling all run down, where you could lie to without tangling yourself up in a lot of red tape. Got the picture in your mind's eye? All right, well, supposing that all those nimble dimes held a convention, got together so to speak—now get your pencil—how much would headquarters collect in twelve months time, and how long would it be before a—here you, come back and finish this squib—How long would it be BEFORE we could have the greatest and grandest edifice or series of such, devoted to the purpose set forth herein and above all and heretofore.

That's all just now, but ain't it a doggoned shame that something like that couldn't be did?

BUT MAYBE HE DIDN'T HAVE TO TELL HER.

An Ohio woman declares her husband has not had a bath in eight years. Some men tell their wives everything.—McCreary County, Ky., Advocate.

TEXTILE WORKERS LOSE THEIR SECRETARY-TREASURER.

Albert Hibbert, Secretary-Treasurer of the United Textile Workers of America, died August 24th, after a protracted illness.

In the demise of Brother Hibbert the Textile Workers lose one of their able champions and splendid executive officers, and the labor movement loses one of its leaders, a man who occupied in the hearts of all who knew him a very warm spot.

Secretary Treasurer Hibbert was buried at Fall River, Mass., August 27, 1915. His funeral was attended by an immense throng of labor unionists, among whom were many of our members resident in that city.

OUT FOR THE MEMBERSHIP CHAMPIONSHIP

Now that Boston has "copped" the Base Ball Championship of the world, our "fans" and "rooters"—and it is said Boston beats the universe for Boosters and Rooters—are getting in trim to show every big town on the map that Beantown is really a leader in any endeavor, be it sport or otherwise. We have, as every member of our International Union knows, one great big local in Boston, but that in insufficient glory for the Rooters of that city, they desire, in fact, like the little boy in the advertising—won't be satisfied until they reach it, and the "it" in this instance is to make Boston the champion from a membership point of view in our International Union. Well, Beantown and all of your Royal and other brands of Rooters, we bid you welcome on the field of competition, but we might as well tell you now as later on, you've got to "GO SOME" if you can wrest the laurels from the city on the shores of the Pacific where you held your Eighteenth General Convention in June last. If Beantown really gets into the field with half the amount of ginger her Base Ball Rooters display, there is going to be doings worth watching.

QUICK, DOC!

The man who asserts that the labor movement is a frost and failure because it has not succeeded in enlisting more than three million workers in America, can join hands with that other fellow who said that the labor movement was on the downward path by reason of the "terrible" influence of the saloonmen and its utter disregard of the advice and urgings of the so-called "Church in Action."

This duo will be tied up one of these days and the medical fraternity will tap 'em for "simples" and find exactly what they were looking for.

HOW SHRAPNEL IS MADE.

Aside from the poison gases and the fire bombs which the German armies have used in Flanders, the most deadly engines of modern warfare are the shrapnel shells which are used by all the armies in the present conflict. The most effective parts of the shrapnel are the lead bullets contained in the shell, which are thrown out in a conical shape when the timing fuse, which explodes the powder at the base, blows the nose off the shell freeing the bullets packed within it. In an eighteen-pound shell the range of these bullets is approximately 250 yards.

The lead bullets, which are generally half an inch in diameter, are made from a number of different compositions, the most common being that of 87 1-2 parts lead and 12 1-2 parts of antimony. The actual number of lead bullets contained in a single shell varies with the different Governments which manufacture them. In the American fifteen-pound shell there are 252, in the British fifteen-pound shell there are 235. The bullets in the American shell have six flattened sides. In foreign-made shells the bullets have spherical sides, an arrangement which does not allow of so close packing as the American plan.

There are two methods of manufacturing shrapnel shells which are commonly used at the present time. By one of these the bullets are cast in iron moulds which are split down the center to facilitate removal after casting. By the other, slugs are cut from lead wire and struck between dies in a heading machine. One hydraulic wire press and 14 heading machines, which have a producing capacity of 850 bullets a minute, are used for the manufacture of flattened bullets. One hydraulic press and eight heading machines, with a capacity of 950 bullets a minute are used to produce the spherical bullets.

The lead bullets have been cast from lead wire by a process which is gradually going out of use, and a newer and more rapid process has taken its place. In the method used almost exclusively at present the molten lead is poured into a cylinder from which it is pushed out through a die by means of a plunger, the metal having time to settle before it is forced through the press.

The bullets are shaken together in a tumbling machine or barrel for an hour, the action of one against another removing all unevenness on the sides. A careful watch is kept over the tumbling operation, as it is necessary to see that the bullets conform to a certain standard of weight. A variation of one dram to a pound of bullets is allowed, 41 bullets a pound being the accepted standard. Ten pounds of lead rod produce six and a half pounds of bullets.—New York Times.

THE POST CARD FIEND.

I must write my love a letter; I must write my love a line, for the memory of her sweetness lingers like the taste of wine; so I'll buy a post car funny and I'll send it to my honey and she'll know I love her dearly and remember that she's mine.

In a dark and distant day, when from home I went away, I sent my love a daily letter, writing long and hard. But that's all put behind me; if you look now you will find me sending kisses to the missis on the bottom of a card.

Yes, I buy a post card funny with a penny of my money. On the narrow margin of it I inscribe these words, "Will write." And do I ever do it? No, that's all there is to it. I simply send the postal and wish myself goodnight.

For the long and written page no longer is the rage, but every form of missive on a postal card is sent.

Do you separate or marry?

Do you hasten on or tarry?

You can spread the joyful tidings for the small sum of one cent.

Let us say you're sweet on Laura, feeling great affection for her. Buy a postal with a picture of a bottle large of glue. She surely can not doubt it; she'll know how you feel about it, for printed on the card is this: "Dear one, I'm stuck on you."

Let us say that Laura bonny smiles upon some other Johnny, and you think it's time she learned a little lesson you can teach.

Just figure what a roast'll be conveyed by just this postal printed:

"Dear One—You are not the only pebble on the beach."

What a lot of time she's saving, saying naught of tears and raving, when she sends a postal back to you so plain that all can see. No time or trouble's wasted, and yet you're surely basted. for her picture postal's printed with the legend—"23."

Are you flush or are you busted?

Are you bright or are you rusted?

Did you make a million dollars?

Did you beat the game or lose?

As a hero did they hail you? Did the sheriff come and jail you? Did your friends come round and bail you?

A card will tell the news.

Is your family increasing? Do the waves roar never ceasing?

Is the country very beautiful? Or did you make that deal?

It surely isn't any trouble to expend a penny and tell them on a picture postal card just how you feel.

The art of letter-writing is a practice too be-nighting. Say you wished to marry Laura, but she left you in the lurch. Why, off you run with laughter, for you know that you are after a funny card entitled, "I was waiting at the church."

From the country or the city you can send these post cards witty, and it may be good old Gabriel will send a postman's whistle blow. and a card sent by St. Peter will declare in heavenly metre:

"You were a picture post card fiend! You're wanted down below!"—New York Evening Sun.

A SECOND REVIEW OF THE GRAND ARMY.
(By Bret Harte.)

The 50th anniversary of the close of the Civil War will be celebrated this fall by the surviving members of the Grand Army of the Republic by a grand march on Pennsylvania avenue in Washington; to repeat, so far as modern conditions will permit, the review which took place in 1865 at the close of the war, when the united armies of Grant and Sherman, 200,000 strong, passed in line before President Johnson and his Cabinet. This poem, written immediately after that first march, is one of the most stirring things ever composed by Bret Harte.

I read last night of the Grand Review
In Washington's chief avenue—
Two hundred thousand men in blue,
I think they said was the number—
Till I seemed to hear their trampling feet,
The bugle blast and the drum's quick beat,
The clatter of hoofs on the stony street,
The cheers of people who came to greet,
And the thousand details that to repeat
Would only my verse encumber—
Till I fell in a reverie, sad and sweet,
And then to a fitful slumber.

When, lo! in a vision I seemed to stand,
In the lonely Capitol. On each hand
Far stretched the portico, dim and grand
Its columns ranged like a martial band
Of sheeted spectres, whom some command
Had called to a last reviewing.
And the streets of the city were white and bare;
No footfall echoed across the square;
But out of the misty midnight air
I heard in the distance a trumpet blare,
And the wandering night-winds seemed to bear
The sound of a far tattooing.

Then I held my breath with fear and dread;
For into the square, with brazen tread,
There rode a figure whose stately head
O'erlooked the review that morning,
That never bowed from its firm-set seat
When the living column passed its feet,
Yet now rode steadily up the street
To the phantom bugle's warning;

Till it reached the Capitol square, and wheeled
And there in the moonlight stood revealed
A well-known form that in State and field
Had led our patriots sires:
Whose face was turned to the sleeping camp,
And after the river's fog and damp
That showed no flicker, nor wanling lamp.
Nor wasted bivouac fires.

And I saw a phantom army come,
With never a sound of fife or drum,
But keeping time to a throbbing hum
Of wailing and lamentation;
That martyred heroes of Malvern Hill,
Of Gettysburg and Chancellorsville,
The men whose wasted figures fill
The patriot graves of the nation.

And there came the nameless dead—the men
Who perished in fever swamp and fen,
The slowly-starved of the prison pen;

And marching beside the others,
Came the dusky martyrs of Pillow's fight,—
With limbs enfranchised and bearing bright;
I thought—perhaps, it was the pale moon-light—

They looked as white as their brothers!

And so all night marched the nation's dead,
With never a banner above them spread.
Nor a badge, nor a motto brandished;
No mark—save the bare uncovered head

Of the silent bronze Reviewer;
With never an arch save the vaulted sky;
With never a flower save those that lie,
On the distant graves—for love could buy
No gift that was purer or truer.

So all night long swept the strange array.
So all night long till the morning gray
I watched for one who had passed away;
With a reverent awe and wonder—
Till a blue cap waved in the length'ning line.
And I knew that one who was kin of mine
Had come; and I spake—and lo! that sign
Awakened me from my slumber.

ANYTHING TO SAVE OVERHEAD EXPENSE.

The proposition of using telephones at tables, permitting guests to "phone" their orders to a checker, he in turn transferring the order when ready for serving to a waiter was tried without much success some years ago. The idea has not died, for according to The Telephone Review the system has been installed in a confectionery store at Plainfield, N. J., and is working nicely. In the store described by The Telephone Review, light lunches are served, a telephone has been installed for each table and is connected with a Central switchboard, the checker in charge of the receiving end take the order, transfers it to the cook who with his assistants place the order on a tray which is carried to the table and served. Each table is numbered and the system from that point of view is perfection, but one can readily appreciate that if such a system were installed in a large establishment it might not prove so competent.

The idea may seem to save labor on the part of the waiter, but close analysis will show that its main object is to save the wages which might be paid to additional waiters necessary where "waiting for the order of the guests" is almost half the time devoted to table service. The electrical appliance people are devoting time and attention to dining room service and it is not a far look ahead to see double the number of "busses" used now and proportionate to the increase of these workers will be the decrease of skilled waiters. Some years ago when bottled beers and cocktails made their bow many mixers predicted the disappearance of the skilled mixologist, but instead of decreasing in numbers the opposite is the case; perhaps after all the installation of the "phones" at tables may prove as big a boon to the sore footed garcon whose numbers will increase instead of decreasing.

OH! THE NAUGHTY THING!

The bridegroom was dressed in light tan shoes and gloves to match.—Francitas (Tex.) Bee.

"LITTLE CHAWLEY."

Rev. Charles Stelzle, ex-machinist, having solved the labor problem as commissioner of the Presbyterian church, is now going to solve it once more as a publicity agent of the prohibitionists. The Rev. Charles, who was a prolific copy-producer for the labor press, in which he showed what the religious organizations were doing to uplift labor by adopting welfare resolutions, intends to add to the troubles of labor editors by burdening them with weekly news letters setting forth his views after four or five years' "wide study of the economic aspects of the liquor problem upon an independent, unbiased basis." Stelzle succeeded in stirring up more or less religious fractionalism in the labor movement, and if he can influence the workers to subordinate the really important questions in which they are interested to also split on the beer issue, he sure will deserve to be classified as a great leader of men, or misleader.—Cleveland Citizen, July 31, 1915.

"Little Chawley" made his appearance on the stump as a Dry Spell-binder during the campaign in Hennepin County, Minn., and no doubt spread the usual bunch of Bunk about being a Trades Unionist and Workingman's Friend; in fact he has become so accustomed to slinging out that "labor's friends' salve" that, like the Maine fisherman, he will soon believe the "dope" himself. We have no reliable authority to refer to in the matter of time which it requires to make a minister, but we have a sneaking suspicion that we do know the difference between a four-flushing Card Carrier and a Trades Unionist, and if "Little Chawley" is not the former we are still from Missouri and have to be shown.

Hennepin County voted WET by a majority of over nine thousand; this too in spite of the fact that "Little Chawley's" employers, the Anti-Saloon League poured money and workers into that city for many weeks in advance of the campaign. If the voters of Hennepin County, which includes the city of Minneapolis, did not make a good sized dent in that $300,000.00 fund set aside to make that and other cities Dry, we miss our guess. Well, "Little Chawley" uncovered himself in Minnesota, he weighed in heavy but came out exceedingly "light" and has not proved to his employers that he can deliver the labor vote, therefore it is a safe prediction to make, that his cinch has been considerably weakened. We suggest that in the next town Reverend (?) Stelzle visits for the purpose of converting the workingmen to vote out the saloon, that he give them his Union Record first shot out of the box, so that they may fully appreciate how he loves the Labor Movement and the men and women thereof.

SAFETY FIRST.

A man who travels out of Oklahoma City made a grave mistake the other day, or night rather. It seems that he got off the train, saw a lady whom he thought to be his wife, took her by the arm, and instead of going home, went to a nearby hotel. He registered as man and wife, using his own name. Then up the elevator to the room. Now comes this man, and claims to his real wife that he discovered his mistake immediately upon arrival at the room. She says he didn't discover it until morning and she is suing for a divorce. Oilton men should take heed and examine your wives carefully before bedtime.—Oilton (Okla.) Gusher.

CONCILIATION PREFERABLE TO COURTS OF TRIAL IN SETTLING DISPUTES.

(By Justice Edgar J. Laurer, Conciliation Branch, New York City Municipal Court.)

For more than a hundred years the principle of conciliation worked well in Denmark, and 90 per cent of all civil cases in the kingdom were brought to a peaceable settlement in the conciliation court. I AM CONVINCED THAT MOST OF THE CASES WHICH CLOG AMERICAN COURTS COULD BE DISPOSED OF AS EASILY AND CHEAPLY IF THE PRINCIPLE OF CONCILIATION WERE ADOPTED HERE.

A court trial is a more civilized way of settling disputes than the duel or the battlefield. But in its last analysis it is still a fight.

People who fight are apt to get hurt, either in war or in the court. If they expect to get justice in either way they are apt to be disappointed. The best they can hope for is a decision based in one case on the strength of their arms, in the other on the strength of their "case."

Our new court will not be a court of contest. It will be a place to settle disagreements, not to fight them out. It will not only save time and money; it will save fighting.

IF IT DOESN'T ALWAYS BRING EXACT JUSTICE IT WILL OFTEN BRING SOMETHING BETTER. IT WILL BRING A FRIENDLY UNDERSTANDING, A THING ALMOST IMPOSSIBLE AT THE END OF A CONTESTED SUIT.—The Labor Union, Columbus, Ohio.

There are millions of brooms made in America. The union made broom costs no more than the non-union product, and if in some instances it does, remember that the cheaper broom may have been made in a prison workshop.

BILLY SUNDAY FOE TO LABOR.

Boston, Aug. 13.—"Billy Sunday is the best strike breaker the country has produced," This is the declaration of Roger W. Babson, in the Boston Post.

"There is a league to enforce peace in Philadelphia. It is financed by millionaires. Billy Sunday is the best strikebreaker the country has produced, and they are willing to pay him for strikebreaking.

"These men, whom I know personally, on the Billy Sunday committees, are the most conservative men alive. There was going to be a big strike on rapid transit in Philadelphia, as I know, since employers pay my office $90 a year apiece to keep them informed of labor conditions.

"Our statistical organization collects for capital rather than for capital and labor both, for the simple reason that capital pays us and labor won't.

"Some one told the rapid transit people that Billy Sunday could fix them up and avert the strike for two or three years. He does it by preaching that it doesn't matter what they get in this world, they can't lay it up in heaven.

"You have never heard him say a word against corporations and capitalists. He asks what difference it makes whether you get two dollars or five dollars a day, so long as you are only to be here forty years or so, and in hell an eternity.

"I know for a fact the contributions these men are making, and I know they are men who have never had anything to do with evangelical work. They wouldn't stand for him a minute if he hadn't something to deliver besides the gospel.

"Of course, the salvation of the church depends largely on schemes to earn more money. Why pay the doctor $500 to save my appendix and the preacher fifty cents to save my soul?

"It's all hocus pocus. Not that the doctor is overpaid. Very few people are overpaid. But I'm not criticizing Sunday on his money-getting at all.

"What I'm criticizing is his reactionary doctrine of heaven and hell.

"I think the labor people ought to get busy and have some one keep them posted as to where Billy Sunday is going next."

NOBODY HOME.

If, by some freak of nature, all the excuses which members of our local unions have unearthed, dug up, constructed, fabricated or originated, and offered them for failing to attend to the business of their respective local unions, or for non-attendance at meetings of the aforesaid local unions, were to be enlisted on one side in army fashion, and on the other side the innumerable excuses offered to the folks at home for being out late at night, using only those which directly or indirectly lay the blame on the union—such as committee work, late meetings, and all of that class of "crip" in the excuse line—were lined up and both sides accounted as old-time gladiators and ordered to "wade in to a finish," holy mackerel, or is it sacred cod-fish! Well, any good ejaculation will serve the purpose. But say, what a fearful din those two armies would make; and attraction, why it would make a boiler factory engaged in turning out warship boilers on a hurry-up order from Congress sound like steen tons of feathers ahead of a gale on Long Island Sound or Lake Erie along about November 29, between the hours of 11:00 p. m. and 2:00 a. m. on the 30th. And by the way of getting this thing placed right, where on all of this North American continent could such a battle take place. Supposing that such an attraction could be staged and you had the gate privileges, and you obtained a "jitney" from each person as a lookeron at the "Battle of Excuses," how much mazuma would you be able to drag down to the First National after the tickets had all been accounted for? The ladies chorus will kindly render that beautiful hymn, page 13, "A Poor Excuse is Better than None." Meanwhile the ushers will take up the usual collection, and we hope the good kind brothers and sisters will respond generously, for winter is coming on and we need coal.

GOOD HEALTH.

Witch hazel is an excellent lotion for large pores; also for red, veiny patches.

An instantaneous cure for hiccough is to take one teaspoonful of common vinegar.

Alcohol "baths" are thrice beneficial when the hand is substituted for the "sponge" of old-time usage.

People who suffer from the heat in the hands and feet can obtain speedy and easy relief from the same by putting inside their stockings and gloves a small portion of fine oatmeal.

When the hair becomes matted and oily from heat—as it often becomes if one travels all day with the hat on—wonders can be done to it with alcohol and orris root. First part in into strands and rub between the strands on the scalp with clear alcohol. This gets out much dust and oil. Then, when the scalp is dry, sprinkle the hair, not the scalp, generously with orris root. Brush this out thoroughly after half an hour and let the hair hang, in a breeze if possible, throughout this half hour.—Exchange.

I DID NOT RAISE MY BOY TO BE A SOLDIER, BUT—
I did not raise my boy to be a coward,
To bear with blood unstirred whate'er befalls,
To skulk, or shirk, or flinch in times untoward,
To stop his ears when need or honor calls.

I did not raise my boy to hide in pleasure
When duty summons him to suffer pain,
To count mere easeful plenty, good—to measure
All by paltry rule of private gain.

I would not have him cringe when proud ambition
Fares forth full-armed to work its lawless will,
To use his own upon some base condition,
Or look on weakness outraged and be still.

Better, far better, that my son were lying,
Fordone and shattered on the stricken field;
Better, far better, that my boy were dying,
Where freemen, sore forfoughten, scorn to yield.

I love him not? Ah me! Too well I love him
To have him live at ease, full-fed and whole,
A recreant to the righteous God above him,
A traitor to his birthplace and his soul.

NO SMILING MATTER.

The Good Book says 'twas Adam's rib,
But I for one believe
That just his funny-bone was used
To manufacture Eve.

Because since then the race of men
(They can't deny its true),
Have laughed at every single thing
We women say or do.

They ridicule the clothes we wear,
No matter what their style;
And be it hoops or hobble skirts,
They each provoke a smile.

To see us sharpen pencils
Just tickles them to death,
And when we climb a ladder
They laugh till out of breath.

They love to put us on the cars,
And watch our awkward strides,
And when we get off backwards
They grin and hold their sides.

They snicker when we drive a nail
Up somewhere in the house;
They chuckle when we sign a check,
Or frighten at a mouse.

And so it goes! These men folks think
We're absolutely funny.
There's just one time they never smile,
'Tis when we ask for money.

Those who still are in doubt that Rockefellerism is not connected with the prohibition movement should peruse the following admission made by Mr. Bower, the head of the Rockefeller interests in Colorado, while upon the witness stand before the Federal Commission on Industrial Relations:

Chairman Walsh: "Didn't you use the prohibition sentiment that was strong in the State to get support for what you called the law and order platform, that was for the Colorado Fuel & Iron Co. and the others to aid in ruthless prosecution of the strikers and the union officers, and a relentless policy of suppressing those men?"

Mr. Bower: "It was all interlinking and locked together."

It might be added that President Welborn, of the C. F. & I. Co., also admitted that when the prohibition issue was in doubt he turned loose several hundred office employees to agitate and pull for votes and thus clinched a victory for the drys in Colorado.

It will never be known of course, how much money the Rockefellers have dumped into the campaign fund of the Anti-Saloon League, as that organization issues no public statement to show where its financial support comes from. It is claimed that John D., Jr., contributes $100,000 a year to the prohibition cause and his sister, Mrs. McCormick, chips in $50,000 per annum. Old John unquestionably adds another hundred thousand to the fund to spread dry propaganda.

About a year ago New York dailies carried a story that the Rockefeller family had donated a total of $3,000,000 in recent years to the "temperance cause," which means that the prohibitionists obtained the bulk of the contributions with which to prosecute their out-of-work campaign.

It is past understanding how any thinking workingman can paint himself to be deceived into voting for prohibition when he studies the interests behind that movement. Rockefellerism stands for everything that is injurious to the welfare of the working class. Rockefellerism spells industrial slavery.—Cleveland (O.) Citizen, October 16, 1915.

A PURIST.

Prof. Thomas L. Lounsbury said at Cambridge in a talk on English:

"But precision can be carried too far. The ultra-precise, even when logically right, are really wrong."

"An ultra-precise professor went into a hardware shop and said:

"Show me a shears, please."

"You mean a pair of shears, don't you?" said the dealer.

"No," said the professor. "I mean what I say. I mean a shears."

The dealer took down a box of shears.

"Look here, professor," he said, "aren't there two blades here? And don't two make a pair?"

"Well, you've got two legs. Does that make you a pair of men?" And the professor smiled at the dealer triumphantly through his spectacles.

"He was logically right, but, really, he was wrong."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

HOW MUCH OF A LOAD WOULD YOU BE REQUIRED TO TOTE.

If you were forced to carry one pound of lead in your pocket for every time you with deliberateness and intent to defraud the members of your local union of your presence, of the priceless pleasure of looking on that freckled or battle scarred "map" of yours and for each succeeding time during the year another one pound of lead was added to the first deposit in your pocket, this, understand for frittering your time away somewhere when you SHOULD have been to the meeting, of your local union—no penalty being imposed for on the level work for wages and at that good union job of yours—getting this all straight are you, can't repeat this time. Anyway how long do you calculate it would take you and a few other "nice" boys to stop the ructions in Europe for lack of lead to make bullets.

The member who takes that stay away from meeting thing as a huge joke, may be an alright good scout and be truly anxious to see the little union grow and thrive and prosper, but—and several more buts added—it will take some pretty fine smooth argufying and smooth language to convince the regular attendants at meetings that the chronic absentee is anything but—Write the rest of it yourself, this little Journal goes into the hands of folks at home.

If yonder first you stand,
Wave back some message you may cheer us by,
And spur us on to dare to do or die,
From battlements on high.

Waft back to me some strain that there you sing,
Some note to still this longing wondering,
If first you see the King.

CORRESPONDENCE

JERSEY CITY, N. J.

SIR AND BROTHER—The old saying, "you can't keep a good man down" has come true in Jersey City and the boys are beginning to realize the benefits derived from organization. It's hard, very hard, to convince some people of the benefits derived from organization, but if people would only look around and see the conditions in which some poor laborers are working they would think differently. A teacher once told her class there was nothing like observing things. For instance, she said: "I walked into a dry goods store one day and inquired of the clerk if a certain family lived upstairs. The clerk stood amazed and answered, 'Why, there is no upper floor to this place,' which was true. Quite embarrassed I walked out."

This is the condition a man finds himself in when he tries to go it alone and don't observe the benefits or organized labor. We also see some politicians, when they get elected to office, put up a terrible howl if they see the city employes organizing a union for their self protection. But they forget themselves that it took a political organization or some other organization to elect them or they would never have been heard from. So, why not give the workingman the privilege of self-protection. The whole United States is one grand union. Where would America be if there was no Union of the States? The Civil War was a fight for principle; our fight is for a principle—square pay and fair hours. If big corporations see fit to import labor over at cheapest wage, they can get them, and these men, after working a certain length of time in this country, wake up to the fact that they cannot exist on their wages and strike, causing riots and bloodshed inside the corporation grounds and outside of it, bearing in mind that they are not affiliated with any union whatever; whose fault is it that the corporations to cover themselves up, blame the union? And bone-headed politicians believe them.

There are two classes of people in this country who will never believe in organized labor. They are the big financial pilots and the very ignorant. There are exceptions in these cases, but both imagine that unions are trying to rob them; one for asking for square wages, and the ignorant class for asking for dues, whereas if they could look into things in the right light they could see that labor organizations were not only out for their good and welfare but also out for the good and welfare of the United States.

The waiters and bartenders are going to hold a stag at Elks' Hall in the near future, and this is going to be some stag. Our business agent, Brother Muldoon, has his Howitzer turned on the one thousand-ticket mark, which all the boys claim will be a cinch to hit. That's the spirit that means success.

Brother Bill Kavanagh drops in to see us regularly. The boys think the world of Bill. We hope to see Brother Fred Oyle and Kavanagh and the rest of that famous bunch of singers at the stag that night with Fred leading them in a white suit. Some singer, Fred.

The Local Joint Board and Alliance Board are in good working order, and the future is beginning to look brighter for the boys.

We have had our trouble with Prohibitionists and other fanatics, but we had to have our eyes peeled down in the legislative building or we probably would have lost out. Boys, keep your eyes on those fellows. Brother Kavanagh and committees from different locals did good work in the assembly chambers when the local option bill came up. To hear them talk a sane man would come to the conclusion they were heavy stockholders in Welch's Grape Juice. Well I guess that's a pretty rich concern, but grape juice is a bad substitute for bread or corn-beef and cabbage, so be careful, don't let them take your bread and butter and hand you a bottle of grape juice. Fight them in the legislative assembly, question every candidate running for assembly or any other office how they stand and pledge them. This will show the liquor dealer also that we are out for his interest and it is to his interest to stick to us.

Wishing the general membership success, I remain,

Yours fraternally,

TOM WESTCOTT,
Press Secretary, Local 488.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I will inform the readers of the official magazine, the MIXER AND SERVER, that we gave our first annual smoker in our clubrooms, and it was a grand success. There were 120 present; speeches of all sorts were made, and a big feast was next in order and we had everything on the bill of fare. As members of our International Union have not read of the excellent program of Local 505, I will endeavor to outline the advancement that has been and is being made in the membership of our local, and I believe that it is the right sort of progress to report, at least I have always found out that in numbers there is strength. Since May 1, 1915, Local 505 has taken in 47 new members, reinstated 2, and received by traveling card 2, in the month of September; there were 15 initiations and up to the present date we have a membership of 65, and so we all believe that we can feel proud of the advancement that we are making. Local 505 recognizes the fact that this is a ripe time to organize the leading hotels of our city and we are hoping to be able to report some substantial progress.

I will advise members to stay away from Columbus on account of business being at a standstill. But to say that Local 505 is in a fair way to success does not mean that it has reached its goal, but the sentiment among waiters and cooks is growing in our favor; the very men, who several months ago evinced a lack of confidence in our organization now come to wish us well and voluntarily promise that they will soon be with us and they more often keep than not keep their promise. Those who hesitate are even encouraged by the growing numbers of our active members who may be found distributed over all parts of the city and each one of whom works as seriously as if the responsibility for the success of this organization rested wholly on his shoulders.

Yours fraternally,

JOHN POPP,
Local 505.

OMAHA, NEB.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Just a few words from Local 264, to let you know that we are still alive and forging to the front, taking in new members at every meeting.

Our president, Brother Harry McConnon, resigned the presidency to go on the road for the Mosier Cigar Company.

A special election was held the last meeting, October 3, 1915, and the following officers were elected: President, H. C. Edwards; vice-president, Wm. F. Coffey; chaplain, Leo P. Hill; recording secretary, Wm. H. Russell; inspector, Chas. Simonson; inside guard, Nolan O'Dell.

Brother Julius P. Sebastian, of Local 420, Kansas City, Mo., is in the city visiting Local 264.

Our new business agent, Brother Edw. Connley, is on the job all the time bringing in new members and collecting back dues.

Best wishes from Local 264 to the International, I remain

Yours fraternally,

W.M. H. RUSSELL,
Local 264.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

TO THE EDITOR MIXER AND SERVER—Just a few lines from Local 420 to keep up the map inspection.

General Secretary-Treasurer Sullivan passed through our city on the 23d on his way to the A. F. of L. Convention; he arrived Friday night and left Saturday evening. He was looked after by a committee from the L. J. E. B., and from all accounts, I think he was heartily received.

I wish again to notify traveling members that if you want to walk the streets, come to Kansas City. It seems like this city is the most popular spot in the U. S. just now. The bar business in this town has never been known to be so poor as it is right now, and every one is sitting up and wondering what will occur between now and spring.

Fraternally yours,

M. P. FINAN,

Rec. and Press Secretary (pro tem).

CHICAGO, ILL.

DEAR SISTERS AND BROTHERS—On Monday evening, October 4, 1915, Mayor Wm. Hale Thompson, of Chicago, ordered the city collector to notify all saloon keepers that the law of the State of Illinois, which prohibits the sale of liquor on the first day of the week, would be enforced. Two hours after this order was read by the clerk of the city council. The newspapers carried this news to all parts of the city, and up to the present writing both sides are trying to explain how and why it all happened.

This law had not been enforced in Chicago for fifty years, and this is one of the reasons why the Chicago Restaurant Keepers' Association did not believe it ever would or could be applied in this city.

In spite of the fact that Sunday closing eventually means closing every day and thousands of workers will be out of employment, the 50,000 unorganized hotel and restaurant workers rejoice over the Sunday closing as a means to procure one day rest each week. They feel that they have donated one day's work each week to their employers, and as wages are regulated by supply and demand, these workers will now be paid six days' wages for six days' work, as against six days' wages for seven days' work.

Fraternally,

FRED EBELING,

Secretary, Local 865.

SAN BERNARDINO, CAL.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I am submitting here-with a poem which, so far as I have recollection has never been printed in our official magazine. I take it that whoever its author, was a friend of the "man behind the bar," and therefore ask that you give it space in an early issue of the MIXER AND SERVER.

THE MAN BEHIND THE BAR.

You have heard the tearful story of the man who wields the hoe,
Until his shoulders droop and bend, beneath his weight of woe.
You have heard of the man behind the gun, but never near or far,
Have you ever heard a tribute paid to the man behind the bar.

When I used to go to Sunday School and heard the parson tell
Of the horrors of the barroom and the drunkard's path to hell,
What a fiend I thought this bar man as I scanned him from afar,
But I have found worse men in pulpits than I have behind the bar.

For with his smile of cheery welcome he will help to banish care,
With his air of kindly greeting he will make the earth more fair,
He will treat you as a brother, no matter who you are,
And he never turns a friend or foe away, this man behind the bar.

When the world seems out of kilter and you need a doctor's care,
When your friends seem cold and distant and the world seems bleak and bare,
This is the man to fix you up, for as a doctor he is a star,
He will raise your lagging spirits with extracts from behind the bar.

And I hold he fills a mission in the purpose and the plan,
Of the Lord who rules this universe and reads the hearts of man,
And upon the Day of Judgment, he will find the gates ajar,
And a seat amongst the chosen, this man behind the bar.

Yours fraternally,

W. S. GOODWIN,

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The headwaiter of the "Miami Hotel," at Dayton, Ohio, taking forty men from Cleveland to fill his crew, has relieved the non-employment situation considerably.

With five mayoralty candidates in the political lineup, we are as an organization especially sought after by our confreres to assist in propaganda work.

Whatever the result may be, after election we are assured of a release from the restriction of the liquor interests. As a craft we must inevitably benefit by liberal laws governing the purveyors of wet goods, consequently the wise boys of Local 106 are working overtime to defeat the threatened dry invasion.

Our delegates, Edw. Whissemore, Arthur Just, and Geo. Fitzpatrick, are off to Mansfield, Ohio, to attend the Ohio Federation of Labor Convention where we expect to do some constructive work towards strengthening the interests of the labor movement in this State.

Brother Jack Carpenter, one of the veterans of the St. Louis strike, and all-around goat for taking hard knocks, is with us again, and we expect he will inject his usual militant spirit into the confabs of our meetings.

Yours fraternally,

ARTHUR S. LOEB,
Press Secretary, Local 106.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—We will hold our seventeenth annual ball at German-American Hall Monday evening, January 31, 1916. We extend an invitation to all members of the International.

Brother Tom Peckingham, of Flore's Cafe, is the happy father of a bouncing baby boy.

Some of our brothers can be found at the following establishments: Jean Fournier and James Mooney at Finch & Deagen, Allen street; Al Boekman at Mantz Cafe, Cherry street; R. Friedersberg and G. Wolf at Garvey's, Michigan avenue; Chef Grey of the same place is noted for his clam-chowder. Wm. Watkins at J. Fenton's, Broadway; Jack Murtha at Red O'Brien's, Swan and Michigan avenues; H. Flanders and Wm. Watts are at Fenton's New Pekin; H. Byganay at Lundy's, Main street; W. Smith and F. Wilhelmi at the White Bear; F. V. Poppe is at the Hofbrau; J. Deves at Lyon's Cafe, E. Ferry street; G. Frazer at the Gayety Cafe; V. Stockman, R. Flynn and J. Finn at the Silver Dollar; W. Thompson at Emil Brik's Cafe; Joe Clark at Hotel Sycamore; J. P. Kane is at Murphy's Cafe, Ellicott and Eagle streets; Brothers Herman and Smith at Imperial Hotel.

Fraternally yours,

FRANK BROWN,
President and Press Agent, Local 175.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—During the past few months several members have come to this city on traveling cards seeking employment. While business is not bad in this city, we have about a dozen members on the extra list and there is not much chance for any traveling member landing here at present.

The city election is coming on and the Republican party has been kind enough to nominate a prohibitionist named Truit. This fellow has the backing of the so-called church element, but we are in hopes of beating him. This also makes the outlook in this city black to the hotel interests. If we are lucky enough to elect a Democratic mayor things may take a different change. The liquor dealers are all hopeful for a victory on November 2.

Fraternally yours,

M. T. FOLEY,
Secretary, Local 173.

PITTSBURGH, PA.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Since my contribution to the September issue of the MIXER AND SERVER, Waiters and Cooks' Union, Local 209, has made appreciable progress. We have not been content with merely holding our own, we have succeeded in expanding in every direction. Our progress is chiefly revealed in the rapid increase of our membership, in our gain of prestige among caterers and catering employees throughout Pittsburgh, and in the spread among our officers and members of experience and knowledge concerning the efficient conduct of this organization's business.

At my last writing I guessed our membership at a little over two hundred. During the intervening two months we have grown to over three hundred, with a good number of partially or fully paid up applications still on hand. It is no sanguine expectation on our part that we shall initiate into membership from 35 to 40 applicants within the next two weeks. The ceaseless watchfulness and activity on the part of our members is the cause of some applications being brought in every day. Since we succeeded, some three or four weeks ago, in making an agreement with the Hotel Schenley, we have never failed to initiate into membership at one meeting a smaller number of applicants than 15.

But this leads us to discuss another angle of our organization's progress. It is most regrettably true that many a local union of this International comes into existence with the greatest of prospects, only gradually to lapse into hopeless stagnation. It is much easier sometimes to start a new local than to lift out of the rut an old one that has been steered wrong. The average member of our allied crafts does not throw his lot with us from some such motives as actuate a young lady in joining a sewing circle. In return for the moral and financial support that he offers the union, he most justly expects protection and the redress of some grievances, as well as better working conditions and more of the substantial and pleasant things of life. If, within a reasonable time after his initiation, he fails to find in the union what he is seeking, disillusionment sets in. Every organizer, business agent, or other person having had to do with the labor movement will corroborate the statement that the least amenable to organization are not those who have never belonged to an organization, but those whose hopes for improvement lie buried with some defunct local union. While I have nothing to say in praise of a defunct local union, I would not do it the injustice of classing it far below the local which, while lacking the vitality to grow and expand, contains yet a little too much life to die, the local union which has no control over the conditions of work and neither does nor aspires to do anything to improve the lot of its members, the local union which exists only to hold an annual election of officers and sometimes most unnecessarily succeeds in prolonging its life with an occasional dollar collected from an unsophisticated tourist that is guilty of the mistake to deposit his traveling card.

We, the officers and members of Local 209, dread the thought of lapsing into such a state of uselessness. Yet, we discount in advance a possible temporary reaction against our present progress—a progress that must be explained as much from a propitious combination of circumstances as from our ceaseless labors.

While we can ill afford to give heed to every grievance of some of our members—at least at the present stage of our growth—yet we are fully conscious that this organization, if it would keep up the inspiration that gave it life, must pay due respect to the needs of those on whom it depends for support. It was with this idea uppermost in our minds that we finally yielded to the importune and ceaseless urging of some of our members to investigate their grievance at the Hotel Schenley. The committee from our organization, in its first attempt to secure an interview with the Schenley management, received an unexpected and somewhat unpleasant rebuff. This rebuff, however, must be imputed to a traditional scare among hotel proprietors of this city that just before meal time the waiters may quit at the sound of the whistle—a scare which is just as little warranted as it is much exploited against us by some few of our friends of "booking" fame. However, in justice to the Schenley management, it must be conceded that they received us most pleasantly on our second visit—perhaps after a few prominent local labor men had succeeded in exploding the Mother Goose story of the "whistle." Also, the freedom with which Manager Leopold Heyn and Maitre d'Hotel F. Frick discussed the grievances of their employes with us betrayed a recognition on their part that also a waiter has rights and that it is not the part of wisdom to prevent him from protecting his rights by organization.

Our conference with the Schenley management terminated in an agreement which, though it does not provide for all that we had asked, yet includes concessions to our organization that are not to be despised. Also, the Schenley will not be the worst for the agreement, for, besides the guaranty that we give them against any losses incurred through waiters sent from our office, our members in their employ are sufficiently imbued with the necessity of "making good" to suffer a temporary and slight inconvenience for permanent and substantial gain. Our success at the Schenley greatly increased our prestige not only among waiters and cooks, of whom eighteen joined us at the first meeting after the settlement, but also among caterers in Pittsburgh, with the result that we now supply a number of other houses that formerly disdained to listen to us.

The one drawback up to recently has been a lack of experience in the conduct of our business—a handicap that confronts every new local union. But gradually and surely we find a way of doing things in accordance with pre-established rules and with the least amount of waste and friction. Already there are among us a good number of former members of older locals and their experience stands us in good stead. We welcome members with experience from other cities, but when coming to Pittsburgh, let them think of bringing along a traveling card.

Yours fraternally,

O. H. SCHATZ,
Press Secretary, Local 209.

PHOENIX, ARIZONA.

Wednesday, September 29, the cooks and waiters held their regular semi-annual election. The polls were open all day and a large vote was cast for the many candidates in the field.

The following officers were elected: President, Ed Skelsey; vice-president, Jack Randall; finan-standing membership of 182 and of that 182 there are 74 members still in good standing who were with us then; of the 108 remaining, 31 are dead (to my knowledge), and 77 have left the ranks, either by withdrawal, transfer or suspension for non-payment of dues, the latter cause being largely in the majority. Our last report shows a good standing membership of 202, with all suspensions, transfers, reinstatements, withdrawals, initiations, etc., up to date.

Now, assuming that this local union is representative of the average local union of our crafts, and knowing (as we all do know) that conditions in general in regard to the liquor traffic are becoming more stringent with each succeeding year, it looks to me as if the only safe policy to endorse from now on is that "in numbers there is strength," and begin working to that end. With our natural enemies growing stronger and with a disposition inside the ranks to close charters or vote down applications indiscriminately, how long, according to the above figures, will the average local union be able to stay off the toboggan?

To deliberately stand by and see both ends working against the middle and that middle being the union that we look to for the betterment of our working conditions, it looks to me like the rankest kind of inconsistency.

Let us inaugurate a campaign for a bigger International Union for the ultimate good of all concerned—a campaign to educate those outside the ranks to become American Federationists. We are going to need voting strength.

Fraternally yours,
RALPH STEVENS,
Secretary, Local 387.

HOBOKEN, N. J.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I think it about time that Local 10 of Hoboken, N. J., was heard from. We are still on the map, but if things don't get better here in our line soon, some of us will be taking a flop off the map.

The writer took a walk around the little town the other day, just to look up how the green button boys were making out. You know Hoboken is one mile long and it don't take one long to walk a mile. Well, I walked that one mile two or three times, saying to myself, "Button—or, button, button, who's got the button, or will we ever see the button around this town again." Maybe they were all off that day, or maybe my eyesight is getting bad, but I guess I know my own color when I see it. I observed lots of other kinds of buttons on the waiters but no green one, so we know now that they sure can't be union waiters, when you don't see that good, old green on them. If it was St. Pat's day I would not mind, everybody has a little green on that good, old day, even the German waiters here in Local 10 have it on same as their Irish brothers, so it don't take one long to spot out a little green this time of the year, and, as I said before, the writer knows his own color when he sees it.

It may be the war that's doing it; well, if it is, what Sherman said about war was right. I don't know how long the writer is going to stay, not after what I seen on the 7,000 mile ride. In some of the towns the union house card was shining right in your eye the moment you left the train. Not here—Lord, no—instead of shining, they are pining away down in the cellars, or away up on top of the ice box, gone and forgotten, so get on the job, you new officers, and show the old ones that they were dead ones; get Hoboken, the little one-mile city, back to what she used to be; don't give up the ship—there are enough ships layed up now at River street; but get after them waiters that came off them ships that are taking your work away from you.

St. Louis will see how badly we needed that convention here to wake up the people of Hoboken, N. J., and so will all the other sisters and brothers, for after a little city like this saw what a fine body of men and women you are, union waiters, cooks and bartenders would be in demand ever after in Hoboken. So, don't forget us next time in St. Louis, which I know you won't, and the one-mile city will be union from end to end.

Local 10 are having their ball on November 20th. Any of you that are passing this way will be welcome to look us over and have a good time.

Our new president, Jere Thompson, wants all the boys at the house next week to have a good time after the new baby comes back from church with its new name.

Emil Etaff, our recording secretary, is desirous of having his picture in the MIXER AND SERVER, as he is the tallest waiter, so he says, being six feet and a half.

Brother William Rogger was going to the World's Fair, but after the writer told him how much the fare was, William said, with a smile, "I guess I'll take a ride to Coney Island."

Brother John B. Thiery, of Local 4, is a union bartender nearly thirty years and still on the job—good luck to you, Johnny.

Local 10 takes their hats off to Mr. Heagen and of union hill, Schuetzen Park, as everything went fine at this park all last summer; also head waiter, Bro. William Rogger, head chef, for good feeds to the boys; also head bartender and old war horse, John B. Thiery. So, good luck, Mr. Heagen; hope everything will be as good next summer.

I suppose, Brother Sullivan, all the sisters and brothers got home from the convention safe and sound. Gee! that was some trip to the Golden Gate city, and what a fine lot of sisters and brothers from Cleveland, O. I rode all the way with them from Chicago, and will never forget their kind friendship. And Bill Kavanagh—one never feels lonesome with Bill around, as he sure has got some funny says. Also, thanks to Bro. Bill Joyce for getting me through the "knob polishers" so easy. Will never forget the fun that night at the Sutter Hotel.

My best regards to Chas. McKee; he sure gave us a fine time at Salt Lake City; same to all the sisters and brothers at San Francisco, Cal.

Well, I suppose I better stop, Brother Sullivan, I have said enough, but not hearing from Hoboken in some time, the writer could not help putting in a little about that, in all 7,000 mile ride.

Will close, humming to myself, "Oh you old Pacific coast. Gee, that was some trip!"

Wishing yourself and all locals good luck, health and prosperity.

Fraternally yours,

JAMES J. SHEEHAN,
Press Agent, Local 10.

MONROE, LA.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—No doubt you will be surprised to hear from Local 760, but having been elected press agent at our last regular meeting, could not help but tell you a few of the good things that Local 760 has accomplished. We have one of the best locals in the South. We started with 16 members and now we have 34 and are still growing. We had two candidates at our last meeting and have two for our next meeting. We have all the restaurants and bars except two and I think before the year is out they will be with us. All around, this is one of the strongest little organized towns in the South, the population is 18,000 and everything lined up. There are fifteen locals and a membership of 600; I think that's pretty good for a little place.

Our hustling secretary is on the sick list, but hope he will be out in a few days, as Local 760 could hardly get along without him.

Hoping that you can give this letter space in your valuable publication, I beg to remain,

Fraternally yours,

J. T. PERRIT,
Press Agent, Local 760.

CINCINNATI, OHIO.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Local 72 of Cincinnati is still in the forward movement to success, and also in the limelight of trades unionism. It appears that everybody is demanding the button of the waiters who serve them. Local 72 is going forward with new initiations every Friday. We have some of the most popular cafes in the city, among which are the Munroe Hotel and Eimer's Hotel. We have a good and energetic bunch and every brother is taking a great interest in the welfare and success of our local. We are here to stay and success is with us.

Yours fraternally,

W. H. DAY,
Business Manager, Local 72.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

EDITOR MIXER AND SERVER—Local 273, Springfield, Mass., can report at this time 40 union houses, all members receiving one day off in seven and increased wages.

After eight years of existence we have at last received some of the benefits of organized labor. Our one day off in seven bill is to be a state branch bill at the incoming session of the legislature, and is to be presented by the state branch.

The culinary locals of this commonwealth are to send delegates to a place to be named later and at a date not yet set, in order to further the interests of this bill, which was defeated at the last legislature by six votes.

Local 273 was unable to sign some of the cheaper places in our neighborhood, therefore we done the only thing left for us to do—started our own place in competition—and at this writing are doing fine.

The Union Labor Forward Movement has enrolled 5,000 new unionists in Springfield since its inception. Although we have had quite a number of strikes during the summer, all have been successful and have returned to work under better conditions.

The Cooks and Waiters' Union played a prominent part in this campaign, and we are reaping the harvest—the more workers organized the more union cooks and waiters. We gather our share of the spoils after the workers are organized and back at work; we endeavor to educate them to reciprocate by demanding our button and by eating only in places that are fair.

Local 273 is bound to reap the harvest after the strikes are all over, because we are making friends and practicing true trade union principles.

Fraternally yours,

CHAS. E. SANDS,
Secretary.

READING, PA.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The convention of the State Federation of Liquor Dealers was held in Reading in August. This being the home of Local 155, every effort was made to have the League recognize local unions in their respective districts.

With the persistency of our untiring president the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

READING, PA., August 17, 1915.

Greetings to the State Federation of Liquor Dealers, Assembled in Annual Session:

GENTLEMEN—I, as President of Bartenders' Union, Local 155, have been requested to present the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the State Federation of Liquor Dealers adopt the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the State Federation of Liquor Dealers recommend that their respective County Districts appoint a committee of five (5) in each district to co-operate with the Bartenders' International League wherever there is a local, for the purpose of creating a mutual understanding between both bodies; and be it further

Resolved, That the State Federation of Liquor Dealers do everything in their power to secure bartenders, waiters or chefs that are affiliated with the local union, if there is one in their district, and display the card and union button.

We, as members of Bartenders' Local 155, of Reading, Pa., do ask that the foregoing resolutions be adopted.

Thanking you in advance for such consideration, I am

Fraternally yours,
EDWARD A. STOECKEL,
President.

H. NORMAN UNDERKOFFER,
Secretary.

DAYTON, OHIO.Be a Booster and Not a Knocker.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—From ancient times up to the present twentieth century anything worth while was never appreciated until the person doing it had long since passed to that land of larger activities. Then those who were want to oppose and contend with them antagonistically, wanted to erect a tombstone of mammoth size and with flowery epitaph inscribed thereon. This rule still seems to hold good, nothing is appreciated until the author or originator of it has died.

So it is with our organization. A few have all the work to do, or they see the work that is to be done and with their GO-AHEAD spirit accomplished the desired task, only to be censored by others of the organization who have not been consulted every time the real workers attempt to do anything for the good of the cause.

The line of attack usually is, owing to the inability of the others and through their jealous disposition, to attack either the character or work done by those who are really interested in the cause and have been the ones to do their very best at all times. Some times the workers have been called "cliques" and are censored by those who don't seem to find time to help do the work, but always have sufficient time to criticize the others who "do" go ahead and do it. They even intimate that the workers are trying to "run" the organization when they themselves have dropped such remarks or have let it be known that they will "run it or ruin it," whichever seems to fit their purpose.

But, how many of these so-called knockers have been on the job and have been trying to do their share of the work to push forward their particular local and see that the work is done in unison or with harmony rather than the discord that usually prevails.

Let some of those knockers sell their hammers and buy a horn and start boosting their local and before long harmony will reign supreme and they will find that the "Clique of Workers," whom the knockers thought were trying to run the local are NOT doing things for personal gain but for the real good of the cause.

J. F. EICHORN,
Secretary-Treasurer Local 222.

MONROE, LA.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Just a few lines to let the boys know that Local 760 is still on the map and growing every day.

At our last meeting, October 17, we had three candidates and are trying hard to get one for our next meeting. Business has been very dull here, but the way cotton is now selling it will not be long before business opens up again, as the South is governed by the price of cotton.

We are trying to get one Sunday off every month and don't think we will have any trouble in getting this if we can get an extra man.

Fraternally yours,

T. J. PETTET,
Press Agent, Local 760.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Local 320 is still on the firing line and progressing finely. At our October meeting Bro. Dan Burke was elected business agent for the balance of the year.

International Organizer John J. Henly has been with us for a few days, accomplishing some very good work, for which we wish to thank him.

Some of our members can be found at the following establishments: Bro. (Snowball) Lafee, at Wittie's Cafe, just around the corner; Bro. (So Long There) Brenan, at Mc Geown's Cafe; Brother Boyer is in the Green mountains shooting deer, and Father Hogan is on the hill working for Louie.

Wishing the general membership success, I remain,

Yours fraternally,

FRED G. MADILL,
Secretary, Local 320.

RAILROADS LARGEST RESPONSIBLE FOR THEIR PRESENT FINANCIAL STRAITS.

By Edward F. Kearney, President of Wabash Railroad.

Railroad organizations have been told from time to time that the politicians, state commissions, interstate commerce commission and the State legislatures were responsible for all of our troubles. The legislatures in some of the various states and some of the various state commissions have a good many sins to answer for, but in my humble opinion the ruination of the railroads is not one of them.

In the last analysis there is only one body of men responsible for the great majority of the troubles with which the railroads are so sorely afflicted today, and that body of men is made of railroad employees and railroad officers of this and past generations.

I do not mean by this to question the honesty or integrity of railroad officers of this or past generations with reference to money matters, for I believe that the integrity of railroad officers in this respect is as high and great as that of any great business organization in this or any other country, but I do mean to charge and deliberately that the RAILROADS HAVE BEEN BROUGHT TO THEIR PRESENT CONDITION SIMPLY THROUGH A FAILURE OF RAILROAD OFFICERS TO APPRECIATE THEIR PROPER RELATIONS TOWARD THE STATE AND THE PUBLIC AT LARGE —The Labor Union, Columbus, Ohio.

DIG IN.

The imperfections which you say your union is burdened with will not be lessened one particle as a result of your criticism. If instead of finding flaws in the fabric you were to dig in and help your fellow members to eliminate the rough spots, substitute boosting for complaining, you would speedily discover that the only thing the matter with your union was the attitude of your fellow members who stand on the side lines and never engage in the work of building and perfecting.

G. A. M.

Seeing those three letters as a caption for this page, you naturally, that is, if you are of an inquisitive turn of mind, wonder what they stand for, what they mean, and whether the trio taken from the alphabet mean a new secret order or something of that kind. The three letters, when connected and without punctuation marks stand for what some folks would call a slang name or title given to smooth and oily "gents" noted for manipulation of gaming devices, cards, dice, etc., with a little heavy pressure on the "etc." Of course you have met up with a "Gam" sometime or place during your more or less interesting career, and need little further "info" from us as to what they look like, and how they conduct their affairs and themselves.

Getting interested? Good. Glad you are, for that is what we aim to do—enlist your attention and—but of that later.

That little trinity of letters may mean a "gamble," but they were not dug out for that purpose originally—no, siree—but just wait until we get another start and we will tell you all about what G. A. M. stands for and its meaning and significance in this special case.

Way back yonder when "Heck" was a pup, a little bunch of workers got the idea into their noodles that the men and women of the Catering Industry had stood for about all of the tough stunts which ordinary flesh and blood individuals could stand and not break down; they began to discuss things which seemed to them of vital interest; they were wondering why men, and women too, who needed no more, and in many cases not as much intelligence, to earn a living as the workers in the Catering Industry were required to display, managed somehow to impress their working value on their employers to such an extent, that they enjoyed a working day of less hours and remuneration considerably in excess of that "enjoyed" (?) by bartenders, cooks, waiters, waitresses and hotel and restaurant employes generally. They began to investigate, and, do you know what they discovered? Simply that the other laboring people of America had laid aside their petty personal differences and organized what every one calls a Trade Union, and after they had accomplished organization of a goodly number, in fact a majority of their fellow workers, they went quietly to the Boss and told him that on and after a certain date they would expect to receive a better wage and a shortening of their working time. The "Boss" told them that he would think it over, it was a new stunt which was being pulled off and he was wise enough to ask for time to think things over. When the Boss got through thinking, he had discovered that very few, if any, of his working people but what were members of the Union and knowing well that he could not run his shop without labor, "signed up." As a result of "signing up" of many shops where men and women were employed, innumerable workers began to enjoy going to work later in the morning and quitting earlier at night, and of course when they passed by the places where bartenders, cooks, waiters and waitresses were employed they observed that the same boys and girls were "on watch" in the morning and right on the job at night too. Finally the barboys, cooks and waiters began to wake up. Get that? "BEGAN TO WAKE UP." Some of them are sleeping on "tin ears," but we have hopes of reaching them. That's so, almost forgot (?) the trinity at the head of this page—G. A. M.

It means that if you join the G. A. M. and make good, we will either wake the sleepers in the Catering Industry, or make them ashamed of themselves and they will "break away" and get into some other line of business. If you want to be a G. A. M. all you have to do is GET A MEMBER for your local union. If you do—we had a membership of over SIXTY THOUSAND March 1, 1915—ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY THOUSAND MEMBERS IS POSSIBLE.

Join the G. A. M. campaign and be one of the constructionists.

Every member of the Hotel and Restaurant Employes' International Alliance and Bartenders' International League being interested in its welfare, inasmuch as the proceeds are part of the International funds, it therefore follows that, being the "servers" of condiments, liquors, etc., their good will would be of marked advantage to purveyors of articles of consumption either in Hotels, Clubs, Cafes, Buffets or Bars. The membership of the International Union consists of the very highest class of bartenders, cooks, waiters and hotel employees generally.

A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to you and yours

Once more we approach the season of Yuletide, that season of the year when the spirit of "peace and good will among men" is presumed to prevail, when men meet and greet one another with smiling faces, friendly outstretched hand and pleasing salutations, "Merry Christmas, Happy New Year"—when all mankind should be brothers, as their Creator intended.

Those of us who can offer these old and agreeable salutations to our families, relatives, friends and acquaintances are indeed the fortunate residents of an exceptional part of the universe, for sad and solemn as the thought must be, truth rises its head and imparts the terrible news that millions of men will be unable to honestly offer either of the kindly greetings, for they are neither "merry" or happy" and their immediate future shrouded in almost impenetrable mystery, for "they know not what the morrow may bring forth."

The first Christmas was not merry, it was solemn, and this Christmas, though from different causes, will be a solemn one for more millions than peopled the earth when the Star of Bethlehem made itself visible to men and ruler of that period.

While we who are not enmeshed in the terrible conflict may truly enjoy the feast of Christmas and make merry, it is fitting that we display some of that genuine Christian spirit which helps the fallen and makes lighter the burden of the weary, as an indication that we are thankful to be spared the ruthlessness of conflict and the wastefulness of war. Christmas is not set apart for sadness, it is an anniversary of the dawn of Christianity, and under ordinary and regular conditions should be a season of gladness and joy. And yet, let us be merry this Christmastide, for in spite of the frightful carnage which has transpired since last Yuletide, we have not lost hope or expectation of a larger brotherhood of man.

As yet we have not developed into real Christians, but thanks to unceasing effort, we are opening up the way, broader and brighter will be our path in the future, for we shall profit by the example set before us and improve as we grow older. Civilization has been temporarily set back by criminal selfishness, but it has not been without some measure of recompense, for the more lives sacrificed on the altars of Mars, the more precious and lasting will be the lesson, so that while the spirit of Yuletide may be missing this year, it will be greater and stronger when peace perches over the warring multitudes, and when that time comes—and we hope it will be soon—all the people of all the earth may be able to say with fervor and sincerity, "Merry Christmas and Happy New Year.

The last month of the year is an excellent time to take just a few moments to devote to summarizing what has been accomplished during the previous eleven months—not only does this apply to one's personal affairs, but is equally germane as to achievements of your local union. If yourself and associates have been as insistent and consistent as you should have been, your union no doubt occupies an excellent position, both as regards working conditions, remuneration and control of the situation. If, on the other hand, you and your fellow members have been miserly of time and labor in behalf of your local, more than likely it needs overhauling and some repairs, which should be given immediate attention, for there are only a few days remaining of the present month, and the local union which begins the new year with the old machine well cleaned and oiled up has a better chance of moving forward and winning something during the coming year, than the local engaged in trying to find a place for useless junk.

Make up your mind that, insofar as you can make it possible, your union is going to move forward and attain prominence such as one hundred per cent unions enjoy.

BETWEEN OURSELVES.

Without in the least exaggerating the matter, there are many of our local unions and thousands of our members who have not credited the general labor movement as represented by the American Federation of Labor with one-half of one per cent of its actual value to our allied crafts. As to the reason for this failure to bestow credit where it is properly due, the writer has several views, none of which, he regrets to say, are any too flattering to the thoughtless members who take things as they come and seldom inquire or reason out matters as they should.

Speaking wholly from recollection and without attempting to dig into records filed, hardly a month passes but what communications come to us from one or several locals; these communications impart the information that their local is not making much headway, that in spite of being in existence for a good period of time, the other labor unions and their members do not seem to care whether they patronize union mixers and servers or the non-union kind. Occasionally the allegation is based on excellent grounds; the men organized into unions of their respective crafts do not make any effort to render aid by patronage of places where our members are employed. Further investigation discloses that in such towns or cities the labor movement is, to use a street expression, "all shot to smithereens." There are but few active unions and fewer aggressive and active members to take the lead and show by example how to move forward and reap good results. But such towns or cities are the exception and not the rule; consequently, when our members realize that their very existence is jeopardized by a somnolent labor movement, it is a case of getting on the job and trying to wake the organized workers from their sleep and inject a little activity and ginger into the movement.

There is, however, another phase to some of the complaints about lax co-operation, and that phase has to do with the sluggishness of our own locals who take the view that, inasmuch as the labor movement was in the field and doing nicely before our locals were formed, that the labor movement can get along without them or their co-operation, hence to take an active part being unnecessary no active part is taken.

One rather bitter complaint was registered with headquarters not so many months ago. According to the secretary of one of our unions, his local had been paying tax to the central labor union for several years and they wouldn't pay any more. It seems that at one of the sessions of the central labor union a motion was passed to hold a bazaar or union label fair; it developed further that the president of the central labor union had called on volunteers to donate their services in whatever manner they could to make the affair a success. The fair was to be given primarily to advertise union-made products, but incident thereto it was necessary to provide some method where sufficient money would be taken in to pay expenses and probably have a few dollars left to turn into the treasury of the central labor union. After several weeks of preparation and soliciting among the business concerns of that city quite a respectable start was made. Among the donations was a number of cases of soft drinks, wines, bottled beer, cigars and cigarettes. The chairman of the arrangements committee waited on the president of our local and asked if he would take the matter up with the union, or, if that was impracticable on account of meeting day being too far distant, that he call the officers of the union together and furnish one or two men if possible to handle the wet goods. Evidently the president of the local either overlooked the request or else ignored it entirely, for on the first of the three nights during which the fair was to last, no wet goods dispenser made an appearance and several members of other craft unions volunteered their services, served the wet goods and got by somehow for novices.

It should be borne in mind that all those connected with the label fair were volunteers; the union musicians played for the glory there was in it, carpenters and painters likewise; in fact, no one received as much as car fare for the services which they rendered.

It so happened that on the second evening, one of our traveling members, who had come to that town to visit a married sister, attended the fair with her and her husband and family. They arrived early and took seats in the refreshment booth; while waiting for one of the volunteers to bring along a couple of cold bottles of beer, an acquaintance of the brother-in-law dropped a remark to the effect that they were left in the hole by the actions of the wet goods dispensers, who had been asked to send one or two men and refused to do so. With the remark to his sister that probably he would get "rousted" for butting in, the traveling member displayed his button and book and said: "Probably our boys are unable to get leave of absence; I will try and help you out"—and he did; in fact, he came back the following evening and repeated his good work.

But to get back to the bitter complaint filed with us at headquarters. We received a communication advising us that the local union had withdrawn from the central labor union and that their reasons for so doing were an unfortunate misunderstanding—could we take the matter up with our local and try to get them to rescind their action? We wrote to the secretary of our union and asked him to advise us why his local had severed its connections with the central labor union. Evidently that was all he required—an invitation—for he just poured hot shot all over everybody connected with the labor movement in that town and laid on the shoulders of the visiting brother volunteer a general measure of abuse and accusation of scabbing on the union.

The case looked serious; in fact, was, for we didn't have all of the particulars nor did we secure them for several weeks, and then only after persistent and careful inquiry. It simmered down to a case of negligence on the part of the president and chronic absenteeism on the part of the two delegates to the central labor union. The president never reported the request to his fellow members, and the delegates were absent during all the weeks when the subject matter of holding a label fair was being considered. Fortunately, the secretary of the central labor union was an old veteran in the labor movement, and to his timely interference and protests was due the rejection of a DRY resolution which had been constructed "to get even."

When we informed the secretary of that local union that, instead of permitting his local union to invite the antagonism by harsh and uncalled for criticism of the delegates who made up that little central labor union he had displayed as much activity in investigating matters as he did in trying to hang around the neck of a generous visiting member the charge of scabbing, it would develop that his own members were the real culprits, and they and not the delegates of the central labor union were the ones entitled to censure.

That did not rest any too well on his chest, and he didn't hesitate to say so, but he proved to be a bigger man than any of his fellow officers, for, after we had offered for his perusal all of the evidence, he confessed that he was ashamed of himself and those who had made it possible to put his union in the position it then occupied. At the next meeting of his local he asked that he be elected as a delegate to the central labor union, that the local withdraw its letter severing connection with the central labor union, wrote an abject apology for the union and had the union endorse it; secured an appropriation of $25 as a donation to the central labor union, "to," as he wrote in the application for re-admittance to the central labor union, "endeavor to make amends for the uncharitable action of our local union, in refraining from sending the volunteer workers for the fair."

The return of the prodigal was a real event in the history of that central labor union and the publicity given the action of the local in making the donation healed up every scar made. But supposing good, common horse sense had failed, what would have been the result?

We have many local unions who elect delegates to central bodies with little or no idea of how much genuine good their representatives accomplish, and we have other unions who elect delegates as a sort of a "necessary evil" to get the matter out of the way, never for a moment expecting those whom they elect to attend the meetings or take part in the work of the central labor union, for they have no conception of what the real labor movement is, nor what it aims to accomplish. We must get over the idea that "everybody works in behalf of the labor movement" but us, or rather, that everybody should pay attention^{*} to the advancement of the cause of organized labor but ourselves.

We have neither a moral or legal right to expect others to patronize us and boast for our cause while we just set around, lick up some nice, cool "suds" and exchange the latest gossip peddled over the rosewood.

We are a part of the labor movement; too many of us have not become wise to that fact, or that the labor movement stands for something else besides our troubles and worries. The labor movement is a great, big "pull together" combination of all classes and characters of wage earners. The shibboleth of that aggregation is set for them in the words, "An injury to one is the concern of all," and the one and only thing which will make that movement move forward and glean worth while results, is the hearty, unselfish co-operation and boosting of every member of every union connected with that labor movement. The stronger the organized labor movement of America becomes, the greater chance our allied crafts have of securing that which is so nicely set forth in our aims and objects. The organized labor movement of America is not a mystery, something which must be spoken of in whispers and among close friends; it is unafraid of its efforts and has innumerable reasons for felicitation, not the least of which is the splendid International Union which we lovingly call OUR International.

Take a few moments of your time, read the local labor press, read the American Federationist, read your own official magazine and become acquainted with what the organized workers of America are doing. If you are interested in what the men and women of labor are trying to accomplish, direct your steps to the meetings of your central labor union, you will never regret devoting a few hours a week to such meetings, for they are the high schools of the labor movement and the knowledge gleaned at such sessions is decidedly more valuable than attending sessions of the pinochle club. In the language of Longfellow in the Psalm of Life, "Be a hero in the strife." Know what you belong to and why.

JERE L. SULLIVAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The Jewel City and Some Notes of Cities en Voyage Thereto.

Arrived in Denver, Sunday evening, October 24, too late to take advantage of a joint meeting of our locals. Smiling Dick Croskey, Stanley Oplinger, of Denver, and Harry Fox, of Cheyenne, Wyo., tendered to the Sullivans the glad hand of welcome. After registering at the Marquette I concluded to visit the boys who had remained at Local 8's headquarters or meeting rooms, and was rather agreeably surprised to find something like 75 or 80 members present. Bro. Fred Wessel, business agent of Local 8, called the members to order, and as an indication of how patient our members are, they remained until midnight absorbing the information which I was able to impart.

Monday morning, October 25, bright and early, Brother Wessel routed us out, and before we realized what was taking place, we were comfortably seated in Bro. Harry Parker's machine and were on our way up into the mountains.

Members of our locals who attended the Denver Convention in June, 1913, will recall with pleasure satisfaction the trip by train to Glacier Lake which our locals in Denver gave us as a part of their excellent program of entertainment. We all agreed then that the Glacier Lake trip was some trip, and it was; but, "fellers and girls," that trip must simply play second fiddle to the one which we were given Monday, October 25. The City of Denver has been engaged, for some time, in constructing a twenty-five-mile drive-way to Mt. Lookout, a spot so close to the domain where the stars are kept lit that one imagines he would not have to go much higher to hear the guardian of the Pearly Gates challenge and say, "Who goes there; approach and give the password." While the writer may attempt to describe the beauties and wonders of that automobile drive, those who have ever enjoyed the trip, or who may some time in the future have that pleasure, they will no doubt say that my effort was an "attempt," but not much of a success. Under the circumstances I am going to "lay off" that adjective stuff and simply say it was an eye-filling, soul-satisfying experience—one which we hope every member may enjoy before passing to the great beyond. We devoted most of the day to the trip, returning to Denver in time to visit Locals 14 and 18, where brief addresses were made. Local 14 had a fair gathering, while Local 18 showed a goodly portion of their membership in attendance.

Tuesday, October 26, Brothers Wessel, Croskey and Cox chaperoned us while seeing Denver, its many fine drives and parks, and giving us our first visit to "Inspiration Point," another spot which Denver's money erected, and, in our humble judgment, coin well invested. The point is well named. From its height one can obtain a fine view of the city and the majestic range of mountains. In the evening Brother Wessel escorted us to a cracking fine vaudeville show. The only event which marred our stay in Denver was the death of the wife of Harvey Garman, one of the best known and most popular trade union warriors of the American labor movement. Brother Garman has been the inspiration behind our boys and girls for many years, and has never failed them when they needed the kind of aid which so few men can give. Brother Garman knows, in this his hour of bereavement, that our boys and girls, had they the power, would restore to him his life's partner in the best of good health. Brother Garman has thousands of friends in our ranks who we know will join with us in saying: We are sincerely sorry, old man, bear up under your heavy burden, for she whom you loved and idolized has only gone before and awaits the time when Providence calls you to the reunion.

Wednesday, October 27, the irrepressible duo, Wessel and Croskey, aided by Brother Oplinger, escorted us to the arch which reads welcome on one side and Mizpah on the other, where we started our hike to Colorado Springs. Our members in Denver are a bit buoyed up with the hope that the State Supreme Court will hand down a decision giving to the city the right to determine whether it shall legalize the sale of beverages, or in other words, enjoy the privilege of Home Rule, for be it remembered Denver did not return a majority in favor of prohibition. If, however, the court denies the petition, we have been assured that Local 8 will hang on to its charter and continue in existence. To say that we greatly appreciate the generous courtesies shown us during our visit inadequately expresses our thanks, we departed from Denver and our friends with decided reluctance.

Colorado Springs was reached about noon, we had made no effort to advise any one of our visit, therefore expected no courtesies, in fact, were banking on the city at the foot of Pike's Peak as a recuperation stopover, but as usual we planned without cashing in on expectations. Stopping at the same hotel were old-time acquaintances, whom Dame Fortune has smiled upon, and with their aid there was little left unseen of the mountains and city. Notwithstanding the foregoing, it is barely possible that some of our members at Colorado Springs will recall a very inquisitive patron who visited several "eat shops" on Thursday morning, October 28th. From close observation in the limited time spent in that city, there are several very well-equipped places which, it seems, could be won over and the employes organized. Two houses on Pike's Peak avenue, especially, would make nice additions to the roster of union houses.

Arrived at Pueblo, October 28th, about 2:15 p. m., and took advantage of the lay-off to catch up with unfinished correspondence. Met Brother Butler the following morning, and after a brief chat made necessary preparations to wander further westward.

Arrived at the metropolis of Utah Saturday, October 30th, at 1:30 p. m., and was pleased to receive the cordial greetings of Brothers Joe Lane, A. M. J. Prichard, Owen Benzon and J. C. Starley, of Local 721, and Brothers J. Farrell and J. Lang, of Local 815. After we had been established at the Newhouse Hotel, the writer allowed the family to rest up, and while doing so I attended a meeting of the L. J. E. B., which surely had a heavy problem to dispose of. Local 815 had loaded down one of their members with confidence, and he succeeded in piling up enough outstanding and unpaid accounts to sicken an ordinary bunch of workers. But the membership of Local 815 is not ordinary, they are not quitters, they have taken their medicine like good fellows, but in swallowing the dose fixed up for them they also took over a good-sized determination to profit by their experience. If any one in the future attempts to manipulate the affairs or funds of Local 815 they are going to bump against something of about the same consistency as the mountains which surround the city of Salt Lake. Some of those boulders are real hard. I know from experience, having come in sudden contact with one.

Sunday morning at an early hour, and escorted by Brother Prichard, we visited the interesting sights of Temple Square, went inside of the Tabernacle building and tested its wonderful acoustic properties; from there to a tour of the city, including a trip up the canyon, winding up at the home of Brother Prichard, where we partook of a splendid feast, which had been prepared and arranged by Mrs. Prichard. Roast deer and "yaller" leg chickens were never more attractive, and Mrs., Miss Sullivan and myself didn't hesitate at any part of the feast. We believe that Mrs. Prichard will agree that we done full justice to the good things set before us.

Another ride through the city and time enough allowed us to get ready for a theater party brought on the shades of evening. We thought:

we had about enough for one day, but our views and those of our hosts did not reconcile, hence the theater, where we had Mr. and Mrs. A. M. J. Prichard, Mr. and Mrs. H. S. McCann and Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Starley as our hosts, and who saw to it that our evening was complete in every detail.

Monday morning, in company with Brothers Joe Lane and H. S. McCann, we visited quite a number of our members while on duty; in fact, devoted all our time until we were ready for the next train west in that pleasing and filling occupation. A machine carried us to the train, and what we said with reference to Denver we emphasize with reference to Salt Lake City. We left our friends reluctantly.

Trade conditions in Salt Lake seem to be better than in any of the cities thus far visited, and unless signs fail, our members are due to get by the frigid season without any great lack of employment. There is, however, an exception, and that has to do with the culinary workers, Salt Lake seemingly being a jumping-off place for those who are doing the "get back East" stunt in installments. They are going to make a discovery this year, and the discovery will not be pleasing. The standbys of Local 815 have the Missouri habit; they must be shown a paid-up membership book, and those unable to produce the goods will find it exceedingly hard sledding. Dixon, Farrell, Lang and several others of the active workers of Local 815 are guarding the interests of their members, and if they overlook any one it's a lead-pipe cinch that Joe Lane, H. S. McCann or A. M. J. Prichard, of Local 721, will pick up the stray ones, and—well—travelers have got to be right or move onward.

Arrived at Sacramento Tuesday, November 2, at noon. Jack Reid, W. C. Eddy and Will Hamilton were down to the choo choos waiting for us. Had our train been on time the number of greeters would have been largely augmented, but the absentees are hereby advised that the trio above mentioned are a good bunch to tender welcome salutations.

Wednesday morning the writer attended a meeting of the L. J. E. B., Brother F. A. Somers presiding. We had a general heart-to-heart discussion of the situation as it exists in Sacramento and the entire State of California. Besides the brothers mentioned above, Secretary Steve Drake, of Local 561, and in fact all of the members of the board participated. It was agreed that the interests which were endeavoring to place California in the same list with Arizona, Oregon and Washington were ceaselessly active, and unless all workers and their employers get on the firing line and remain there actively battling the outcome would be disastrous. During the meeting of the board Mrs. and Miss Sullivan were taken on a drive through the city and to the fruit-growing district on the outskirts. Immense bunches of grapes and olives were in evidence on their return. These, with a fine, big bouquet of chrysanthemums, caused comment when we boarded our train for Stockton at 2:15 that afternoon, and no doubt the big committee waiting for us at Stockton, and consisting of the following ladies and gentlemen—Mrs. John George, Mrs. Fred Funk, Miss Tillie Laughrey, Dick Perrin, A. G. Dyke, Larry L. Chase, Orlando Mull, Fred Funk, James Redenbaugh, C. J. Taylor, Al. King, J. Cavanaugh, John George, Frank Sesma and Jimmy Carroll—imagined that we had grabbed about everything portable in the shape of fruit and flowers; but they, no doubt, appreciate the fact that back where we came from fruits and flowers are to be had, but not in such generous profusion as in California.

Notwithstanding the fact that Stockton had passed through, and, in fact, is now endeavoring to wear off the effects of one of the most vicious and ruthless labor wars conducted by the M. and M. Association in its history, our members persist in being optimistic, and are looking forward to better times and improved trade conditions. The splendid spirit shown by all of those whom we came in contact with indicates that, if anything, the labor war has made our members stronger advocates of unionism than ever.

After chucking our hand baggage in the rooms assigned for us at the St. Leo, several machines were brought into action, and in less time than it takes to write this reference thereto we were clipping off the miles along a splendid roadway, watching on our pleasant journey the innumerable beauty spots called to our attention and those which we did not require direction to detect.

We made brief visits to "lubricating" establishments and tested the juices of the vineyards for which California is noted. At Lodi we were given a chance to see the products of orchard and vineyard packed for shipment, and before leaving, and through the kindness of Jimmy Carroll, we were handed a lemon, in fact a basket full of the product of that vicinity, which we can assure both donor and grower "touched the right spot."

Our return to Stockton was quite as pleasing and entertaining as our ride into the country. We surely enjoyed that ride.

At eight o'clock we sat down with our hosts to a nice little banquet, and believe we succeeded in convincing them that their efforts were fully appreciated.

Thursday morning, November 4th, a meeting of the L. J. E. B. was held, at which the writer endeavored to encourage all present to direct time and attention to their forces to the end of getting on the firing line and save California from a similar fate as that which befell Oregon and Washington. After the meeting the remainder of our time was devoted to visiting members of our two locals who were on duty, and finally departed from Stockton with our assortment of fruit and flowers considerably augmented and with the good wishes of our friends for a happy and safe journey.

The train upon which we arrived in Oakland was only a couple of hours late. Had we waited for the train which we had intended to take no one would have been disappointed. But those occurrences must take place occasionally, and we were about due anyway. Arrived at Oakland, we registered at the Touraine, where the representatives of our two locals in Oakland greeted us, and soon had us on our way to a splendid feast, which was quite up to the high mark set by Oakland in matters of that kind; and you can take it from the writer that when Oakland catering workers arrange a spread for their guests they leave nothing undone to please and satisfy.

Friday morning, bright and early, Brothers W. A. Spooner and Herman Loorz, representing the L. J. E. B., called for us and took us on a drive to Berkley and Piedmont, through the University grounds, and a visit to the Greek Theater, of which so much has been written. After absorbing some of the most magnificent views which one can find in all America, we were driven over the Sky Line Boulevard, a drive, by the way, which must be taken before one can well say that they have really visited the inspiring sights of the Golden Gate country.

Returning to the city, and after driving some miles, we come upon the most astonishing sight which any city can boast the possession of, namely, a massive lake right in the heart of the city; so big a lake, in fact, that one could almost take that portion of New York from Fourteenth street to Battery Park, put it in the middle, and it would make an island. The surroundings of that body of water are indeed magnificent, aye, majestic.

Friday afternoon the writer addressed a meeting of our members, and devoted the main portion of my talk to the serious situation which confronts our membership in the State of California, where, as already intimated, men and money is being used in an endeavor to line up the State alongside of Arizona, Oregon and Washington in the dry column.

I have noticed almost similar conditions prevailing in California as made themselves apparent to me on my trip to Seattle a few years ago, and it is my hope that the workers at the catering industry will appreciate that in urging them to get busy and remain constantly on the firing line is for their welfare, and not for the satisfaction, pleasing thought that would be, of being able to boast of increased membership.

The fanatics are going to make California DRY, if that be within their power to do so, and California DRY means the bread and butter of many thousands of our members and those who are dependent on them for sustenance. The fight in California is a bread-and-butter battle for our boys and girls. The so-called Church in Action won't hesitate to make tramps of every one of you who gain your living at the catering industry. They did not harken to the humanitarian plea in the several States on the coast a year ago, and their instincts to destroy have not lost a whit of its severity in the passing of twelve or more months.

Friday night myself and family were the guests of our boys and girls in Oakland at the Eighth Grand Annual Ball. The affair was well managed, and the number of attendants tested the capacity of Majestic Hall. At midnight there was spread before the guests a culinary feast which is seldom duplicated and infrequently beat; a feast which surely must have tickled the appetites of others quite as pleasantly as it did ours. Our folks in Oakland certainly know how to make and serve good coffee—that was the kind served at that midnight spread. It seems a pity that such fine culinary masterpieces as were placed on exhibition could not be preserved. But the sight of so many well-pleased guests is seemingly satisfying reward for the boys of the back end of the house.

Before my visit to Oakland on this trip I carried the impression that Oakland consisted of one main street and a bunch of shacks which the workers sneaked into at night for rest and slumber. In fact, the San Franciscans call Oakland their bedroom, or, rather, were accustomed to do so before the fire. But I noticed that they have changed their tune, and well they might, for if anything Oakland has it on the city across the bay from the standpoint of beauty; and Oakland needs to take no back seat when it comes to comparing its down-town district with that of its sister metropolis. We enjoyed every moment of our stay in Oakland, and we don't have to be coaxed to offer thanks to our members in that city for innumerable courtesies. The following brothers and sisters made the arrangements for our comfort and entertainment: Herman Loorz, John Kinnealy, Fred Bard, Fred Shroeder, W. A. Hoskins, Charles Houser, William Spooner and A. C. Beck, Sisters Mrs. P. Fisk and Mrs. A. Kennedy assisting materially.

Saturday, November 6th, we left Oakland for San Francisco, arriving about noon, and devoted the remainder of that and the following day in clearing up unfinished business which came to hand from headquarters and elsewhere.

Monday, November 8th, the opening session of the American Federation of Labor Convention occurred at the California State Building inside of the exposition grounds. It is not my purpose to cover the proceedings of the convention in this recital of travel and visits. The convention will be covered, as the newspaper writers say, by the secretary of the delegation. The San Francisco labor forces, through its Arrangements Committee for the convention, furnished sight-seeing cars for the trip from the Sutter Hotel to the exposition grounds. They also furnished admission to the exposition.

On Tuesday, November 9th, sight-seeing cars carried the delegates, families and friends to Golden Gate Park, Cliff House, Presidio Fortifications and through the business district.

Wednesday night to the Empress Theater.

Thursday, November 11th, a trip to Vallejo, a banquet in that city and a trip to Mare Island Navy Yard. Returning in the evening in time to witness the fireworks at the exposition from the boat.

Saturday evening, November 13th, a reception and ball at the Civic Auditorium wound up the first week of the convention.

Sunday, November 14th, saw that four-flushing sky pilot, Rev. Charles Stelzle, who has confiscated the title of "Labor-Preacher" on a "Rain Check" membership in the Machinists' International Association, trying to pull off a similar stunt as he managed in the city of Toronto several years ago. But trade unionists are wise to "Little Chawley," and their absence from his well-advertised meeting must have been gall and wormwood to his puny, dried-up soul.

It required almost "human endurance" on the part of "Little Chawley" to sit for several years in the conventions of the A. F. of L. without "tipping his hand" and sloshing over with his Anti-Saloon League flub dub. And after his Toronto performance he assumed that he had the whole "works" tied and billeted, ready to be delivered to P. A. Baker, his Boss. But after sizing up his audience at Scottish Rite Temple, Sunday afternoon, November 14, 1915, and discovering that the seats were occupied by women and children from the Sunday schools of San Francisco, it was noted that his cocksureness in having a genuine organized labor following among the delegates to the convention was about as un-substantial as the statistics which he borrowed from "Kissing Bug" Hobson, and of which the Public Ledger, of Philadelphia, said: "The cause of temperance is damaged, not advanced, by such gross exaggeration."

Our membership will, no doubt, be interested in "Little Chawley's" labor record. According to the records of Lodge 254, International Association of Machinists, Charles Stelzle applied for and was admitted to membership in the month of Deember, 1903. Mr. Stelzle was at that time and date an ordained minister of the Presbyterian Church. He was not working as a machinist, as is required by the laws of the I. A. M.; therefore, the conclusion that his membership is of the "Rain Check" variety. In November, two years later, he blossomed forth as an aspirant for honors and courtesies at the hands of Organized Labor, and the Pittsburgh Convention of the A. F. of L. was the first upon which he inflicted himself and his assortment of platitudes. Stelzle played a bunco game on that and subsequent conventions, for, with possibly the exception of the writer, none of the delegates doubted the sincerity and protestations of "Little Chawley." They swallowed the hook, line and sinker, and for several years he managed to have printed, and without cost, alleged labor articles with a stinger so adroitly concealed that the editors of labor papers paid composition bills and printed his articles with the impression that they were really aiding the movement of organized labor. But they woke up suddenly when they found that "Little Chawley's" employers were paying the so-called secular press for practically the same substance as they were giving free passage for. Rev. Charles Stelzle lays claim to being a paid-up member of the I. A. M., but he is discretely silent when it comes to advising his hearers that he never thought of becoming a member of the I. A. M. until long after he had discarded the jumper and overalls and had been ordained as a minister of the Gospel. While the going is good, we hereby challenge Rev. Charles Stelzle to produce any record which will go to show that HE EVER WORKED A SINGLE DAY IN ALL HIS LIFE AS A TRADE-UNION MACHINIST PREVIOUS TO HAVING BEEN ORDAINED AS A MINISTER.

Let me emphasize the point by repeating that "Little Chawley" is a RAIN-CHECK UNION MEMBER. He became a member of Lodge 254, Des Moines, Ia., in December, 1903, and if he ever did work as a machinist it was not as a member of a Machinists' Union.

Our members will pardon the writer for this extended reference to Stelzle, but it seemed about time to puncture his so-called labor record to let the men and women, and especially the good, kind labor editors who were so generous in acceding him space in their papers without cost, know something of his past.

On Sunday evening, November 14th, myself and family were the guests, along with a goodly number of officers and delegates attending the convention of the A. F. of L., of ex-Mayor P. H. McCarthy at his home. A very tasty luncheon was served, and the good things in the form of beverages were "on duty to the last call." I am sure I shall not be accused of an extravagant expression when I say that all who accepted the invitation of His Honor ex-Mayor P. H., his estimable wife and family are not likely to forget an evening such as occurs too infrequently among laborites.

Among those present at ex-Mayor McCarthy's home on the evening mentioned were: President and Mrs. Samuel Gompers and daughter, Miss Sadie Gompers; Secretary and Mrs. Frank Morrison, and Vice-Presidents of the A. F. of L. Frank Duffy and John Alpine and daughter.

During my stay in San Francisco I was the recipient of invitations to attend the meetings of Local 110 and 41. The former I was unable to accept, owing to committee engagements which prevented me getting away. The meeting of Local 41 I attended, as I had an opportunity of making arrangements in advance. I was not able to be with the members of Local 41 but a brief period, but endeavored in my address to them to caution them of the approaching storm in California; a storm which is growing more and more menacing day by day. Local 41 had arranged a banquet for our delegation, which, I understand, was "some doings."

In concluding this installment of the record of my trip, I desire to convey to all of our members, their families and friends who have in any way shown us courtesies grateful acknowledgment and thanks. We have been enjoying ourselves hugely, and feel confident that we shall have material enough to keep the Sullivan trio busy recalling incidents during the long winter evenings to come. We have not been able to keep up with some of our correspondence, due, mainly, to the difficulty of declining pleasures arranged for our benefit, and we solicit the kindly tolerance and patience of such members as have written us en voyage.

In passing it may not be amiss to say that writing us on official business which could have been cared for by those at headquarters simply means delay, as all such letters must of a necessity be replied to at the cost of time lost in transferring same to the general office.

WORK.

No man is born into the world whose work is not born with him; there is always work and tools to work withal, for those who will, and blessed are the horny hands of toil.—Lowell.

Section 141. All official announcements printed on the Official Pages of the Mixer and Server shall be read at the first meeting after the journal has been received by the Secretary and a copy posted at the local union headquarters for the benefit of all those who may have been absent from meetings.

SECRETARY'S ROSTER.

One of the provisions of the International constitution reads:

Duties of Secretary-Treasurer, Section 104, last paragraph: "He shall publish semi-annually in the MIXER AND SERVER the addresses of all locals in good standing with the International Union."

In order that such roster of addresses may be as accurate as it can be made, secretaries are urged to co-operate and forward to the general office similar information as has been published in the past.

For the benefit of such officers as have forgotten, as well as new officers, we desire the following information:

Number of local union.

Location.

Meeting days.

Meeting place.

Secretary and his permanent address.

By referring to the August issue of the MIXER AND SERVER for this year, 1915, an idea of what is done with the information obtained may be gleamed.

Semi-annual elections usually occur during the month of December, hence we should have up-to-date information by the date of closing up forms for the February number of the MIXER AND SERVER, which will be January 25, 1916. Retiring secretaries are respectfully requested to bring this matter to the attention of their successors; an accurate secretaries' list is an essential to the proper conduct of the business of the International Union.

CHARTERS.

The following charters were issued during the month of November, 1915:

WHAT PROHIBITIONISTS DESIRE.

That the desire of those who are at present devoting every energy to eliminating the legalized saloon from our State are not in the least interested in the moral uplift of our people is evidenced by the following quotation from the Bisbee, Ariz., Review:

"A. R. Bucknam, the local prohibitionist, who has made his headquarters in Bisbee for the past few months, states that the cause of prohibition has been greatly advanced, not only by the decision of the State of South Carolina, but also by the decision of Judge Shute, in that the prohibition amendment does not prohibit the importation of liquor for personal use."

"Bucknam's contention is that the wet forces are hoping for a decision against the personal liberty clause, while the prohibitionists hope to have the law construed as they have maintained it was, from the outset."

Mr. Bucknam, quoted in the foregoing, is general secretary of the Temperance Federation of Arizona, and prior to his elevation to that position was one of the leaders in the fight for the Arizona prohibition amendment last fall.

Arizona occupies the unique position of being the only prohibition State in the Union that has adopted anything like real prohibition, the law providing that liquor shall not be introduced into Arizona under any pretext.

It appears that the prohibitionists of Arizona imagined that the consumers of liquors would be treated with the same consideration in Arizona as in other States adopting prohibition, and there was great consternation when it developed that the attorney-general and others interested in law enforcement in Arizona announced that there was no loophole by which liquor could be shipped to consumers in that State.

Mr. Bucknam is leading a very vigorous fight for "personal liberty" in behalf of the temperance forces of Arizona. He contends that it was not the intention of the voters of Arizona to deprive themselves of the "legitimate" use of liquor, and he further contends that the legitimate use of liquor necessarily means the personal use of liquor. He has voiced an insistent demand that the courts shall declare the law unconstitutional or that the law be repealed at the very earliest opportunity, from all of which it would appear that while the prohibitionists in Arizona care nothing whatever for the personal liberty of the citizens who would sell liquor, they have a very tenacious regard for their own personal liberty to buy and use liquor.

Furthermore, how can prohibition ever prohibit if the prohibitionists themselves can be counted on in every case to make a successful fight against the kind of prohibition that would prohibit?

An examination of the laws of the prohibition States will show that in every case the quantity of liquor that may be shipped into each "dry" State exceeds by many gallons the quantity of liquor consumed per capita throughout the nation.

For instance, in the State of Washington, which recently adopted "prohibition," the citizen may lawfully receive 6 gallons of whisky and 36 gallons of beer each year, although the national per capita consumption of liquor is only about a gallon and a half of whisky and about 22 gallons of beer.

But if the quantity of liquor that may be shipped is not sufficient for the consumers in the "dry" State of Washington, there is relief for the sufferers in a special clause that provides that citizens may carry into the State 2 quarts of whisky and 12 quarts of beer every 20 days.

Does Ohio [or any other State] need this kind of "prohibition temperance?"—Cleveland Federationist.

PRESIDENT'S PAGE

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., November 22, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my monthly letter for November:

The question of the right of a local union to retain its charter after its jurisdiction has gone over to the "Dry" column, has been asked of me on several occasions and for the general information of our membership, I desire to offer the following :

Local unions in territories that have gone over to the "Dry" column, may retain their charter of affiliation with the International Union so long as they can maintain ten members in good standing and keep the said local unions in good standing with the International Union, and further provided, that they comply with all the laws and regulations governing local unions.

The benefit derived from maintaining an organization after its jurisdiction has gone into the "Dry" column, is twofold; the local union and its members retain their identity as a component part of the International Union, entitled to all the rights and privileges as well as benefits of active membership accruing therefrom, and in addition to that, they place themselves in a position to maintain their identity with their local trade union movement, which in the event of the question of "Wet" or "Dry" again being submitted to the voters of their community, is an asset that cannot be measured in dollars and cents and one that has in more cases than the writer can call to memory, aided us in reversing the former position assumed by a municipality on this question and re-established our industry therein. Unless you retain your identity with the trade union movement, you cannot expect them to consider your cause with favor at some future date.

Secretaries and members when sending money to local unions for dues or reinstatement fee, should first refer to the financial standing of the said local union as published in current issues of the MIXER AND SERVER and if they find them over two calendar months in arrears in their per capita tax to the International Union, the dues or reinstatement fee, with the membership book, should be forwarded to the general office in Cincinnati, where the records of the said members' membership will be properly adjusted. Secretaries or members forwarding moneys for dues or reinstatement fee or other fees, to a suspended local union, do so upon their own responsibility, and the International Union will not in any manner assume responsibility for the same.

At this writing I am in attendance at the convention of the American Federation of Labor, a report of which I will submit at a later date.

On my journey to this city I stopped off in the city of Chicago long enough to say howdy to some of our boys and girls in that city; the same occurred in the city of Cheyenne, Wyoming; a short stop was made in Salt Lake City, Utah, where I met with the Local Joint Executive Board and discussed several matters of importance with them, bearing on the local situation in that city. During my stay in San Francisco, I attended the meetings of Locals 30, 41, 44, 48, and 110. I also accepted an invitation to attend a smoker given by Local 41 in honor of our delegates; an excellent spread was served and several good talks were made, all of which was very much appreciated. I also visited our local unions in Oakland.

My expenses for the month are as follows:

Nov. 3—Buffalo to San Francisco and return	$101 00
Pullmans	19 00
Nov. 21—Pullman, extra fare and validation of ticket.....	11 00

Respectfully submitted,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 654.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Nov. 15, 1915.

MR. A. B. HASSEL, Secretary, Local 284, Labor Temple, Los Angeles, Cal.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your communication of the 13th, wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"An amendment to our by-laws was recently passed and approved, which provides that a member to be entitled to hold an elective office, must be in good standing of this local for at least six months, and have attended the majority of meetings for the same period previous to election; we would like your decision as to whether that provision of the law will apply to those members seeking office at the coming election in December?"

The amendment referred to having been adopted and approved prior to the nomination and election, is in full force and effect, and is applicable to all members seeking office at the coming election in December. With greetings,

Yours fraternally,
EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

Decision No. 655.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Nov. 19, 1915.

MR. CHAS. I. GOODRICH, Secretary, Local 35, 234 W. Randolph Street, Chicago, Ill.:

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I have your commun

Digitized by Google

cation of the 11th, wherein you ask for a decision on the following:

"A member was reinstated September 11, 1915. He took out a traveling card, did not deposit it with another local, but returned it to the issuing local on November 1, 1915, he having paid no dues since. Can this member remain under the jurisdiction of this local while residing in the jurisdiction of another local union? The member states that he is in a hospital and therefore unable to work."

The traveling card received by this member having never been deposited with another local union, his membership continues to rest with the local union that issued the same, and while this member may be residing in the jurisdiction of another local union, if he is not following any of our allied crafts in the jurisdiction where he is residing, it is not mandatory for him to deposit his card, and he can return the same to the local union that issued it, within the time prescribed by law, and continue his membership with the said local union. With greetings,

Yours fraternally,

EDWARD FLORE,
General President.

THE CRIMES OF CHAIRMAN WALSH.

The American reactionary press possesses a philosophic charm, a gentleness, a moderation, a breadth of view, an idealism which it was almost too much to expect in a country so new and so raw. In an old country the defense of privilege is easy, for there privilege is wrapped in the mists of poetic tradition. William the Conqueror stole the land of England, but he stole it a long time ago, and it is now a proud thing to be a descendant of one of his fellow pirates. But American privilege is so new that the varnish smells. Its escutcheon bears a pick and shovel rampant and a wash-tub couchant. Its history needs careful editing. Its hugest usurpations were made in that acquisitive, anarchistic period before us, as our great industrial leaders now tell us, American business purified itself.

But the venerable Reviews of England could not lumber to the rescue of imperiled perquisites with any more heartiness than has been shown by the upper crust American press in going after Frank P. Walsh and his industrial relations commission. Their response has been almost galvanic.

They indict Mr. Walsh and his commission on several counts.

1. Mr. Walsh lacked judicial poise.
2. He was biased.
3. He was impolite to Mr. Rockefeller.
4. He was too courteous with "miners, miners' wives," strikers, union officials and other scum of the earth.
5. He published his findings in the newspapers instead of reserving them for the obscure recesses of the library of congress.

6. He spent half a million dollars, or about two and two-tenths per cent of Congressman Gardner's latest estimate for the cost of a first-rate line-of-battle ship.

Worse things than this have been said about Mr. Walsh and the commission. "The consensus of opinion," according to "American Industries," "is apparently that the country is well rid of an offensive nuisance."

As Mr. Walsh isn't dead the nuisance referred to is the commission, which is really and truly out of existence. The commission had two lines of work. It got information through field experts—most of them college professors. It held public hearings. It was the hearings, probably, which made it seem a nuisance. Yet the hearings were quiet and orderly. Those who attended the sessions held in this city saw no witnesses brow-beaten, although the occasional tricky or evasive witness, of whatever opinion, was likely to be questioned rather briskly. Mr. Rockefeller seems to have been the only person treated with actual incivility, and that was done only after he had refused the commission's proper request for information, and had made statements which were, at the very least not the whole truth, and Mr. Rockefeller's sufferings were quite mild in comparison with those of the men, women and children in the Colorado mining camps.

By a process of elimination only one charge stands against the commission: it aroused the public by dramatizing the obscure and hidden abuses of industrialism. It armed the progressive and the radical with a battery of unanswerable facts. It taught a large number of newspaper readers to regard change as necessary and inevitable. It stated unpleasant truths, which are always offensive.

Mr. Walsh was blunt rather than delicate. He used a club when a rapier might have done as well. He lacked tact. Sometimes he lost his temper. He could not help venting upon individuals the hatred he felt for unjust conditions. But that will not prevent his generous spirited work from bearing fruit, year after year, for at least a generation to come. No reactionary bluejay pecks will hurt it. The damage he has done, if it is damage, cannot be repaired.—San Francisco Bulletin.

SOMETHING WHICH YOU CAN NOT AFFORD TO MISS.

Do you remember—pardon me, speaking to those who have had the exceptional privilege of enjoying what we write of—do you remember the time when you brought in FIVE new applications to your local, how you walked down to the secretary's desk, head erect and about as proud as Lucifer was alleged to have been, you planked down the new application forms and the required money to pay the entrance fee, and at a succeeding meeting you chaperoned those FIVE new recruits to trade unionism into the ante-room. You willingly lost the pleasure of being inside; you wanted to be with your "boys" and see them go through in all right shape. And then they were escorted into the meeting room and obligated as members of the organization. Of course you remember. You are never likely to forget that pleasing sensation of knowing that you helped your union to grow in numerical strength; of knowing that you occupied, for a few moments at least, if not longer, the attention of those who had made a bluff at trying and failed to land even one new member. That was some excitement; some pleasure, wasn't it? You don't envy the member who has so far failed to enjoy the spotlight under similar circumstances, do you? Certainly not, and if you were minus such a pleasing experience you would get out and hustle, wouldn't you? Sure, Mike. It is a pleasure—a something which a member can not afford to miss. What's that, you can't do it? No man ever accomplished anything without effort, not even getting into trouble. That's the truth.

WHAT OUR ORGANIZERS ARE DOING

HOUSTON, TEXAS, Nov. 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of November:

In my last report I stated that I had well on the way a waiters' local for Houston, and stated that before that article was being read at the general office, I would in all probability have an application for charter on the way to headquarters. Such, however, proved true, for on October 27, I sent in for a charter which arrived here on November 2, after which we got busy to arrange for our first meeting. We arranged to hold our first meeting on the 4th and I wired our culinary local in Galveston and gave them an invitation to come up to Houston for this meeting. Brother M. W. Lusk, president of Local 69, Galveston, came and was present at this meeting, but owing to a misunderstanding as to the real date of the meeting we had only a small attendance for the first meeting, but later, and after Brother Lusk had returned home we held our meeting and instituted our new local. Owing to the fact that a number of our new members not wanting their names made public at this time I will refrain from giving officers' names or any names except the secretary, who says, "Let the world know I belong," Brother Gus Richardson, 3216 Lyon street, Houston, Texas, is the name and address of the secretary of Local 528, of that city.

After we had sent to headquarters for a charter, we learned that some of our charter members were suspended members from a suspended and defunct local, therefore we will have to drop them, as they will naturally have to reinstate through the International office and become members at large and obtain traveling cards as the law directs.

We are having an uphill pull of it just now with our new local, but we hope to have every waiter in Houston lined up in the next sixty or ninety days. I find here in Houston suspended members from locals in Los Angeles, Cal.; San Francisco, Denver, Salt Lake City, Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Cleveland, and in fact from every city on the map. I believe I can safely say there are one hundred suspended members in Houston from locals all over the United States. It seems to be a dumping ground for down and out members from our various locals throughout the country.

We are holding meetings about every third night and afternoon and I believe we are going to have the largest local in Houston in a short time that we have in Texas. We had our new delegates present at the Central Body meeting last Tuesday night and was given the glad hand by that organization.

There have been seven International organizers in Houston in the last thirty days, and believe me we have succeeded in making business pick up in that city from an organized labor standpoint.

My expenses for the month are as follows:

Nov. 4—Telegram	$ 0 51
Hall rent for four meetings to date.....	6 00
Post-cards, printing and distributing.....	2 25
Postage, stationery and supplies.....	1 50
Street car and Jitney fare.....	4 00
Typewriter work and supplies.....	3 50
Local and long distance telephone.....	1 25

Total $19 01

Wishing every officer and member of our great International a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year, and the most prosperous year in 1916 from a membership standpoint in the history of our organization, I am with greetings,

Yours fraternally,

W. E. REYNOLDS,
International Organizer.

BOSTON, MASS., Nov. 24, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the past month:

Attended a meeting of Local 509.

To Lowell, Mass., in the interests of the culinary workers.

To Worcester; attended a mass meeting of the culinary workers. The attendance was not what we expected, but we are continuing our efforts along organization lines. Attended a meeting of Local 509, installed the officers, assisted the new local in starting in the right direction. Attended a meeting of Local 112, and assisted in building up the organization. Attended a meeting of Lowell Trades Labor Council in the interests of our crafts in the city. Attended a meeting of Boston Central Labor Union. Assisted Business Agent Lane, of Local 6. Attended two meetings of Lowell Street Car Men's Union. Attended a meeting of Local 112, also a special meeting of the Boston Central Labor Union. Attended a meeting of Local 77. With Vice-President Conley, President Hurley, of Local 112, M. J. O'Leary, of the Boston Central Labor Union, waited on the manager of the Quincy House and were successful in our efforts, and at the next meeting of Local 112, we expect to see every girl employed in the house enrolled in the roster of Local 112. In company with Vice-President Conley, President Hurley, of Local 112, attended a meeting of the Boston Liquor Dealers' Association, at which time we presented our grievances and the deplorable conditions prevailing in the hotels and cafes, as well as the wages paid the girls. We believe from the outcome of this meeting we are going to see a big improvement, and we trust that we won't have much difficulty in getting the proprietors to sign our new agreement.

To Clinton, Mass., to straighten out existing troubles with Local 272. The balance of my time was devoted to the interests of Local 112.

The following is my expense account:

Oct. 24, to Boston, $1.39; 27th, Lowell, 60c; Oct. 31, Leominster, $1.99; Nov. 1, Holyoke, $1.96; Nov. 3, Worcester, $1.46; Nov. 6, Boston, $1.04; Nov. 9, Lowell and return, $1.20; Nov. 15, Lowell and return, $1.20; 22, Worcester, $1.04; 24, Holyoke, $1.46; postage and telegrams, $2.83; type-writing and phone, $3.40; car fare, $1.50; hall rent, $2.00; printing, $2.50. Total, $25.57.

Yours fraternally,

International Organizer.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Nov. 26, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—My report for the last month's work in the city of Milwaukee is as follows:

October 27th, I attended the meeting of the label section of the Milwaukee Federated Trades.

October 28th, I spent the entire day investigating some of the ugly rumors that I had heard since my arrival in this city, concerning the affairs of Local 64, and I found that most of these stories were made of whole cloth.

October 29th, I attended the meeting of Local 59 in the afternoon, and the special meeting of Local 64 in the evening.

This meeting was called for the purpose of discussing matters pertaining to the future welfare of this organization, and there was a pretty fair attendance at this meeting, and all present seemed to be well pleased with the offerings made by Organizer Lyons and myself, and promised us their hearty co-operation in our work in Milwaukee.

October 31st, attended the meeting of the Executive Board of the Federated Trades and was chosen to act on a committee from this body to wait upon District Attorney Zabel, and find out his attitude on the Sunday closing proposition, and on Monday, November 1st this committee called on Mr. Zabel.

Nov. 2nd, attended a meeting of the Executive Board of the Wisconsin Trade Union Liberty League. Plans are being made by this organization to carry on an active campaign in this State next year.

November 3rd, attended regular meeting of Local 64. Financial Secretary Robson resigned and Brother Emil Gilka was chosen to act in that position. Brother Gilka is a hard, conscientious worker and this important office will receive the proper attention during his term of office.

November 5th, attended the meeting of Local 59.

November 8th, I visited the meeting of the Milwaukee Liquor Dealers, accompanied by Brother Gilka, and after a short talk I asked that the privilege of the floor be granted to a committee from the Milwaukee Federated Trades at their meeting on November 15, and my request was granted.

November 9th, attended the meeting of the Brewery Workers' Joint Council and requested the moral support of this organization and its different branches, in building up the organizations of our allied crafts in this city. Later in the evening I addressed the meeting of the striking glove workers and offered words of encouragement to the members of this organization that have been on a strike for several months.

November 10th, attended the meeting of Local 872 in the afternoon, and the meeting of the Label Trades in the evening.

November 11, attended the meeting of the Local Joint Executive Board of our allied crafts, which we reorganized on November 4, and plans were outlined for conducting a campaign this winter. Brother Bliss of Local 872, was chosen as chairman, and Brother Dickmeyer of Local 59, as secretary. Our Joint Board in this city has been very inactive during the past eight months, as they have only held two or three meetings in that length of time, but they promise to do better in the future.

November 12th, attended the meeting of Local 59 in the afternoon and a special meeting of Local 64 in the evening.

November 14th, attended meeting of Executive Board of the Federated Trades and made a request of this honorable body for a committee of three to accompany me to the meeting of the Liquor Dealers on November 15, and my request was granted and on November 15 this committee, consisting of Brother Welson, secretary of the Federated Trades; Business Agent Nikolaus, of the Brewery Workers, and Business Agent Reichert, of the Cigar Makers, attended the meeting of the Milwaukee Liquor Dealers, and appealed to these men to insist that the men in their employ join the organizations of our allied crafts.

Brothers Welson, Nikolaus and Reichert made splendid talks and their efforts were appreciated by all present, and I believe that the visit will produce good results, as we have had several calls for applications since that time.

November 17th, attended meeting of Local 64 and we had eight new applications for membership, six reinstatements and two initiations. A call will be sent out for a big "Booster" meeting to be held on December 2nd.

November 18th, went to Racine to investigate certain matters that had been called to my attention and made arrangements to attend the meeting of Local 322 on November 23rd.

November 23, went to Racine and attended the meeting of Local 322. The affairs of this local have been somewhat mismanaged lately and I will visit that city in the near future and assist in adjusting some matters that need attention.

My expenses for the past month are as follows:

Nov. 18—Milwaukee to Racine and return.	$1 00
Nov. 23—Milwaukee to Racine and return.	1 00
Local car fare for month.....	2 25
Postage and stationery.....	1 65

Total $5 90

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Nov. 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of November:

October 26th, attended meeting of the Cooks' Union, Local 408, of St. Paul, in the hopes of having that local union reinstate. Meeting was fairly well attended, but the important part was laid over for their next session to handle.

October 27th, attended conference of the Twin City Waiters' Association. It is a certainty that organization was greatly needed here, and everybody realizes the opportune time has arrived to better the conditions of these workers.

November 3rd, attended meeting of the Trades and Labor Assembly. Matter of the Unique Restaurant came up, Organizer Anderson and the undersigned making arrangements with Hantz & Olson, proprietors, to adjust same from an organizing standpoint.

November 7th, attended special meeting of the Twin City Waiters' Association with Vice-President Hoffman and Organizer Anderson, for the purpose of explaining a matter that was not clear to the members of the aforesaid association.

November 10th, accompanied by Organizer Anderson and Business Agent Woods, of Waiters and Waitresses' Union, Local 593, I visited the College Inn, and interviewed Mr. Kramer, the proprietor, regarding a former member of Local 106, who, in his opinion, imagined that it was not necessary to reinstate with his former union.

November 11th, assisted by Organizer Anderson, audited the books of Waiters and Waitresses' Union, Local 593, for the past year, and rendered them a report accordingly.

November 14th, made arrangements with Vice-President Hoffman to institute Twin City Waiters' Alliance, Local Union 536, of Minneapolis, Minn. The honor of this ceremony was bestowed upon Brother Sam De Lappe, who is President of the Local Joint Executive Board, assisted by Vice-President Hoffman, Organizer Anderson and the writer. Immediately thereafter the officers of the above union were then installed. Committees from the Bartenders' Union, Local 152; Waiters and Waitresses' Union, Local 593, and Northwestern Cooks' Union, Local 458, being present, gave the members of Local 536 an excellent talk, assuring them of their co-operation at all times, which received applause that lasted for some great length. President William Whalen, of the newly instituted alliance, was called upon to speak, and after a well-chosen address gave notice to all present that on November 30th the Twin City Waiters' Alliance, Local Union 536, would tender a reception to organized labor of Minneapolis; and he being vested with the knowledge that our representatives from the A. F. of L. would be on their way home by that time, they also would be extended an invitation.

November 15th, took up the matter of organizing the waitresses in the Unique Restaurant. Business Agent Woods, of Local 593, and Organizer Anderson accompanied me. The interview with Messrs. Hantz and Olson lasted nearly one hour. The Unique Restaurant carries a full crew of union cooks. We realize that Local 458 will have their interests better protected in having orders filled by a full crew of union waitresses.

November 17th, attended meeting of the Trades and Labor Assembly. This central body will institute in a short time a Labor Forward Movement, and contemplates interesting the Central Labor Union of St. Paul to join. The Minneapolis Trades and Labor Assembly have appointed a committee to work jointly with a committee of our L. J. E. B. to visit Mayor Nye, for the purpose of lifting the "lid" placed on the cabaret houses of their city, inasmuch as since that order to close was placed in operation it has worked to the detriment of our allied crafts.

November 24th, attended meeting of T. C. W. A., Local 536, with Vice-President Hoffman and Organizer Anderson. This meeting was packed to the doors. It was readily seen that their assembly hall was too small to hold their membership at this date, and to make preparation ahead to convenience their members, especially on meeting days, arrangement will be made to take over a loft in the adjoining building. Nomination for officers of 1916 and committee report on by-laws took up most of the time, outside of the initiation of twelve candidates that were admitted to membership.

In conclusion will state that I attended the meetings of Locals 152, 458 and 593 during the month in regular turn, and with the desired co-operation on the part of 458 our female workers are bound to progress.

My expense account for the month is as follows:

Typewriting	$ 1 25
Postage	3 90
Stationery	55
Telephone	1 15
Local car fare	3 00

Total $ 9 85

With Christmas greetings to the members of our International Union, I am

Fraternally yours,

WILLIAM B. JOYCE,
International Organizer.

P. S.—Throughout the month caused the reinstatement of many suspended members by communication, so that they would be eligible to membership in the T. C. W. A., Local 536, in accordance with Section 22 (A).

SEATTLE, WASH., Nov. 22, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—My last report left me in Hoquiam. Since then I have attended meetings of the following local unions and Central Labor Councils: Locals 804 and 771, Hoquiam; Local 791, Aberdeen; Locals 804 and 824, Raymond; Local 829, South Bend; Local 830, Anacortes; Local 473, Bellingham; Local 33, Seattle; Local 819, Port Angeles; and the Aberdeen and Bellingham Central Labor Councils.

I visited the secretaries of Locals 454 and 451, Everett, but have not had an opportunity to attend their meetings, as I was instructed to go to Bellingham to assist the culinary workers of Local 473, and as I am returning there I will take Local 473 up in my next report.

All of these locals are in pretty good shape, excepting Locals 804, 819 and 473.

With Local 804, Hoquiam, I spent several days, and got them together October 25th, and transacted business of some importance. The members are realizing the fact that if they hope to maintain union conditions in the city of Hoquiam they have got to get on the job.

The members of Local 830, of Anacortes, are certainly showing up fine. Some of them have gone through the prohibition game before, and, despite the possibility of again losing their jobs when the State goes dry January 1, 1916, they reflect a spirit of genuine trade unionism.

On November 2 I called on Secretary Walter Conrad, of Local 836, Centralia, and together we looked the situation over with the prospect of organizing a culinary local in that city. But I desire to say that I don't think that conditions warrant the time for that purpose now, but at some future time, perhaps, we may be able to organize a culinary local there.

As I said before, I wish to take up Local 473 in my next report. Also I wish to report further on Local 819, of Port Angeles, for I expect to return there on December 5 to help them fix up their business for the final closing.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Oct. 21—Stamps and stationery.....	$ 0 75
" 21—Interurban car fare for month..	1 10
" 27—Hoquiam to Raymond.....	3 45
Nov. 2—Raymond to Centralia.....	1 75

PORLAND, OREGON, November 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the past month:

Prompt payment of the seventy-five-cent "Banner" assessment by the members of Local 189 combined with the appropriation of $150.00, allowed by the General Executive Board, has permitted this militant local to further extend its fight for organization and better conditions. During the month two more firms were placed on the unfair list.

Left Portland for Astoria on the 12th and attended meeting of Local 142, bartenders. The meeting was well attended, seventeen of the thirty members present. As this organization has decided it would be impossible to retain charter after the first of the year, I showed them the folly of eliminating themselves by the withdrawal card route, and received the assurance the full membership would retain active membership by transfer to headquarters. Made a thorough canvass of the culinary workers and was forced to conclude that until Portland was better organized nothing could be done to get results in either Salem or Astoria.

Returned to Portland on the 20th. Attended meeting of Bartenders' Local 339, Sunday the 21st. Approximately one hundred members were present. This local enjoys good leadership and a loyal membership. Will retain its charter in the hope of better days to come.

The following is my expense account:

Nov. 12—Portland to Astoria.....	$2 00
Baggage transfer	75
20—Astoria to Portland.....	2 00
Baggage transfer	75
Postage	50
	$6 00

With best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a prosperous New Year, I am,

Yours fraternally,
FRANK E. MERRYFIELD,
International Organizer.

CHICAGO, ILL., December 1, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—My report for the month follows:

My principal effort during the month has been along the canvassing line in the various sections of this big city trying to persuade those I come in contact with to become members of our organization. There is many a heartache in the abuse one receives from some of the individuals you come in contact with.

The trail of old 172 is still in evidence and it glistens and shines like a buffalo chil in the moonlight.

I have used all the persuading power that I possess to make recruits for our International Union, and I can truthfully say that my efforts have fallen far below my expectations.

In the name of High Heaven what is the matter with our people of Chicago.

A campaign will soon be on that means the extermination of the business from which they earn a livelihood and yet they seem to realize it not. Indifference seems to be the watchword of our tribe. A rude awakening is possible April next when the ballot decides.

I have attended all meetings of our allied crafts whenever the opportunity presented itself and attended to other matters that Vice-President Foster has assigned me to. I have worked in conjunction with my colleagues on several propositions in the interest of our organizations and I might conclude by saying that it has been a very busy month for all.

I had the pleasure of meeting President Flore and Brothers Koveleski and Farrell in the early part of the month on their way to the A. F. of L. convention in Frisco.

My expenses for the month follow:

Cards and postal cards.....	$ 2 75
Car fare	4 25
Telephone	50
	$7 50

Wishing each and every member of our International Union a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, I remain,

Yours fraternally,
JERE F. McCARTHY,
International Organizer.

OAKLAND, CAL., November 29, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of November:

On the 1st, to Richmond, to take up matters of interest for Local 595. Visited all members on shift relative to the special meeting for the 2nd. Eight p. m., with Vice-President Vitaich of the State Federation of Labor, visited Painters' Union, No. 560, at their meeting. The labor movement of this city has suffered from a division of the ranks, the radicals having gained control followed the usual course, and today the members of the movement of Richmond are reaping the harvest. Now they have got to start over again and follow the advice of the practical, instead of the "dreamers," who can easily "promise" the world, but who usually fail to deliver anything of a beneficial nature to the workers.

On the 2d, about 50 per cent of the membership of Local 595 attended the meeting; considerable business which had piled up during the past two months was transacted, and plans prepared which I hope will install new life into the boys to the end that they may get back the conditions which they enjoyed some time ago. Some of the members imagine that someone else will do the worrying for them, presumably the Prohis. Secretary "Micky" Malloney and Treasurer John Graham are always on the job, and deserve better support of the membership than they are getting.

November 3rd, to Martinez. After considerable work, prospects look to be good for a local here. If conditions are any inducement, the boys will get into line.

November 4th, meeting of Local 31, of Oakland. Consideration of the wage scale took up most of the session. Ball Committee reported favorable conditions fo success. With Brothers Spooner and Goas, assisted in the reception of General Secretary Sullivan and family. At 8 p. m., attended banquet at the Hof Brau Cafe, given by Locals 31 and 525 to Mr. and Mrs. Sullivan and daughter.

November 5th, after routine day's work, enjoyed the dance given by Local 31, which was a success, the credit for same being due to a great extent to the hard work of Business Agent Joe Means.

Nov. 8th, to Martinez. Had fairly good success, but failed to get a proper number of applications to start a local, however the boys were worked up over the proposition, and no doubt on the next visit we will make the grade. At 8:30 p. m., attended meeting of Central Labor Council at Oakland.

November 9th, to Alameda with Business Agent Bard of Local 525. If we had many towns in California like this one, it would be a tough old world for the members following our crafts. Some of the natives are so narrow between the eyes that you couldn't stick a needle between without pricking the skin on either side. Outside of a couple of bartenders the chances of getting members there is mighty small.

November 11th, meeting of Local 31.

November 12th, to Richmond for meeting of Local 595. Aside from regular business, the local decided to give a dance on December 18th, same being left in charge of Brothers Malloney, Patterson and the undersigned.

From November 13th to 14th, in Oakland.

November 15th, 16th, in Richmond.

November 17th, 18th, in Oakland.

On the 19th, took in the A. F. of L. convention in San Francisco, transacting business with President Flore and General Secretary Sullivan after the session.

November 21st, Central Labor Council of Oakland.

November 22nd and 23rd, in Oakland.

On the 25th, to Richmond, and from there at 3 p. m. to Martinez. With Brother T. J. Vaitach of the State Federation of Labor, covered all cafes and saloons in a last effort to get the boys to organize a local. We finally succeeded in getting eight signatures to the charter application, but as half of these were unwilling to pay the fee until the others in the town came through, I decided to put the matter over for a time to give the boys of Martinez time to think the question over. They certainly have need of a local there. The following is my expense account for the month:

Nov. 3—To Martinez and return.....	$1 80
8—To Martinez and return.....	1 80
25—To Martinez and return.....	1 80
Richmond and return, Nov. 1, 12, 15, 16, 23	1 50
Telephone (long distance, Martinez).....	45
Car fare, postage.....	4 65
Stationery	2 30
Printing (per bill).....	5 45

Total $19 75

With best wishes.

Fraternally yours,

A. C. BECK,
International Organizer.

CHICAGO, ILL., November 27, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of November:

Since the last report we have succeeded in re-organizing Local 649; paid up all indebtedness to the International and have a small amount of money left to turn over to the new treasurer as soon as the proper bond is filed.

New officers have been elected and installed and Local 649 bids fair to become a strong and militant organization in the near future.

Some of the locals here are having a bit of trouble collecting one dollar per month dues, as they have been paying "six bits" too long and cannot see any reason for the raise.

A mass meeting will be held November 28, at 1705 West Madison street, for all of our allied crafts at 7:30 p. m.

Have made three trips to South Chicago since last report and Local 376 is getting ready to inaugurate a campaign with the assistance of the organizers which will no doubt in my mind result in a vast increase in membership unless all signs fail.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Local and suburban car fare.....	$6 00
Telephone (local)	3 20
Hall rent for meeting, November 28.....	7 50
Postage	1 50
10,000 pluggers and postal cards (75)....	11 25
125 postal cards.....	1 50

JERSEY CITY, N. J., November 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of November:

October 25th, New York City, attended meeting of local joint board.

October 26th, New York City, assisting Sister B. Donner, of Waitresses' Union, especially on the Times Annex Restaurant at 43rd street.

October 27th, New York City, working with Business Agent Obst, of Cooks' Local 719. Evening in conference with officials of Down Town Bartenders' Local 118 at Gilligan's Hall, 3 Chambers street.

October 28th, New York City, at headquarters of Musicians' Local 310, to form an alliance of musicians, bartenders, waiters and cooks. Evening to Central Labor Union of Hudson county, New Jersey.

October 29th, Jersey City, N. J., at session of culinary workers. Evening to meeting of Bartenders' Local 4, at Odd Fellows' Hall, 218 Washington street, Hoboken, N. J.

October 30th, New York City, 12 St. Mark's Place, to meeting of female cooks.

November 1st, at New York joint board meeting, then to Pabst Coliseum, 110th street, in the interest of Locals 1 and 244.

November 2d, to Harrison and Kearny, N. J., to home of Local 762, to look the situation over.

November 3rd, Jersey City, attended meeting of Alliance of Musicians and our crafts. Same evening addressed the delegates of Buildings Trades Council of Hudson county, N. J.

November 4th, New York City, at headquarters of Musicians' Local 310, and alliance organized with officers elected and committees appointed to attend to future work of this body. Evening at banquet tendered to Brother Harry Kleinman, business agent of Waiters' Union, Local 1, of this city. A gold watch charm, set with diamonds, was presented the brother on his tenth anniversary of acting business manager of the local.

November 5th, Hoboken, N. J., to meeting of culinary workers. Evening attended meeting of Central Labor Union, New York, at Labor Temple, 84th street near 3rd avenue. Our locals were well represented.

November 8th, New York City, at meeting of Local Joint Board.

November 9th, New York City, working on Bartenders' Local 118; then to meeting of waitresses at 43 East 22nd street.

November 10th, New York City, at meeting of Bartenders' Local 244 (Kreitzer Hall), 86th street. Evening, advised with members of Bartenders' Local 118.

November 11th, Hoboken, N. J., attended meeting of Bartenders' Local 4.

November 12th, New York City, assisting Sister Donner, of Waitresses' Local 493; attended meeting of Bartenders' Local 3, and then to Joint Board meeting in the silk city, Paterson, to adjust a grievance existing between the locals, over wage scale of culinary workers, and same was adjusted to the satisfaction of both parties.

November 13th, New York City, picked up two applications for Cooks' Local 719.

November 15th, New York City, attended meeting of Local Joint Board.

November 16th, Dover, N. J., to meeting of Bartenders' Local 404, covered report to general office.

November 17th, addressed Joint Council of Bronx Liquor Dealers' Association at Tremont Hall, 177th street and 3rd avenue. Brothers Lehman and Toby of Joint Board, as well as representatives of Building Trades also spoke.

November 17th, to Elizabeth, N. J., at request of general office, to meeting of Bartenders' Local 682.

November 18th, presided at a joint meeting of Bartenders' Locals 3 and 244, of New York City; called for the purpose of bringing about a more harmonious relationship between them.

November 18th, addressed a meeting of Elizabeth, N. J., trades council to secure the support of locals affiliated, which was assured me. Some misunderstanding existed between the cigar makers, bakers and musicians, but I expect in my next visit to have all those tangles unraveled. Also dropped in to report to State President Geo. T. Carroll, State President of New Jersey Liquor Dealers' Association; the fact that a number of prominent members of the State Association were not living up to agreements entered into between committees of their association and New Jersey Federation of Labor, and was assured by Mr. Carroll that he would get in touch with those whom I mentioned.

November 19th, Jersey City, attended meeting of culinary workers, also appeared before the coach drivers' members in session at Butler's Hall, corner 5th and Grove streets.

November 20th, New York City, assisting locals there.

November 21st, Jersey City, Sunday, addressed a mass meeting of organized labor called for the purpose of filing petitions to recall a commissioner of public improvements (Henry Byrne).

November 22nd, New York City, to a special meeting of Waiters' Local 1.

November 23rd, Jersey City, presided at meeting of bartenders here at Teidiman's Hall, 180 Newark avenue.

November 24th, attended meeting of Local 244, Bartenders, New York City. Evening at meeting of Cooks' Local 719 at 12 St. Mark's Place.

My expense account for the month is as follows:

Nov. 2—Jersey City to Harrison, N. J., and return	$0 30
12—Hoboken, N. J., to Paterson and return	70
16—Hoboken, N. J., to Dover and return	1 80
17—New York City, N. Y., to Elizabeth, N. J., and return.....	50
18—New York City to Elizabeth and return	50
Phone use and postage	2 65
Tube and local car fare between, and in New York City and cities of New Jersey.	5 60

Total $12 05

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., November 29, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the last month:

I have attended the meetings of the various locals of our International unions throughout the Twin Cities, and considerable good has been accomplished at all of these meetings; considerable good has also been done between the meetings.

I might mention the dates of the meetings but it would take up too much time and so would it do to mention of the details of the various things that have been done in this section of the country. The Trades and Labor Assembly and other local organizations have been doing all that they possibly could do in order to help our locals in this city, as well as in the city of St. Paul.

The new local established here and known as the Twin City Waiters' Association, Local 536, ought to be a help to the other locals in this vicinity, as there are several old timers in there from other locals, who know everything from A to Z; among them being William Whalen, Jas. A. Burnett and "Sporting" Kramer of Chicago, Ed. Peck of Cleveland, Private John (Chips) Douglas of Los Angeles, Betters, Nash and others from St. Louis, Sheehan and Dennis from Kansas City and others whose names I can not recall at this particular time from San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland, Seattle, Tacoma, Salt Lake City, Denver, San Antonio, Milwaukee, Detroit, Winnipeg, Buffalo, Pittsburg, Cincinnati and other places, and with their experience they ought to be able to make good.

Local 408 in St. Paul, also got straightened out and I hope that they will continue their good work along with the Bartenders' Local 287, and the Waitresses' Union, Local 630.

While in this city, Brother Joyce and the writer checked up the membership books, ledgers and all other books of Local 593, and found everything in good shape.

A proposition is now on hand to get the members of our International protected by having an ordinance passed that will make it a misdemeanor for any one to send a minor to a saloon for the purpose of procuring liquor, and to make it a crime as well for any one between the age of 14 and 21 to procure any liquor on misrepresentation.

The conditions in the State of Minnesota are in fairly good shape; the dry agitation is almost killed and all the boys have to do here is to keep up the good work that they have been doing.

My expenses for the month are as follows:

St. Paul and return (eight times).....	$ 1 60
Car fare in both cities	2 20
Telephone service	50
Postage	2 20
Typewriting	1 25
Stationery and supplies	1 10

Total..... $ 8 85

With Yuletide greetings to all the members of our International, I am,

Fraternally yours,

JAS. H. ANDERSON,
Special Defense Organizer.

CHICAGO, ILL., November 28, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of November:

After mailing my October report on the 28th of last month, I attended the meeting of Local 865; this was election day for this local, and on the 29th for Local 484. On this latter date I had the pleasure of meeting Brother Frank Hoffman, our second international vice-president. During the past month I have attended the local joint board meetings and all meetings of Locals 865 and 35, also the city council meeting on November 8th.

As stated in my previous report, my work is such that to make a complete report, as I have it entered in my day-book, would require considerable space, but suffice it for me to say that the culinary end of our International Union here is showing a decidedly brighter horizon than last month; although results are coming in slowly the material is of the best. Cooks' Local 865 is on its feet again and giving us all assistance needed to further our work. Local 484 is progressing also, Sister Maloney being out with me nearly every day. Local 35 is also gaining.

November 3d, I had the pleasure to meet Brothers Koveleski and T. Farrell, and on the 4th, Brother Ed Flore, our International president. On the 11th I had the honor to install the officers of Local 865. Also had several meetings with some Hebrew waiters of the West Side and hope to be successful in bringing them into local 35.

Last night, Local 865 held their annual dance, which was successful in every way, Bro. J. R.

Bliss, president of Local 872 of Milwaukee, being in attendance with his family, representing his local.

I might say before closing that if the cooks here will be able to get good headquarters somewhere in the Loop it will be half the battle won; I am doing my best to that effect.

My expense account for the month is as follows:

Phone	$1 35
Postage	1 76
Stationery	40
Care fare	7 70

Total..... $11 21

A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to our members.

Fraternally submitted, A. MARTEL,

CHICAGO, ILL., November 29, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month:

As per instruction on November 12th, I attended a mass meeting of Bartenders' Local 64, Milwaukee, Wis. I met Brother Brady who, in conjunction with myself, gave those present an educational talk which was well received.

November 13th, Brother Brady and myself met the executive committee of Cooks' Local 872 of that city, where matters of importance were discussed and to my mind will eventually bring about better conditions for the union cooks.

The balance of the month my time was taken up as follows: I attended meeting of Local 484, November 5th. The newly elected officers were installed and the meeting was well attended. After the meeting coffee and cake were served to those present. While we were partaking of the good things, we were entertained with music and singing by members of the local union. Brother Lyons rendered several songs and Brother McCarthy recited his newest poem, entitled, "The Leaves Are Waving Southward."

No doubt the readers who are observers are acquainted with fact that Local 484 has been successful in advancing their organization in the recent past.

November 11th, attended meeting of Local 865, where they held a public installation of officers. The meeting was fairly well attended and I feel confident that said local will benefit materially from the result of same.

I attended two meetings of Local 376, South Chicago, and I am at present assisting them in straightening out some of the differences that exist in that section of the city. This local is the strongest in the city.

I attended two meetings of the Local Joint Executive Board, one meeting of the Bartenders' Joint Council, one meeting of the Culinary Craft Council, one meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor, also one meeting of Local 507 and Local 35.

Some time was taken up in advertising a mass meeting of our allied crafts to be held the evening of November 25th.

The afternoon of November 28th, the very unpleasant duty fell upon Brother McCarthy and myself to attend a meeting of the South Side local that has been known as Local 401 since 1905. After four months' endeavor upon the part of your International representatives to straighten matters out with said local we were compelled to recognize that the extreme irregularities were so pronounced that there would be no possible way to separate the sheep from the wolves other than to take up the charter and seal and give those who were desirous of being consistent trades unionists an opportunity to retain their membership via the general office. Consequently we pursued this method.

I attended the mass meeting November 28th, and while I cannot report it as a success, still I am of the opinion that from the bartenders' standpoint good will come from it, as there were present at this meeting representative men from all locals of bartenders of the city and I believe when they left the meeting there was a more fraternal feeling existing between them than we have known for some time.

I have assisted several local representatives in their effort to sign up new establishments with fairly good success, still I must report that we are receiving the same old arguments in the same old way in the same old Windy City. There are several bright spots on the horizon pertaining to matters that cannot be reported at this writing that is being handled by a committee from the Chicago Federation of Labor and your humble servant.

I had the pleasure of meeting the following representatives of our International who passed through the city to attend the American Federation of Labor Convention in San Francisco. International President Flore, whom I had the opportunity of meeting for a few moments, Brother Koveleski, of Rochester, and Brother Thos. S. Farrell.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Nov. 12—To Milwaukee	$1 70
Nov. 13—To Chicago	1 70
Rent for typewriter for Oct., Nov., Dec....	5 00

LOS ANGELES, CAL. November 24, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of November:

November 1, attended joint meeting, with committee for the Cooks and Bakers' Union, for the purpose of getting both unions to work together. On the 3d, attended meeting of Local 27 to take in two new members.

November 4th, attended meeting of Local 17; some business of importance was taken up and two members were admitted by card. Also attended meetings of the local joint executive board and the central labor council. On this date the New Haven Cafe was signed up as a union house, after eleven days' hard fighting; all the employees now belong to the union.

November 5, attended regular meeting of the central labor council.

November 8th, attended funeral of Brother

Miller of Local 17. Also attended meeting at San Pedro; business of importance was taken up.

November 10th, attended meeting with proprietor of restaurant and was told to call again for an answer. On the 11th, attended meeting of Local 17; one new member was taken in. On the 12th, some of the waitresses gave "an evening at home" to the brothers of Local 17, and they had a very nice time.

November 15th, the committee on wage scale for Cooks' Local 27 met; I attended at request of Local 27.

November 17th, attended meeting of the Los Angeles Union Anti-Prohibition League; a very large meeting was held and delegates from other local unions were present.

November 19th, a meeting was held by the local joint executive board and arrangements were made to hold a joint meeting of all of the crafts when our general secretary-treasurer arrived in Los Angeles.

November 22, attended meeting of San Pedro; took up charge against Bro. G. W. McDonald, who was found guilty of having used the funds that belonged to the local union; on this same day I left for Bakersfield, where I arrived on the 23d, meeting with many of the members who are working hard for their local union; matters were taken up which were to the interest of our locals in the Los Angeles district.

November 24th, met our general secretary-treasurer, and on the 25th arrived in Los Angeles, where a mass meeting of our crafts was held at 8:30 p. m. Bro. Jere L. Sullivan was present, and the meeting was largely attended.

All the meetings that I have attended during the past month were well attended and the members promised a boost for new members.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Nov. 8—San Pedro	$0 50

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., November 24, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of November:

Progress unto the end, with no stop-over privileges until Stockton is again thoroughly organized, is the slogan of the labor movement, and that slogan can specially be applied to Locals 403 and 572, who are working harmoniously and harmony will bring good results.

Since my last report, have signed up two of the best restaurants and straightened out a few difficulties. The restaurants which stood with the M. M. & E. during the lockout and refused to even talk to us are now willing to discuss the question with us, and believe that before long they will be willing to play in our back yard.

October 30th, assisted General President Jas. F. Brock of the laundry workers, to call out the crews of two laundries in Stockton, and, without very much persuasion we were gratified to see the help respond to our call and refuse to work until their just demands were granted.

November 3d, General Secretary-Treasurer Jere L. Sullivan and family arrived in Stockton, and were met at the depot by the following committee: Dick Perrin, president Local 403; L. L. Chase, secretary Local 403, Fred Funck, business agent Local 403; C. J. Taylor, trustee Local 403; J. Cavanaugh and Mrs. F. Funck; A. G. Dyke, president Local 572; Orlando Mull, vice-president Local 572; Jas. Redenbaugh, secretary Local 572; Al King, trustee Local 572; John George, Mrs. John George, Tillie Laughery, and the undersigned, who extended to the Sullivan family a hearty welcome to the city of Stockton. After getting acquainted, the committee escorted them to the Hotel St. Leo, and from there a trip was taken in automobiles through the beautiful surroundings of Stockton and Lodi.

November 4th, arrived in San Francisco to confer with the attorney who has charge of the injunction issued against our membership in Stockton, and to attend the convention of the A. F. of L. as a delegate from the Los Angeles Central Labor Council.

November 15th, with General President Flore, Thos. Farrel, E. Koveleski and Joe Cozzolino, visited our locals in Oakland.

GLENS FALLS, N. Y., November 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of November:

On October 24th, reported to the legislative headquarters of New York State Federation of Labor at Albany, N. Y., and received instructions from those in charge of the campaign against the revised constitution, which was to be submitted to the voters of New York State on November 2d, and from October 25th to November 2d was kept busy pounding the proposed amendments. Visited Amsterdam, Johnstown, Gloversville, Fonda, Canajoharie and Schenectady; attended meetings in all these places. The result of the work of the Trade Union Movement in New York State against the revised constitution was very gratifying, as the proposed constitution was defeated by over 500,000 votes. The New York State Federation of Labor can take the credit for this grand showing of what the united efforts of the workers can do if only they will act as a unit.

On October 31st, attended a meeting of Local 320 at Schenectady; meeting very well attended.

November 3d, to Troy, where Local 207 was having some trouble. After looking over the situation in Troy I decided to call a meeting on the 7th. In the meantime I called on several of the members who promised to do what they could to revive Local 207.

November 4th, attended, or tried to attend a meeting of the liquor dealers. While I was not successful in getting in at the meeting I had a good heart to heart talk with the president and several of the prominent members. It seems that Local 207 got in bad for asking or trying to ask for one day off in seven; the result is that the liquor dealers of Troy are not going to let the bar boys organize if they can help it, and I am sorry to say that some suspended members of Local 207 are helping the dirty game along.

November 8th, to Mechanicville to see what could be done with the men working there; after talking to several I came to the conclusion that it was a waste of time, as the other crafts are not very well organized.

November 10th, attended a meeting of the Troy Federation of Labor. After going into the matter of the bartenders in that city, the federation went on record to do all they could to help bring back to life Local 207 and help them get better conditions, for the boys of Troy surely have very bad conditions. Some camps have no keys to their doors.

November 11th, back to Glens Falls, where I had been given the "ha, ha" by some of the enemies of organized labor. But not to be outdone by them I started in and the result is that on the 16th I sent to the general office for a charter.

November 17th, to Whitehall, N. Y., to look over the prospects of a local; but no labor movement there and bartenders working under all kinds of conditions, and do not seem to want to better them.

November 18th, to Plattsburg, N. Y. This is the place where they make soldiers out of any old fellow who comes along—at least that is what they tried to do last summer.

November 19th, attended a meeting of the Central Labor Union and stated my mission to that body, who promised to do what they could to help organize the bartenders; and I know that the promise is being kept, for on the 24th I secured a charter list and sent to the general office for a charter on the 25th.

November 22d, attended a meeting of the carpenters and painters, who are doing all they can to make a good, live local of bartenders in Plattsburg. One card man in this town—Brother Hugh Collins, of Louisville, Ky.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Oct. 25—Albany to Amsterdam.....	$0 50
26—Amsterdam to Gloversville.....	45
27—Gloversville to Johnstown and ret.	20

VANCOUVER, B. C., November 25, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of November:

November 1st I started out with Brother Davis, business agent of Bartenders' Local 676, to visit the hotels with the idea of inducing non-union bartenders to become members, and I believe we have some of them thinking in the right direction. I am sorry to say we are still fighting the Astor, from which we had to withdraw one of our members recently.

November 7th, attended the meeting of Bartenders' Local 676, which was fairly well attended.

November 12th, attended a meeting of the Cooks, Waiters and Waitresses' Local 28, but only a few members were in attendance; also attended a meeting of the same local on Friday, November 19th, but there were no more present than at the previous meeting. I had a long talk with President Davis and former business agent, Brother Graham, about conditions, and they contend nothing can be done owing to the general depression of trade, many proprietors doing their own work.

November 21st, attended a meeting of Bartenders' Local 814 of Victoria, which was well attended there since my last visit, they having elected a very bright set of officers at their last election, and feel sure that they will succeed in making this local one of the best.

November 23d, attended a meeting of the local joint executive board of Victoria, and it seems as though they intend to do business along the right lines.

The conditions of Local 459 of Victoria are similar to those of Local 28 of Vancouver, a good many being out of work owing the depression of trade.

My expense account is as follows:

Nov. 20—Vancouver to Victoria, with berth,	$3 05
24—Victoria to Vancouver, with berth	3 05

Total.....	$6 10

TACOMA, WASH., November 24, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of November:

To Everett. Local 451 is doing fine, having at this time only two places in the city where a House Card is not displayed, and one of them we will have lined up before this report reaches the printer.

Local 454 is going along just as if they had never heard that the State of Washington had held a wet and dry election last November. Which means they will retain their entire membership.

To Tacoma. Local 61 has no fault to find with results of the past four months, either numerically in membership, or from a financial standpoint. From a membership of 138 in June, they have increased their membership to 168 in October, and practically the entire membership working. Financially they have held their own; after paying numerous outstanding debts, they have a small surplus to their credit. They have but few unfair houses, and are about 75 per cent organized. Too much credit cannot be given for these splendid results to President Marshall Hill, Thomas Bischoff, chairman of the executive board, Sister Lillie Smith, treasurer, and last but not least, Secretary

H. Roy Harrison, who took hold of the office with nothing in the treasury but past experience. Roy has shown the members of Local 61 what hard work and only that, will accomplish what we are trying to maintain.

Local 707. The members are maintaining their organization as a whole; in fact I do not believe they will lose any members on account of conditions as they exist in the State of Washington at this time. They are boys that believe there is always a chance and another thing, as Brother McFarlane told me, if the worst comes to the worst, Washington is not the only spot in the United States. McFarlane wound up his remarks by saying, I should worry, 20-lb corn-fed turkey for my Thanksgiving.

To North Yakima, where I am sorry to report, I was compelled to pull all labels and send charter and outfit to the office. I made every effort to try and keep them in line, called three special meetings and visited every member in person. With the net results of having two at one meeting and one at the last. They have simply laid down on the job. State President Marsh and Secretary Taylor also visited North Yakima on more than one occasion and met with the same results as I did. There were other Internationals compelled to do the same—send their charters back to headquarters.

One International I have in mind, were taking down 3.50 per day when their union was working. Today they are working for $1.50 and are almost committing murder to get the job. One thing in passing twenty-four hours after the labels were pulled, our members were cut in salary, and I believe that on my next visit to the city I will be able to get them back in line. For some people we are compelled to show the value to themselves of maintaining a union.

To Pasco, where we were having some trouble trying to take out a bar label. However a new agreement has been signed by the proprietor, and in this agreement he agrees to abide by the laws governing the label.

To Ellensburg, where business is very poor, and our members are somewhat discouraged, but they are plugging along, and will be able to maintain their own.

To Seattle, where I had the pleasure of attending one of our girls' local meeting. And without throwing any bouquets it was a revelation to me. The hall was literally packed, and when a committee came in the room, headed by our Bob, there was no room for any chairs, either on the floor or on the rostrum. And this was no boosted meeting, just an every day affair with this local. This is the answer for the success they are having. The bartenders' local is an up-to-date progressive organization who believe to get results you have to get out and hustle. Their meetings are well attended, and the best of all they do business. The meetings are called promptly, business conducted in a business-like manner, and the members have a chance to get home and eat dinner with their families.

They have an Executive Board which is an up-to-date business proposition. The cooks' local I visited on two occasions, and found a set of officers and members who were honest in their efforts, trying to better the conditions of their members. They are handicapped more than any other local in the city with the Jap proposition. It is a hard nut for them to crack, but I believe they will solve this problem, with the assistance of the proprietors, who are awakening to the fact that the Jap is becoming a menace to them. I have not had the pleasure of attending any of the meetings of the waiters, as unfortunately I have not been in their city on their meeting days, but expect to be able to visit their local in the near future. Brother Ed. Levi informs me that they are more than holding their own, and expects when the good times hit the coast they will be able to show a good sized increase in membership.

The following is my expense account for November:

CHICAGO, ILL., November 29, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the past month, as follows:

October 29th, under instructions of Third Vice-President Foster, I went to Milwaukee to assist Organizer Josh Brady for a few days, and before I was in town two hours I found our allied crafts were in bad shape and that it would take some time to get them in shape. I attended the meeting of Locals 59 and 64, and would like the members of Local 59 to give some assistance to Brother Foley, as he is a good worker and deserves credit for trying to keep the boys together. Local 64 had a special meeting, the attendance being very good. Brother Brady and myself gave them some good advice and they all promised that they would go down the line and assist Brother Brady during his stay in that city. While here I met two members from St. Louis, Brother Fuller, formerly of Local 20, and Brother John Stiel of Local 51; both brothers are good workers and will give a good account of themselves.

October 31st, came back to Chicago, and in the afternoon attended meeting of Local 649.

November 1st, attended local joint board, and on the 2d and 3d did general work in the Loop.

November 4th, met General President Flore and Brothers Koveleski and Farrell.

November 5th, attended meeting of Local 484, and it was one of the best meetings I've seen in this city. That night went to a special meeting of Local 401; only three members showed up, and I blame the business agent for the conditions in that local.

November 6th, went over the books of that local and found them in bad shape.

November 7th, took part in the wet parade; about seventy-five thousand men and women marched and it lasted five hours—some parade.

November 8th, general work on the South Side.

November 9th, attended the following meetings, bartenders' joint council, and Local 456.

November 10th, attended coal teamsters and helpers, also Chicago Janitors' Union.

November 11th, Business Agent Giese called on me and we went over his accounts of Local 401.

and the only excuse he had was, he got careless like the rest of the members and forgot he ever had a ledger.

November 12th, sent notices to members of Local 649.

November 13th, went with Third Vice-President Foster to meet the men who clean coil pipes in saloons; there are about 140 of them here, and several of them had spoken to me in regards to organizing. As they call on every saloon in this city I am satisfied they could do us some good if they were organized.

November 14th, attended meeting of Local 649, and assisted our Third Vice-President in installing a new set of officers, and watch them grow in the near future.

November 15th, attended Local Joint Board meeting that afternoon, and Local 507 that evening. Those boys are also going to the front. A committee was appointed to locate new headquarters and every member is appointed as a committee of one to bring in a new member the coming month.

November 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th, with Brothers Woods and Irwin, and Organizer McCarthy, canvassed for membership and distributed cards announcing a mass meeting for all our allied crafts to be held November 28th at 1705 W. Madison street.

November 21st, Organizer McCarthy and myself went to the South Side Local 401; nine members were present, and we agreed to call another meeting November 28th.

November 22nd to the 27th, accompanied Brother Woods on the West Side calling on the members of the retail liquor dealers.

November 28th, attended meeting of Local 649 in the afternoon, and the general mass meeting that evening. The attendance was very small, as the weather was very bad, and so is the men and women that follow our craft; there are 12,000 bartenders. My advice to them is look out for next April. Now is the time to get rid of those people who have no vote. Organize your help as that is the only ammunition you have to keep you in business, the only connecting link you have with organized labor; so get wise.

Wishing the officers and members of the International Union a Merry Christmas and a prosperous and happy New Year.

My expense account for the month is as follows:

Milwaukee and return.....	$3 40
Telephone	80
Postal cards for Local 401.....	1 30
Local car fare.....	4 85
Stationery and Postage.....	80
 Total	$11 15

PUEBLO, COLO., November 26, 1915.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—The following is my report for the month of November:

In Denver I find our locals in very good shape and making some progress. In Colorado Springs, the Cooks' and Waiters' Local 52 is making wonderful progress. In Pueblo, Locals 43 and 282 are in good shape and Local 43 is making progress, gaining every day. Some serious questions have arisen in the last month, but by cool-headed and conservative action on the part of the officers things have been adjusted satisfactorily. Cripple Creek is doing as well as could be expected. Alamosa and Leadville I did not visit.

I visited thirteen local unions and five central body meetings during the month and if I am any prophet the culinary workers are going to make some showing in this State, in the near future. They seem to have laid aside that "oh! what is the use" feeling and to realize that it is up to them to do what the International officers, the organizers, nor their local officers can not do for them, namely, convince the non-union craftsmen that they come in contact with that it is to their interest to become members of the union and to be consistent by demanding the label on all their purchases and by not taking no for an answer. Therefore advertising themselves as a live bunch by always keeping it before the people that they come in contact with in their daily walk in life.

A FEW COLD FACTS.

Under the above heading an editorial in the Daily Leader, Corry, Pa., presented the following array of facts to prove its contention that the adoption of prohibition threatened a financial upheaval and that wherever tried it was a social, moral and financial failure:

"Recent figures compiled by the Census Department at Washington shows that the taxpayers and people of this nation are partners in the liquor business to the extent of $245,400,000. In addition to this the same people, by States, take another percentage of the profits to the extent of $21,000,000. Again the people take a third profit by counties to the extent of $6,600,000. Once more the people dip into the profits and take $79,600,000 by towns having a population of 2,500 and over. This makes a total of $352,600,000 in dividends paid to the people of this nation annually out of the profits of the liquor business, and it is used for pensions, for salaries, for schools and for city improvements.

"To go a step further let us dissect these figures:

"The population of this country outside of charitable institutions, is 80,000,000. Divide the profits paid from licenses and internal revenue and we have $4 for every man, woman and child, or $16 per year for every family. Let's cut it off and add it to the taxes—and see a revolution!

"In 1913 the State of Pennsylvania received $1,800,940 as its portion of the profits. The counties of the State received $423,357 more, while the towns and school districts took the third dividend to the tune of $3,885,852—a total of $6,110,149.

"So much for the financial side. Now let us turn to the social side.

"It is contended that prohibition produces temperance, but the Bureau of Census reports do not substantiate that contention. For instance, out of 67 counties in Alabama 9 sell liquor and the State derives a revenue of $585,645 from licenses. Georgia has State-wide prohibition and no revenue, yet there is as much liquor drunk in Georgia as in Alabama.

"Again turning to Census Bulletin No. 112, for 1911, at page 77, we find the average death rate, exclusive of suicide, was lower in 29 States where liquor was sold than the death rate of Kansas, for many years a prohibition State. In 3 States

I think that there has been a greater feeling aroused for and among the culinary workers in this State in the last month than has been in some time past and they are going to win and grow.

The following is my expense account for the month:

Denver to Pueblo.....	$3 55
Colo. Springs to Cripple Creek and return. 7	80
Transfer	50
Stamps	50
Telephone	35
Total	$12 70

With fraternal greetings, I beg to remain

Yours fraternally,

J. N. BUTLER,

it was higher. In 6 prohibition States it was higher. Pennsylvania was considerably lower.

"In 38 States investigated the average death rate from suicide was lower in 20 of them where liquor was sold than it was in prohibition Kansas, and in 11 license States the average was a little higher.

"Census Bulletin No. 96, on Marriages and Divorces, page 42, shows that 27 States where liquor is sold, have a lower divorce rate than Kansas, and 13 have a higher rate. Oklahoma, another prohibition State, has a higher rate than Kansas. Pennsylvania was about one-third lower than Kansas or Maine.

"On page 47 we find that from 1887 to 1906 there were 33,080 divorces granted to wives because of husband's drunkenness. During this same period the State of Kansas granted more divorces on account of drunkenness than 25 States where liquor is legally sold, and the State of Maine with 1,756 divorces because of husband's drunkenness was nearly three times larger than the Kansas record of 630.

"If prohibition prohibits or causes temperance, where did these men get their 'booze'?

"The annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for June, 1913, page 460, gives some interesting statistics on the average savings in savings banks.

"In 27 States in which liquor is lawfully sold the average saving per depositor is higher than that of the average depositor in Kansas. In nine States it is lower. Four prohibition States show a higher average than Kansas and four lower. The average in Pennsylvania is nearly double that of Kansas. Maine was $30 below the average for the United States and Kansas was but little over half the average for the United States.

"Once more we turn to the only official records, Census Bulletin No. 103, on religious bodies, 1906, page 40. Out of all States investigated only four States had a lower church membership in proportion to population than Kansas. Two of these, Wyoming and Oregon, were license States, and two, West Virginia and Oklahoma, were prohibition States. Thirty-eight States in which liquor is lawfully sold had a larger percentage of church membership than Kansas. The percentage of Kansas was 28.4; Maine, 29.8; Pennsylvania, 43.0.

THE FORUM

THE UNITED STATES COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

The MIXER AND SERVER is convinced that in offering these significant summaries of the report of the above named commission, it is performing a function which will be appreciated by all of our members. In the last issue we suggested that our members write and urge their Senators and Congressmen to vote for the printing of the report in quantities sufficient to distribute said report generally among the workers of America. The "interests" whose toes have been tread upon will use every ounce of energy and effort to prevent general distribution of the commission's report, but if the Senators and Congressmen "HEAR FROM HOME" and OFTEN enough, they will know that the VOTERS are on the job and will not be satisfied until they secure THAT REPORT in its ENTIRETY.—Editor, MIXER AND SERVER.

PRESS ABSTRACT

OF THIRD SECTION OF REPORT OF BASIL M. MANLY, DIRECTOR OF RESEARCH AND INVESTIGATION, CONTAINING FINDINGS OF FACT AND RECOM- MENDATIONS OF THE STAFF.

Report in full accepted and ordered printed by resolution of Commission. Adopted by Commissioners Frank P. Walsh, John B. Lennon, James O'Connell and Austin B. Garretson.

Evidence in support of the statement that the lives of millions of wage earners are subject to the dictation of a relatively small number of men, is cited at length in the third and final section, made public today, of the report of Basil M. Manly, Director of Research and Investigation for the United States Commission on Industrial Relations.

The following allegations are made as statements of fact based on the testimony and evidence in the hands of the Commission.

"Except, perhaps, for improvements in safety and sanitation, the labor conditions of corporation-controlled industries are subject to grave criticism and are a menace to the welfare of the Nation.

"In order to prevent the organization of employees for the improvement of working conditions, elaborate systems of espionage are maintained by the larger corporations which refuse to deal with labor unions, and employees suspected of union affiliation are discharged.

"The domination by the men in whose hands the final control of a large part of American industry rests is not limited to their employees, but is being rapidly extended to control the education and 'social service' of the Nation.

"This control is being extended largely through the creation of enormous privately managed funds for indefinite purposes, hereinafter designated 'foundations,' by the endowment of colleges and universities, by the creation of funds for the pensioning of teachers, by contributions to private charities as well as through controlling or influencing the public press."

The Rockefeller Foundation's entrance into the field of industrial relations, through the creation of a special division, it is declared, "constitutes a menace to the national welfare to which the attention not only of Congress, but of the entire country should be directed. Backed by the $100,000,000 of the Rockefeller Foundation, this movement has the power to influence the entire country in the determination of its most vital policy."

Mr. Rockefeller is charged with planning to utilize literature which was known to him at the time to be untrue and misleading in a so-called "union educational campaign."

There is developing, says the report, a degree of control over the teaching of professors in our colleges and universities, which constitute a most serious menace.

URGES CONGRESS TO ACT.

Congress is urged to enact a statute providing that all incorporated non-profit-making bodies, whose present charters empower them to perform more than a single specific function and whose funds exceed $100,000,000, shall be compelled to secure a Federal charter.

The charter, it is urged, should contain provision limiting the funds, definitely and exactly specifying the powers, providing rigid inspection of finance, providing complete publicity, and providing that no line of work not specifically mentioned in the articles of incorporation shall be entered upon without the unanimous consent and approval of the Board of Trustees nor unless Congress is directly informed of such intention.

Congress is further urged to make provision for a thorough investigation of all endowed institutions both secular and religious, whose property holdings or income exceed a moderate amount.

The third recommendation touching upon the work of foundations is that Governmental activity along the lines of education and social service should be increased as the only effective means of counteracting the influence of the foundations as long as they are permitted to exist.

The report says in full regarding concentration of wealth:

"The evidence developed by the hearings and investigations of the Commission is the basis for the following statements:

1. The control of manufacturing, mining and transportation industries is to an increasing degree passing into the hands of great corporations through stock ownership, and control of credit is centralized in a comparatively small number of enormously powerful financial institutions. These financial institutions are in turn dominated by a very small number of powerful financiers.

2. The final control of American industry rests, therefore, in the hands of a small number of wealthy and powerful financiers.

3. The concentration of ownership and control is greatest in the basic industries upon which the welfare of the country must finally rest.

4. With a few exceptions each of the great basic industries is dominated by a single large corporation, and where this is not true, the control of the industry through stock ownership in supposedly independent corporations and through credit is almost, if not quite, as potent.

5. In such corporations, in spite of the large number of stockholders, the control through actual stock ownership rests with a very small number of persons. For example, in the United States Steel Corporation, which had in 1911 approximately 100,000 shareholders, 1.5 per cent of the stockholders held 57 per cent of the stock, while the final control rested with a single private banking house.

Similarly in the American Tobacco Co., before the dissolution, 10 stockholders owned 60 per cent of the stock.

6. Almost without exception the employees of the large corporations are unorganized, as a result of the active and aggressive "non-union" policy of the corporation management.

Furthermore, the labor policy of the large corporations almost inevitably determines the labor policy of the entire industry."

EXTENT OF CONTROL.

7. "A careful and conservative study shows that the corporations controlled by six financial groups and affiliated interests employ 2,651,684 wage earners and have a total capitalization of $19,875,200,000. These six financial groups control 28 per cent of the total number of wage earners engaged in the industries covered by the report of our investigation. The Morgan-First National Bank group alone controls corporations employing 785,499 wage earners. That this control is effective is shown by the following telegram from J. P. Morgan to E. H. Gary:

Aix les Bains.

E. H. Gary, New York.

Have received your cable of yesterday. My own views are in accordance with those of the financial committee in New York. Certainly until question of wages has been settled by the coal and railroads, which still in abeyance but settlement seems imminent. Whole question wages should be settled simultaneously by all interests if possible. Going Paris Wednesday. Will see the H. C. F., P. A. B. W., and will cable you result of interview. If possible and meets your approval, think better wait until after interview. Perfectly delightful here. Weather superb.

J. P. M.

8. The lives of millions of wage earners are, therefore, subject to the dictation of a relatively small number of men.

9. These industrial dictators for the most part are totally ignorant of every aspect of the industries which they control, except the finances, and are totally unconcerned with regard to the working and living conditions of the employees in those industries. Even if they were deeply concerned, the position of the employees would be merely that of the subjects of benevolent industrial despots.

10. Except, perhaps, for improvements in safety and sanitation, the labor conditions of these corporation-controlled industries are subject to grave criticism, and are a menace to the welfare of the Nation.

11. In order to prevent the organization of employees for the improvement of working conditions, elaborate systems of espionage are maintained by the large corporations which refuse to deal with labor unions, and employees suspected of union affiliation are discharged.

12. The domination by the men in whose hands the final control of a large part of American industry rests is not limited to their employees, but is being rapidly extended to control the education and "social service" of the Nation.

13. This control is being extended largely through the creation of enormous privately managed funds for indefinite purposes, hereinafter designated "foundations," by the endowment of colleges and universities, by the creation of funds for the pensioning of teachers, by contributions to private charities, as well as through controlling or influencing the public press.

14. Two groups of the "foundations," namely, the Rockefeller and Carnegie Foundations, together have funds amounting to at least $250,000,000, yielding an annual revenue of at least $13,500,000, which is at least twice as great as the appropriations of the Federal Government for similar purposes, namely, education and social service.

15. The funds of these foundations are exempt from taxation, yet during the lives of the founders are subject to their dictation for any purpose other than commercial profit. In the case of the Rockefeller group of foundations, the absolute control of the funds and of the activities of the institutions now and in perpetuity rests with Mr. Rockefeller, his son, and whomsoever they may appoint as their successors."

THE ROCKEFELLER FOUNDATION.

16. "The control of these funds has been widely published as being in the hands of eminent educators and public-spirited citizens. In the case of the Rockefeller foundations, however, not only is the control in the hands of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and two of the members of the personal staff of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Sr., who constitute the finance committee, but the majority of the trustees of the funds are salaried employees of Mr. Rockefeller or the foundations, who are subject to personal dictation and may be removed at any moment.

17. The funds of these foundations are largely invested in securities of corporations dominant in American industry, whose position has been analyzed under the early headings of this section. The policies of these foundations must inevitably be colored, if not controlled, to conform to the policies of such corporations.

18. The funds of the foundations represent largely the results either of the exploitation of American workers through the payment of low wages or of the exploitation of the American public through the exaction of high prices. The funds, therefore, by every right, belong to the American people.

19. The powers of these foundations are practically unlimited, except that they may not directly engage in business for profit. In the words of President Schurman of Cornell, himself a trustee of the Carnegie Foundation:

20. The charters of these foundations, with their almost unlimited powers, were granted under conditions of such laxity that it has been testified by an eminent legal authority who made an extensive investigation that those granted by New York State are legally defective and unconstitutional. Furthermore, evidence developed by the hearings of the Commission showed that in increasing the number of its trustees without complying with the requirements of the law governing corporations, the Rockefeller Foundation has already been guilty of a breach of the law.

21. These foundations are subject to no public control, and their powers can be curbed only by the difficult process of amending or revoking their charters. Past experience, as, for example, in the case of the insurance companies, indicates that the public can be aroused only when the abuses have become so great as to constitute a scandal.

22. The entrance of the foundations into the field of industrial relations, through the creation of a special division by the Rockefeller Foundation, constitutes a menace to the national welfare to which the attention not only of Congress but of the entire country should be directed. Backed by the $100,000,000 of the Rockefeller Foundation, this movement has the power to influence the entire country in the determination of its most vital policy."

BASIS NOT SOCIAL.

23. "The documentary evidence in the possession of the Commission indicates:

a. That the so-called "investigation of industrial relations" has not, as is claimed, either a scientific or a social basis, but originated to promote the industrial interest of Mr. Rockefeller. The original letter inviting Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King to associate himself with the Rockefellers stated that Mr. Rockefeller and Mr. Greene in "their purely corporate capacity as owners and directors of large industries" desired his aid,

b. That the investigation forms part of what Mr. Rockefeller, in a letter to Mr. Ivy L. Lee (the press agent of the Colorado operators), called the "union educational campaign," which is referred to by Mr. Bowers as "the fight for the open shop," the results of which are clearly manifested in the conditions existing in the camps of the Colorado Fuel & Iron Company, conducted on the "open shop" principle.

c. That Mr. Rockefeller planned to utilize in this campaign literature containing statements which were known to him at the time to be untrue and misleading (as for example the numerous misstatements in the "Sermon to Young Men" of Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, including the statement that the Colorado operators offered to recognize the miners' union), and also literature containing statements which constituted a malicious libel upon a large body of American citizens—for example, the following statement of Prof. John J. Stevenson: "Labor union defy the law but are ever ready to demand its protection; their principles are no better than those of the India Thugs, who practiced robbery and murder in the name of the goddess Cali."

d. That the investigation of industrial relations is not being made in good faith, inasmuch as its director states that he will not now nor hereafter make public his findings regarding a most important part of his investigation, namely, the investigation in Colorado.

24. The purpose of Mr. Rockefeller to influence the public press is clearly shown by the employment of an experienced publicity expert as a member of his personal staff, and is indicated by his evident interest in the ownership or control of a number of publications, of which we have records dating from the inquiry of his secretary regarding the Pueblo Star Journal in May, 1913, to the extensive conferences regarding a loan of $125,000 to finance The Nation's Business, the organ of the National Chamber of Commerce, which was established and given a semi-official status through the instrumentalities of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor with the sanction of a former president of the United States."

EXTENT OF INFLUENCE.

25. "The extent of the possible influence of these foundations and private endowments of institutions for education and public service is shown by a large amount of evidence in the possession of the Commission. The following examples may be cited:

a. The adoption of a definite line of policy by the Bureau of Municipal Research of New York to meet the conditions imposed by Mr. Rockefeller in connection with proposed contributions.

b. The abandonment by several colleges and universities of sectarian affiliations and charter clauses relating to religion in order to secure endowments from the Carnegie Corporation and pensions for professors from the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. It would seem conclusive that if an institution will willingly abandon its religious affiliations through the influence of these foundations, it will even more easily conform to their will any other part of its organization or teaching."

CONTROL OF COLLEGES.

26. "Apart from these foundations there is developing a degree of control over the teachings of professors in our colleges and universities which constitutes a most serious menace. In June of this year two professors, known throughout their professions as men of great talent and high character, were dropped from the positions they had occupied and no valid reason for such action was made public. Both were witnesses before the Commission, and made statements based upon their own expert knowledge and experience which were given wide publicity. One was a professor of law in a state university, who had acted as counsel for the strikers in Colorado; the other a professor of economics, who had not only been active in fights in behalf of child labor legislation and other progressive measures but had recently published a work comparing the income paid for property ownership with the income paid for all classes of service.

In the case of the state university we know that the coal operators in conjunction with other business interests had gained the ascendancy and exercised a great degree of control over the former Governor of the State, that the coal operators were bitterly opposed to the professor in question, and that the dismissal of the professor had been publicly urged by the operators upon numerous occasions, and we have the uncontroverted statement of the professor that he had been warned that if he testified before the Commission he would not be reappointed. In the case of the professor in the other university (which, though privately endowed, receives large appropriations from the State) we know that its trustees are interested in corporations which have bitterly opposed progressive legislation, and are men whose incomes are derived from property ownership and not from service.

In the fact of such an enormous problem one can only frankly confess inability to suggest measures which will protect the Nation from the grave dangers described. It is believed, however, that if Congress will enact the measures already recommended, providing for a heavy tax on large inheritances with a rigid limitation on the total amount of the bequest, for the reclamation by the Federal Government of all parts of the public domain (including mineral rights) which have been secured by fraud, and for a tax on non-productive land and natural resources, a great step in the right direction will have been taken.

As regards the "foundations" created for unlimited general purposes and endowed with enormous resources, their ultimate possibilities are so grave a menace, not only as regards their own activities and influence but also the benumbing effect which they have on private citizens and public bodies, that if they could be clearly differentiated from other forms of voluntary altruistic effort, it would be desirable to recommend their abolition. It is not possible, however, at this time to devise any clear-cut definition upon which they can be differentiated."

RECOMMENDATIONS.

"As the basis for effective action, it is suggested that the Commission recommend:

1. The enactment by Congress of a statute providing that all incorporated non-profit-making bodies whose present charters empower them to perform more than a single specific function and whose funds exceed one million dollars, shall be required to secure a Federal charter.

The Federal charter should contain the following provisions:

a. Definite limitation of the funds to be held by any organization, at least not to exceed the largest amount held by any at the time of the passage of the act.

b. Definite and exact specifications of the powers and functions which the organization is empowered to exercise, with provision for heavy penalties if its corporate powers are exceeded.

c. Specific provision against the accumulation of funds by the compounding of unexpended income, and against the expenditure in any one year of more than 10 per cent of the principal.

d. Rigid inspection of the finances as regards both investment and expenditure of funds.

e. Complete publicity through open reports to the proper Government officials.

f. Provision that no line of work which is not specifically and directly mentioned in the articles of incorporation, shall be entered upon without the unanimous consent and approval of the board of trustees, nor unless Congress is directly informed of such intention through communication to the Clerk of the House and the Clerk of the Senate, which shall be duly published in the Congressional Record, nor until six months after such intention has been declared.

2. Provision by Congress for the thorough investigation, by a special Committee or Commission, of all endowed institutions, both secular and religious, whose property holding or incomes exceed a moderate amount. The Committee or Commission should be given full power to compel the production of books and papers and the attendance and testimony of witnesses. It should be authorized and directed to investigate not only the finances of such institutions, but all their activities and affiliations.

3. As the only effective means of counteracting the influence of the foundations, as long as they are permitted to exist, consist in the activities of Governmental agencies along similar lines, the appropriations of the Federal Government for education and social service should be correspondingly increased."

Discussing the difficulties that confront wage earners in collecting labor claims and securing redress for minor grievances, the report recommends the establishment either by States or municipalities of industrial courts similar to those which have proved to be successful in European countries.

It also recommends that commissioners of labor or the industrial commissions of the several States should be directed to prosecute such claims vigorously.

UNIONS AND THE LAW.

Discussing the legal status of trade unions and the law relating to industrial disputes, the report says:

2. "The general effect of the decisions of American courts has been to restrict the activities of labor organizations and deprive them of their most effective weapons, namely, the boycott and the power of picketing, while on the other hand the weapons of employers, namely, the power of arbitrary discharge, of blacklisting, and of bringing in strikebreakers, have been maintained and legislative attempts to restrict the employers' powers have generally been declared unconstitutional by the courts. Furthermore, an additional weapon has been placed in the hands of the employers by many courts in the form of sweeping injunctions, which render punishable acts which would otherwise be legal, and also result in effect in depriving the workers of the right to jury trial.

3. Important steps have been taken to deal with this situation by the enactment of the Clayton Act, applying to the Federal jurisdiction, and by the passage of laws in Massachusetts and New York which define the rights of parties engaged in industrial disputes. The actual effect of the Clayton Act can not be ascertained until it has been tested in the courts, but eminent legal authorities have expressed grave doubts that it will accomplish the desired results. At any rate, it does not seem to remove the root of the existing injustice, and, furthermore, in all the States except New York and Massachusetts the grave and uncertain situation already described exists. This situation must be corrected."

URGES ENGLISH ACT.

4. "There are, apparently, only two lines of action possible: First, to restrict the rights and powers of the employers to correspond in substance to the powers and rights now allowed to trade unions, and second, to remove all restrictions which now prevent the freedom of action of both parties to industrial disputes, retaining only the ordinary civil and criminal restraints for the preservation of life, property, and the public peace. The first method has been tried repeatedly and has failed absolutely, not only because of the intervention of the courts but because the very nature of the acts complained of on the part of employers (blacklisting and arbitrary discharge) makes it impossible to prevent them effectively by any form of legislation or administration. The only method therefore seems to be the removal of all restrictions upon both parties, thus legalizing the strike, the lockout, the boycott, the blacklist, the bringing in of strikebreakers, and peaceful picketing. This has been most successfully accomplished by the British Trades Disputes Act, which is the result of fifty years of legal evolution."

tion, and in its present form seems to work as successfully as could possibly be expected.

"It is suggested, therefore, that the Commission recommend:

1. The enactment by Congress and the States, of legislation embodying the principles contained in the British Trades Disputes Act."

VIOLENCE.

Of violence in labor disputes the report says:

2. "Violence is seldom, if ever, spontaneous, but arises from a conviction that fundamental rights are denied and that peaceful methods of adjustment can not be used. The sole exception seems to lie in the situation where, intoxicated with power, the stronger party to the dispute relies upon force to suppress the weaker."

3. The arbitrary suppression of violence by force produces only resentment which will rekindle into greater violence when opportunity offers. Violence can be prevented only by removing the causes of violence; industrial peace can rest only upon industrial justice.

4. The origin of violence in connection with industrial disputes can usually be traced to the conditions prevailing in the particular industry in times of peace, or to arbitrary action on the part of Governmental officials which infringes on what are conceived to be fundamental rights. Violence and disorder during actual outbreaks usually result from oppressive conditions that have obtained in a particular shop or factory or in a particular industry. Throughout history where a people or a group have been arbitrarily denied rights which they conceived to be theirs, reaction has been inevitable. Violence is a natural form of protest against injustice.

5. Violence in industrial disputes is not immediately the product of industrial conditions, but of the attitude of the parties to the dispute after grievances or demands have been presented. The principal sources of an attitude leading to violence are:

a. Arrogance on the part of the stronger party. This may result immediately in violence through the use of force for the suppression of the weaker party. The force used may be physical or industrial. Physical force may be and is used by both employers and employees, through intimidation, assaults or attacks on property. Such physical aggression is seldom used by employees, as they are strategically the weaker party and the results are negative; only under exceptional circumstances can an employer be coerced by the use of force or intimidation. The exceptions seem to lie in the use of secret means, such as dynamite, with the object of weakening the employer's resistance.

The use of force by workers is normally directed not against the person or property of the employer, but against strikebreakers and guards. Many instances of the use of physical force by the agents of employers have, however, come before the Commission, indicating a relatively wide use, particularly in isolated communities. Such acts of violence usually take the form of assaults upon the leaders of the workers or upon organizers.

The instruments of industrial force belong chiefly to the employer, because of his control of the job of the worker. Their use is more common and more effective than any other form of violence at the command of the employer. The most powerful weapon is the power of discharge, which may be used indiscriminately upon mere suspicion, which under certain conditions may be almost as potent, either in use or threat, as the power of life and death. It is the avowed policy of many employers to discharge any man who gives any sign of dissatisfaction on the theory that he may become a trouble maker or agitator.

The only corresponding weapon in the hands of the workers is sabotage, in the form either of malicious destruction of property or of interference with production. The field of its use is much more restricted in practice than in theory and its results at best are negative and produce in the employer only a blind resentment and undiscriminating hate. Sabotage as a policy shows no signs of developing in American industry.

b. Equally productive of an attitude leading to violence is the denial of the use of peaceful methods of adjusting grievances, or the creation of a situation in which their use becomes impossible.

On the part of the employer the arbitrary acts which may be classed under this general head are:

Denial of the right to organize.

Refusal to consider the complaints of workers.

Refusal to meet the authorized representatives of workers.

Under modern industrial conditions any one of these acts makes peaceful negotiations and settlement impossible. Without organization of the workers their collective claims can not be considered; without the right to appoint such representatives as they choose, workers are at the mercy of the employer's power of discharge and are usually unequal to the task of presenting and arguing their claims; while the refusal to consider grievances leaves only the alternative of the strike.

On the part of the workers, the possibility of peaceful settlement may be destroyed by refusal to discuss claims, by internal dissensions which render collective and definite action looking to a settlement impossible, and by the issuance of ultimata which allow no time for consideration and negotiation. In any one of these situations the employer has only the choice between tame submission or absolute resistance to the demands of the workers."

VIOLENCE AND STRIKE BREAKERS.

c. "The immediate cause of violence in connection with industrial disputes is almost without exception the attempt to introduce strikebreakers to take the place of the workers who have struck or who are locked out. The entire problem of policing industrial disputes grows out of the problem of the strikebreaker and the attitude of the State toward him.

All experience shows that if no attempt is made to operate the plant, violence and disturbances requiring the police are practically unknown, whereas as the attempt of strikebreakers to reach the plant, particularly where strikers are enjoined or prevented from using reasonable means to inform them of the existence of the strike and to use persuasive methods to keep them from entering the plant, is invariably accompanied by disorder and sometimes by active violence.

The plea of the workers for the assumption of a new attitude in relation to strikebreakers, is based not only upon the negative character of the right of the employer and the strikebreaker, but upon a positive though somewhat undefinable demand for recognition that strikers have a right to the jobs which they have left until their grievances are in some way adjusted. The argument is not only that when workers are willing to strike and sacrifice their livelihood, the conditions against which they protest must be assumed to be socially injurious, but, even more, that the worker who has struck in support of his demand for better conditions has not abandoned his job, but, in fact, has a keener interest in it than when quietly submitting to distasteful conditions.

At the very basis of the workers' contentions, however, lies the realization that working conditions can be improved only by strikes and that no strike can be won if the employer can operate his plant without difficulty. This is becoming increasingly true with every step in the Nation's industrial development. During more primitive periods, if workers struck, their places could not be filled except through the existence of a surplus of qualified labor in the community or by enticing workers from other employers. Now, the development of transportation, the establishment of specialized agencies for supplying strikebreakers, and the growth of large corporations which can shift employees from one plant to another, have given each employer a command of the labor market of the entire country. There are agencies in every large city which will contract to supply any kind of labor on short notice, while almost any of the large industrial corporations can either supply the normal demand with one-half or three-quarters of their plants, or recruit from the surplus labor around their various plants a skeleton organization which can resume operations in a short time.

d. The greatest disorders and most acute outbreaks of violence in connection with industrial disputes arise from the violation of what are considered to be fundamental rights, and from the perversion or subversion of Governmental institutions."

STATE CONSTABULARY.

6. "The Commission devoted a great deal of attention to the question of a State constabulary as a method of policing industry. Extensive investigations of the organization, personnel, and activities of the Pennsylvania State Constabulary were made and a number of witnesses were heard at length. The findings with regard to this particular police organization may be briefly stated: It is an extremely efficient force for crushing strikes, but it is not successful in preventing violence in connection with strikes, in maintaining the legal and civil rights of the parties to the dispute, nor in protecting the public. On the contrary, violence seems to increase rather than diminish when the constabulary is brought into an industrial dispute; the legal and civil rights of the workers have on numerous occasions been violated by the constabulary; and citizens not in any way connected with the dispute and innocent of any interference with the constabulary have been brutally treated and in one case shot down by members of the constabulary, who have escaped punishment for their acts. Organized upon a strictly military basis, it appears to assume in taking the field in connection with a strike, that the strikers are its enemies and the enemies of the State, and that a campaign should be waged against them as such.

There are certain features of the State police system, however, which seem to be preferable to the present haphazard methods of policing strikes. It is desirable, first that all kinds of police should receive their entire compensation from the State. Second, an organized force, whose records are known, is preferable both to the private police of corporations and to the deputies ordinarily sworn in by sheriffs. Third, it is desirable that the force should be strictly disciplined and subject to definite orders. Fourth, it is desirable that those in command of any police force should have a reasonably secure tenure of office and should have previous experience under similar circumstances, as an inexperienced person is likely to become panic stricken by the mere presence of crowds, regardless of their actions.

If these desirable features could be combined with other features which would insure their impartiality during industrial disputes, and raise their ideals from the present militaristic basis to the police basis of preserving the peace and protecting the rights of both parties and the public, the establishment of State police systems for use in connection with industrial disputes might be recommended. But under present conditions, it seems desirable rather to leave the State policing of industrial disputes to the sheriffs and the militia if the restrictions hereinafter suggested are rigidly enforced so as to protect both the organization and the personnel from partisanship."

FREE SPEECH.

7. "One of the greatest sources of social unrest and bitterness has been the attitude of the police toward public speaking. On numerous occasions, in every part of the country, the police of cities and towns have either arbitrarily or under the cloak of a traffic ordinance, interfered with or prohibited public speaking, both in the open and in halls, by persons connected with organizations of which the police or those from whom they received their orders did not approve. In many instances such interference has been carried out with a degree of brutality which would be incredible if it were not vouched for by reliable witnesses. Bloody riots frequently have accompanied such interference and large numbers of persons have been arrested for acts of which they were innocent or which were committed under the extreme provocation of brutal treatment of police or private citizens.

In some cases this suppression of free speech seems to have been the result of sheer brutality and wanton mischief, but in the majority of cases it undoubtedly is the result of a belief by the police or their superiors that they were "supporting and defending the Government" by such an invasion of personal rights. There could be no greater error. Such action strikes at the very foundations of Government. It is axiomatic that a Government which can be maintained only by the suppression of criticism should not be maintained. Furthermore, it is the lesson of history that attempts to suppress ideas results only in their more rapid propagation.

Not only should every barrier to the freedom of speech be removed, as long as it is kept within the bounds of decency and as long as the penalties for libel can be invoked, but every reasonable opportunity should be afforded for the expression of ideas and the public criticism of social institutions. The experience of Police Commissioner Woods, of New York City, as contained in his testimony before this Commission, is convincing evidence of the good results which follow such a policy. Mr. Woods testified that when he became Commissioner of Police, he found in force a policy of rigid suppression of radical street meetings, with the result that riots were frequent and bitter hatred of the police was widespread. He adopted a policy of not only permitting ting public meetings at all places where traffic and the public convenience would not be interfered with, but instructing the police to protect speakers from molestation; as a result, the rioting entirely ceased, the street meetings became more orderly and the speakers were more restrained in their utterances."

To remove the cause which lead to violence and to promote the impartial and effective action of police during disputes, the following recommendations are made:

1. "The enactment by Congress of a statute prohibiting, under severe penalties, the transportation of men from State to State either under arms or for the purpose of arming them as guards or as agents either of employers or employees.

2. The enactment by Congress of a statute prohibiting the shipment in interstate commerce of cannon, gatling guns, and other guns of similar character, which are not capable of personal use, when consigned to anyone except military agencies of the State or Federal Governments.

3. The regulation or prohibition of private detective agencies and private employment agencies as hereinbefore suggested.

4. The strict enforcement in all public and private employment offices of the rules requiring full notice of the existence of a strike.

5. The complete assumption by the State and municipalities of the responsibility for policing, and the prohibition of the maintenance of any private police (except a limited number of watchmen without police power except on premises),

6. The definition by statute, by the States, of the conditions under which sheriffs may deputize, such regulations to include provisions that a deputy must be a bona fide resident of the State, that a sworn statement of the complete activities of each deputy covering a period of ten years immediately preceding his deputation shall be filed with the Secretary of State, that no person who shall have been convicted of any misdemeanor or who shall have been imprisoned in any State shall be deputized, and that no deputy shall receive any money or any other thing of value from any person connected with an industrial dispute during his period of service or in connection therewith.

7. The enactment of statutes, by the States, providing a uniform code governing the militia and embodying the following principles:

a. A proclamation of martial law or a state of war, insurrection or rebellion, by the Governor of a State, as the result of an industrial dispute, shall have no effect upon the continuance of the constitutional guarantees of the State and Federal constitutions, nor upon the law and statutes, nor upon the jurisdiction of the courts, nor upon other civil authorities.

b. The writ of habeas corpus or other process of the courts can not be suspended, interfered with nor disregarded by the military. It is part of the duty of the military to assist in enforcing the process and decrees of the civil courts.

c. The ordinary courts shall have exclusive jurisdiction for the punishment of crime, and in all cases where the same act constitutes an indictable offense under both military and criminal law, court-martials shall have no jurisdiction nor authority to try officers or soldiers accused thereof, but the offender shall be turned over to the civil magistrate for trial.

d. The military may not hold, detain, nor imprison persons arrested by them any longer than is necessary to hand them over to the civil authorities. No person arrested by the militia shall be detained after noon of the following day, without being brought before a committing magistrate.

e. The military may not forcibly enter nor search a private house in order to seize arms or other property concealed therein without a search warrant.

f. The military shall have no authority to establish a censorship over the press nor to interfere with the publication of newspapers, pamphlets, handbills, or the exercise of the right of free speech, except under process of the courts.

g. The military shall not limit, restrict, nor interfere with the freedom of movement of peaceable citizens or the rights of public meetings, assemblage, or parades in streets and public highways or elsewhere, except under due process of law.

h. Every military officer under whose orders a civilian is arrested shall within twenty-four hours thereafter report in writing to the commanding officer the name of the prisoner, the offense with which he is charged, and what disposition has been made of him. Failing, he shall be liable to such punishment as a court-martial may direct.

i. In times of industrial disputes no private guards, detectives, nor employees of either of the contending parties shall be enlisted or employed as members of the militia, and all persons found by the commanding officer to be in the employ of either party to a dispute or actuated by animosity or personal ill-will toward either of the contending parties, shall be forthwith released from active service.

j. The Governor may, in times of disturbance, by proclamation, forbid the sale or transportation of firearms, ammunition, and intoxicating liquors, and may require all firearms and other weapons to be deposited with the military at certain places, receipts being given therefor. Proper search warrants may be issued to discover concealed weapons.

8. That the States and municipalities should provide by law for the fullest use of schools and other public buildings for public meetings and lectures and for other similar purposes."

MIGRATORY WORKERS.

One important part of the report deals with the problem presented by large number of migratory laborers, many of whom find difficulty in obtaining employment during several months in the year.

The following recommendations to improve their condition are made:

1. "The Interstate Commerce Commission should be directed by Congress to investigate and report, the most feasible plan of providing for the transportation of workers at the lowest reasonable rates and, at the same time, measures necessary to eliminate the stealing of rides on railways.

If special transportation rates for workers are provided, tickets may be issued only to those who secure employment through public employment exchanges.

2. The establishment by States, municipalities and, through the Department of Labor, the Federal Government, of sanitary workmen's hotels in which the prices for accommodation shall be adjusted to the cost of operation. If such workingmen's hotels are established, the Post Office Department should establish branch Postal Savings Banks in connection therewith.

3. The establishment by the municipal, State and Federal Governments of colonies or farms for "down-and-outs" in order to rehabilitate them by means of proper food, regular habits of living, and regular work that will train them for lives of usefulness. Such colonies should provide for hospital treatment of cases which require it."

Other subjects treated at length by the report are: Unemployment; organization, methods and policies of trade unions; methods and policies of employers' associations; joint agreements; agencies of mediation, investigation and arbitration; sickness insurance; scientific management; prison labor; immigration; labor conditions in colonial possessions; and Chinese exclusion.

Labor conditions in Porto Rico are severely criticized by the report. Wages are declared to be low; housing and sanitary conditions bad; adequate protective laws and administrative agencies lacking; and the police and municipal authorities are charged with having denied workmen their rights. A full Congressional investigation is urged of labor conditions in Porto Rico and other possessions.

METHODS OF TRADE UNIONS.

Discussing methods and policies of trade unions the report says:

"The investigations of the Commission, conducted under the direction of Dr. George E. Barnett, are the basis of the following conclusions:

1. The number of trade unionists relative to the working population is steadily increasing, although in certain industries, on account of the opposition of the great corporations and hostile employers' associations, trade unionism is practically nonexistent. At present it may be roughly estimated that in manufacturing, mining, transportation and the building industries, if the proprietary, supervisory, official and clerical classes are excluded, twenty-five per cent of the workers twenty-one years of age and over are trade unionists.

2. The effects of trade unionism on wages are undoubtedly. Without some form of combination the wage workers can not bargain on equal terms with their employers. During the past fifteen years, a period of rapidly rising prices, wages in well organized trades have kept pace with the rising cost of living, in contrast to the relative decline of the purchasing power of the wages received by labor generally.

3. In the well organized trades, the hours of labor have been steadily reduced until at present eight hours is the normal working day for at least one-half of American trade unionists. It is significant of the influence of trade unionism on the length of the working day that it is exactly in those trades in which the trade unionists are a relatively small part of the total working force that they work long hours relatively to other trade unionists.

4. As the unit of industry grows larger, and the natural relation which exists between the small employer and his workmen disappears, the opportunity for unjustifiable discharges and petty tyrannies enlarges. The result is distrust and enmity among the employees. The effective remedy is the organization of the workers and the establishment of a system of trade boards in which the workers are equally represented with power to deal with such questions.

5. By means of mutual insurance in case of death, sickness, accident, old age and unemployment, many trade unions have greatly improved the conditions of their members. The extension of such systems appears to be highly desirable.

The trade union is a democratic institution, and faces the same problems in securing efficient government that other democratic institutions face. The theory of government which the American trade unions have adopted is the centralization of power in the national trade union as against the local unions. The successful carrying out of this plan of organization will eliminate the chief defects in trade union government. The control by the national union over strikes and the system of mutual insurance is already thoroughly established in the more important unions; it should be established in all other unions.

7. Unwarranted sympathetic strikes have undoubtedly been the cause of great annoyance and considerable economic loss to employers. The annoyance in such cases is particularly great, because no direct action by the employer can be taken; at best he can only use his influence with his associates or competitors. With the increasing control of the national officers over the local unions, this kind of strike seems to be decreasing both in extent and frequency. Such sympathetic action is deep rooted in the sense of brotherhood which to a greater or less degree pervades and will not be completely eliminated until substantial justice exists throughout industry.

8. A few trade unions exclude qualified persons from membership by high initiation fees or other devices. This policy is condemned by the more important unions and is prohibited by their rules. The evidence presented to the Commission shows clearly that the policy of exclusion is antisocial and monopolistic, and should be given up by those unions which practice it.

9. In many trades, the efficiency of the union depends upon the maintenance of the rule that all those working at the trade shall become members of the union. Where the union admits all qualified workers to membership under reasonable conditions, such a rule can not become the basis of monopoly and neither the rights of the individual nor the public interest are infringed by its enforcement.

10. In some trades there are a considerable number of union rules which restrict the productivity of the worker. Some of these rules can be justified on the ground that they are necessary to the protection of the health of the worker. There are some, however, which can not be defended; these rules are antisocial and should be given up. Experience has shown that where industry is regulated by well organized systems of joint agreements, such rules either disappear or greatly decrease in number and importance. These limitations of output should not, however, be considered as standing alone. The limitations of output by associations of employers and by individual corporations are equally antisocial and have far greater consequences.

11. Jurisdictional disputes are the occasion of frequent and costly strikes. The disputes of this character which have caused most injury are in the building trades. Up to the present, the efforts to lessen these disputes by action of the national unions involved have largely failed. It is suggested that the Commission recommend to the American Federation of Labor and to the national unions that renewed and more effective efforts be made to prevent such disputes.

12. The essential condition for trade union graft is the placing of the authority to call strikes or to levy boycotts in the hands of one person without adequate provision for supervision. This condition does not exist in many unions. There is abundant evidence to show that in very many cases it originates with the employers who desire to secure an advantage over their competitors. The reason that graft is more prevalent in the building trades is that power is conferred on the business agent to call strikes without reference either to the rank and file or to the national officers. It has been testified by employers who have given much attention to this problem that any well organized association of employers can eliminate graft whenever its members desire to do so. As far as the unions are concerned the solution seems to lie in the increased participation of the rank and file in the activities of the organization and increased provisions for fixing responsibility upon their business agents."

Joint agreements between employers and labor organizations representing their employees are urged as having proven the most satisfactory method of fixing conditions of employment.

A detailed plan for a permanent national mediation commission to be appointed by the President in disputes involving interstate commerce is outlined and urged upon Congress. Members, the number of which is not named, would be appointed for six years. Where official mediation of a strike fails, a board of mediation would be appointed consisting of three persons, one to be selected by the Commission and one by each of the parties. No power to compel arbitration should be given to such a Commission, says the report. The proposed commission would have jurisdiction in all strikes where an establishment, except public service establishments, is engaged in interstate commerce or sends its products in interstate commerce. The plan provides for permanent advisory councils of employers and unionists, who would work with the commission.

Discussing immigration, the report urges restriction based upon the general provisions of the so-called Burnett-Dillingham bill. It recommends:

1. "The enactment of legislation providing for the restriction of immigration based upon the general provisions contained in the so-called Burnett-Dillingham bill, which has received the approval of two successive Congresses. With a full realization of the many theoretical objections which have been urged against the literacy test, the consensus of evidence is so strong that its practical workings would be to restrict immigration to those who are likely to make the most desirable citizens, to regulate immigration in some degree in proportion to the actual needs of American industry, and finally to promote education in Europe, that it seems necessary at least to urge that this plan be given a practical test.

2. The enactment of legislation providing that within six months from the time of entry all immigrants shall be required, under penalty of deportation, either to declare their intention to become citizens by taking out their first papers or to definitely register themselves with the proper authority as alien tourists, and further providing that all immigrants who have failed to take out their first paper at the end of two years shall be deported, as shall all who fail to take out their second papers when they become eligible, deportation in each case to act as a bar to future entry.

3. The provision by the States and municipalities, with the assistance of the Federal Government, if necessary, for the education of all adult persons who are unable to speak, read or write the English language. In order to accomplish this it may be necessary to provide that employers shall grant certain definite periods of leisure for such instruction."

ARMY OF LORRAINE HAPPIEST ON WHOLE FRONT.

Herbert Corey, war correspondent for the Associated Newspapers, whose articles are copyrighted, continues to offer interesting side lights on the men in the trenches. Under the caption "A Cook and His Soup," he refers to a culinary worker in the following appreciative manner:

"We met a cook upon a narrow path leading to a trench in one of the passes of the Vosges. With his helper he was carrying a steaming cauldron of soup to the front line. Ordinarily one does not stop to pass the time of day with cooks in mountain passes. But we had the artillery captain with us. He beamed upon us as he paraded the cook.

"Don't you want to taste the soup?" he asked.

"I didn't want to taste the soup. But before I said so—before I revealed the cruel truth—I caught the look upon the cook's face. He was glowing with pride in this creation of his. He was frank about it. He isn't the sort of an artist who will skulk in the corner of the salon and admire his painting from afar. He would be right up on the brass rail, this cook—and probably clapping his hands.

"A spoonful," I said.

"A sunrise spread over his face. He dipped that spoon in as though it were a rite—carefully, between the floating bits of bread—and handed it to me almost with prayer. When I had finished it he handed me another. He didn't ask me this time. He knew the quality of that soup. He knew that if I declined that second spoonful I would sorrow for it to my dying day. That sort of a cook doesn't brew soup for grouchy men. They are happy, or he would not manifest that acolytic ecstasy. Grouchy men particularly hate cooks, even good cooks."

THE SARDEST WORDS, ETC.

At irregular intervals we at headquarters receive a communication from the secretary of a local which terminates with information substantially as follows: "Am sorry to report the death of one of our members who has been connected with our union for several years, but we will not file any claim for death benefit, because he was in arrears several months. It does seem a shame, too, for he was a pretty good scout, and, unfortunately, he leaves a wife and two children, who will find it pretty difficult to get along, and especially hard for them to defray the funeral expenses. He was sick three days, and no one acquainted with him imagined that he would be laid up over a week, for he was a fairly robust fellow. His taking off has rather stirred up some of the lagging brothers, who probably would have continued on the suspension list indefinitely if this brother's death had not occurred." Are you acquainted with any of your fellow workers who have overlooked paying their dues and protecting their families as they should? Become interested to the extent of finding out who, among your acquaintances, are in bad standing with your local union. Perhaps a word from you might force them to appreciate their hazardous position.

ALONG THE FIRING LINE

THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE OF AMERICA

For years the men and women employed in the catering industry have had a rather vague and uncertain idea relative to the make-up and status generally of the Anti-Saloon League. There has been no effort left without taking to offer, from time to time, in our own official paper, the Mixer and Server, such facts as could be gleaned as to the management and conduct of the one organization from which we can expect nothing but its persistent effort to deprive us of a chance to continue as workers at our chosen calling. So far as we have any knowledge the Anti-Saloon League had neither constitution or laws of general scope until the management of that organization was accused of manipulation to the end of retaining among a chosen few the revenue and offices.

We are spreading before our members, not only the Constitution of the Anti-Saloon League but a complete roster of its officers and representatives of every known character. This portion of our official paper should prove invaluable for any number of reasons needless to recite. It will be noted that the Constitution did not become effective "until on and after June 1, 1914," therefore but little more than a year in operation.

Special attention is directed to the provisions contained in the Constitution, which, as will be noted, consist of ten Articles. A perusal should prove interesting and decidedly instructive.

Without further comment, except to suggest keeping this number of the Mixer and Server for reference, for it will prove valuable to our members in innumerable instances.

CONSTITUTION OF THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE OF AMERICA.

(Adopted at Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 13, 1913.)

ARTICLE I.—NAME.

The name of this organization is the Anti-Saloon League of America.

ARTICLE II.—OBJECT.

The object of this League is the extermination of the beverage liquor traffic, for the accomplishing of which the allegiance of all who are in harmony with this object is invited. The League pledges itself to avoid affiliation with any political party as such, and to maintain an attitude of strict neutrality on all questions of public policy not directly and immediately concerned with the traffic in strong drink.

ARTICLE III.—OFFICERS.

The officers of this League shall be: A president, twelve vice presidents, a secretary, a treasurer and a general superintendent, all of whom shall be elected biennially by the Board of Directors at the time of each national convention; also a general manager of publishing interests, a financial secretary, a legislative superintendent, an assistant general superintendent, a superintendent of total abstinence work and an attorney, who shall be chosen biennially by the Board of Directors upon nomination of the Executive Committee; also superintendents of the several state departments, each of whom shall be named annually by the State Board of Trustees or Headquarters Committee of the state department concerned; but such superintendent shall not perform any of the duties of such office or be entitled to any salary beyond the period of three months unless within that time his appointment is confirmed by the Executive Committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America and a commission issued to said superintendent by said committee. In the event the said Executive Committee and the State Board of Trustees shall not agree, the question shall be referred to the Board of Directors with power to act.

ARTICLE IV.—BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

Section 1. There shall be a Board of Directors composed of two representatives from each state department and additional representatives as follows: Each state having a population of more than one million, according to the last federal census, shall have an additional member of the Board of Directors for each additional one million population or major part thereof. Provided, that the maximum representation on the Board of Directors be limited to five members from each state department.

Section 2. The Board of Directors shall transact the business of the League and shall have power to adopt such By-laws in conformity with this Constitution as may be necessary for the conduct of the League's affairs. The National Board of Trustees shall perform all the duties of said Board of Directors until such board is elected.

ARTICLE V.—EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

There shall be an Executive Committee consisting of sixteen members to be elected biennially by the Board of Directors. This Executive Committee shall consist of one member from each of the following districts: District No. 1, the New England States; District No. 2, New York; District No. 3, Maryland, New Jersey, Delaware and the District of Columbia; District No. 4, Pennsylvania; District No. 5, Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina; District No. 6, Ohio and West Virginia; District No. 7, Indiana and Michigan; District No. 8, Illinois; District No. 9, Kentucky, Tennessee and Mississippi; District No. 10, Georgia, Alabama and Florida; District No. 11, Louisiana and Texas; District No. 12, Missouri and Arkansas; District No. 13, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Iowa; District No. 14, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado and Oklahoma; District No. 15, California, Nevada, Utah, Arizona and New Mexico; District No. 16, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, North Dakota and South Dakota.

ARTICLE VI.—STATE BOARDS OF TRUSTEES.

There shall be a Board of Trustees for each state department of the League. Each such board shall be representative of the church bodies and other organizations in the state co-operating in the League, and shall be elected annually or biennially by such method as may be determined by the state conventions or State Board of Trustees.

ARTICLE VII.—HEADQUARTERS COMMITTEE.

There shall be a Headquarters Committee for each state department of the League consisting of not less than five members, all of whom shall be elected annually or biennially by the State Board of Trustees.

ARTICLE VIII.—CONVENTIONS.

Conventions of this League shall be held biennially. The time and place for such convention shall be fixed by the Board of Directors at the preceding biennial meeting. All persons shall be recognized as delegates to the convention who are appointed by the local church, Sunday school, Gideons, Young People's Societies, temperance organizations, Y. W. C. A. and Y. M. C. A. or district or annual association, synod or convention of a religious body, or by any State Board of Trustees or State Headquarters Committee, or any other organization co-operating with the state department.

ARTICLE IX.—AMENDMENTS.

Amendments to this Constitution may be made at any biennial meeting by a two-thirds vote of the members of the Board of Directors present and voting upon recommendation of a two-thirds vote of the Executive Committee, or, in the absence of such recommendation, by a three-fourths vote of the members of the Board of Directors present and voting. Final vote upon any proposed amendment shall not be taken within twenty-four hours after it shall have been presented to the board.

ARTICLE X.

This Constitution shall be in effect on and after June 1, 1914.

BY-LAWS OF THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

1. The general superintendent shall give his entire time to the organization and work of the League, and the superintendency of its activities throughout the United States.

2. The secretary shall keep a record of the proceedings of the national convention and Board of Directors and publish the same when authorized for sale and distribution and shall issue notices of meetings of the Board and Directors and Executive Committee and perform such other work as properly pertains to the office.

3. The general manager of publishing interests shall have supervision over the League's publishing interests, including the business management of the American Issue Publishing Company and the editorial conduct of the League publications. He shall be under the direction of and responsible to the Executive Committee and through it to the Board of Directors.

4. The financial secretary shall supervise the work of securing funds for the maintenance of the League, including the collection of the percentage due the national treasury from the state departments. He shall not conduct a financial campaign in any state department without an arrangement made between the Executive Committee and state superintendent and Headquarters Committee of the state department. He shall be under the direction of and responsible to the general superintendent and the Executive Committee, and through them to the Board of Directors.

5. The legislative superintendent shall represent the Anti-Saloon League in the effort to secure improved temperance legislation by Congress with the counsel and under the direction of the general superintendent and the Executive Committee. When not engaged in such work, he shall give his time in work of the League under the direction of the general superintendent and the Executive Committee.

6. The assistant general superintendent shall give his time in work for the League under the direction of the general superintendent and the Executive Committee.

7. The superintendent of total abstinence work shall represent the League in the promotion of the work of the Lincoln-Lee Legion with the counsel and under the direction of the general superintendent and the Executive Committee. When not engaged in such work he shall give his time in work for the League under the direction of the general superintendent and the Executive Committee.

8. The attorney shall represent the League in legal matters and in the general law-enforcement department of the League work with the counsel and under the direction of the general superintendent and the Executive Committee. When not engaged in such work he shall give his time in work for the League under the direction of the general superintendent and the Executive Committee.

9. Each superintendent of a state department shall superintend the work of the League in that state department under the direction of the Headquarters Committee in harmony with the policy laid down by the Executive Committee and the general superintendent. He shall counsel with the State Headquarters Committee and shall execute the policies and plans initiated or determined by the State Board of Trustees in harmony with the policies of the Board of Directors of the Anti-Saloon League of America.

10. The Executive Committee shall determine questions of policy or procedure, shall investigate the financial condition of the League and make pro rata assessments among the various state departments of the League to help meet the expenses of the organization, this assessment to be laid as follows: Eight per cent of the gross receipts of the state departments having an annual income of $125,000 or more; 10 per cent of the state departments having an annual income of $75,000 and less than $125,000; 12½ per cent of the gross receipts of state departments having an annual income of $50,000 and less than $75,000; 15 per cent of the gross receipts of state departments having an annual income of $25,000 and less than $50,000; 17½ per cent of the gross receipts of state departments having an annual income of $10,000 and less than $25,000; 20 per cent of the gross receipts of state departments having an income of $5,000 and less than $10,000; and 25 per cent of the gross receipts of state departments having an annual income of less than $5,000, provided that in no case shall the maximum amount to be paid by any state department exceed the minimum amount to be paid by any state department to exceed the minimum amount to be paid by the next higher class of assessments on state departments.

The amounts yielded by these percentages on the receipts of the several state departments shall be paid into the national treasury at least as often as monthly and shall first be used to pay or apply on the payment of the salary of the superintendent of that state department, said salary to be paid at least as often as monthly; provided, that the assessment mentioned in this by-law shall not be paid or levied upon moneys raised to pay debts of state organizations created prior to November 10, 1913. And provided further that the Executive Committee shall determine the basis upon which said percentage shall be levied.

11. The Board of Directors shall meet biennially at the time and place of the convention. Special meetings shall be called by the president of the Board of Directors upon the written request of not less than a majority of the members of the board from each of seven states. Thirty members of the board shall constitute a quorum. Notices of called meetings must be mailed to each member of the board at least thirty days before a meeting is held.

12. The Board of Directors shall elect the trustees who shall hold in trust the stock of the corporate body known as The American Issue Publishing Company, which was organized under the laws of the State of Ohio to conduct the League's publishing business, said trustees to be five in number and to hold office for one year, or until their successors are elected. Such trustees shall hold all property, real and personal, pertaining to the national printing plant, now located at Westerville, Ohio, as trustees for the Anti-Saloon League of America and shall not as such trustees or directors receive any salary or any profit whatsoever from the operation of the plant, and neither the board as a whole nor any member of the same shall have power to convey any right, title or interest in said plant to any person or persons other than their successors elected by the National Board of Directors or the Executive Committee, except when ordered to do so by a vote of the Board of Directors of the Anti-Saloon League of America at a regular meeting.

13. The Executive Committee shall act in all matters for the Board of Directors during the interim between meetings of the board; shall meet as often as four times a year, their necessary expenses in attending such meeting to be paid by the League; shall direct and control the movement and expenditures of the general superintendent and other active officers of the League; shall prepare a budget of the probable expenses of the several departments of the League and report the same, together with a digest of its work and proceedings, to the Board of Directors for their guidance; shall fix the salary of all active officers of the League, including those of the superintendents of the state departments, and shall also have power to fill vacancies occurring in the offices of the League and in the Executive Committee in the interim between meetings of the Board of Directors. Each state superintendent shall make a report to the general superintendent of all contributions, receipts and disbursements, together with an exact statement of the financial condition of his state department once each month.

14. The State Board of Trustees for any state department shall determine questions of policy or procedure for the work in that state department in harmony with the policies and plans of the National Board of Directors. It shall elect the State Headquarters Committee and the members of the National Board of Directors allotted to that state by the Constitution of the Anti-Saloon League of America.

National Temperance Organizations.

World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union.—President, Rosalind, Countess of Carlisle, Castle Howard, York, England. Vice-President, *Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, Portland, Maine. Honorary Secretaries—Miss Anna A. Gordon, Evanston, Illinois; Miss Agnes E. Slack, Ripley, Derbyshire, England. Treasurer, Mrs. Mary E. Sanderson, Danville, Quebec, Canada.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.—The National W. C. T. U. was organized in Cleveland, Ohio, in 1874, and is the sober second thought of the great woman's crusade. It is now regularly organized in every State in the Union.

There are about 12,000 local unions, with a membership and following including the children's societies, of about half a million. The W. C. T. U. has forty distinct departments of work, presided over by as many women experts, in the national and in nearly every state organization. All the states have laws requiring the study of scientific temperance in the public schools, and all these laws were secured by the W. C. T. U.; also the laws forbidding the sale of tobacco to minors. The first police matrons and most industrial homes for girls were secured through the efforts of this society, as were the refuges for erring women.

The World's W. C. T. U. was founded by Frances E. Willard in 1883, and has auxiliaries in more than fifty countries and provinces. The white ribbon is the badge of all the W. C. T. U. members, and is now a familiar emblem in every civilized country.

The headquarters of the national organization are at 1730 Chicago Avenue, Evanston, Ill. The following are the officers:

The International Order of Good Templars is a world-wide brotherhood of over 600,000 total abstainers, banded together for mutual protection and co-operation in temperance work.

The Order of Good Templars first sprang into existence in 1851 in Oneida County, N. Y. State. One of its most radical features was the recognition of women's rights.

The last report of the International Secretary returned the number of grand lodges as seventy, and the membership in both adult and juvenile branches, 620,000. Grand lodges exist in nearly all states of the Union, in England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Denmark, Germany, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, Hungary, Holland, the various provinces of Canada, the West Indies, East, West and South Africa, Australia, New Zealand, British India, Iceland and other countries.

Next session in 1917, at Minneapolis, Minn., U. S. A.

Patron, Mrs. Alice Smithers Mitchell, 91 Belmont St., Everett, Mass.; P. M. W. Patriarch, Rev. Alfred Noon, Lunenburg, Mass.

The Order of the Sons of Temperance was organized in the city of New York, September 29, 1842. It is composed of subordinate, grand and national divisions. It has five national divisions—one for North America, one for Great Britain and Ireland, two for Australia and one for New Zealand. It has been introduced in India and South Africa. In the course of its existence it has had nearly four million members on its rolls. Its present membership in North America is 25,000, of whom 12,200 are in the United States. Its fundamental principle is total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors.

The seventy-first annual session of the National Division of North America will be held at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Islands, July 21, 1915.

WE WANT TO KNOW.

Making Big Claims and Getting Big Sums.

We insist on knowing why extravagant and senseless statements are given out by the Anti-Saloon League, and why such utterly false and misleading representations are made by ministers and by others, and especially by the church papers. Take a few samples of these extravaganzas.

1. The Herald and Presbyter, an organ of the Presbyterian Church, in a recent editorial said, "Three-fourths of the counties of Ohio have shut out the saloon." This statement was never true at any time, even when sixty-three counties were dry. Had it been, all the great populous counties, even then were whisky counties. There were Franklin County with Columbus, Lucas with Toledo, Summit with Akron, Montgomery with Dayton, Butler with the city of Hamilton, Hamilton with Cincinnati. Mahoning with Youngstown, Cuyahoga with Cleveland, all whisky counties. There were even then 400,000 more people in the wet than in the dry counties. But when the Herald and Presbyter gave out that statement only six counties were in fact dry. Such a reckless misstatement is without excuse.

2. Another of these groundless statements is made by Rev. Dr. R. A. Hutchison in a recent number of the United Presbyterian. He says: "In the brief history of the Anti-Saloon League, little more than a score of years old, the dry population of the country has increased from sixteen to sixty millions, with 80 per cent of the territory of the country now under prohibition. There are eighteen great commonwealths which have outlawed the saloon." Does Dr. Hutchison not know that such a statement is altogether misleading and false? Why does the United Presbyterian lend herself to spread abroad such reckless asseverations? In what sense are Arizona, Idaho, Arkansas or North Dakota, great commonwealths? Of the 14 most populous States in the Union only 1 is dry, and it is tenth in the order of their populations. The 18 dry States have an average of less than 1,435,000 people; while the 18 wet States average 3,357,000. The dry States have all told 25,828,699, the wet States 66,393,653. Why then these senseless statements?

3. Rev. Dr. Purley A. Baker had the big Atlantic City convention declare, "Already more than three-fourths of the municipalities of the nation are under prohibition." Can it be that there was one delegate at Atlantic City so little-witted or so shallow-pated that he did not know that that statement is utterly false and misleading? There are 49 cities in our country which have a population of over 100,000. Of these 7 are now rated as dry. Two more will be on January 1, 1916. The largest of these cities voted dry is Seattle, with 237,000. Their combined population is 1,418,000. Their average is 158,000. But of the cities of over 100,000 there are 40 with an average population of over 463,000, and an aggregate of 18,522,637. Of cities between 25,000 and 100,000 only 36 are in the dry column, while 143 are wet. The dry cities average a little over 39,000. They have a population of 1,410,383. Of the wet cities of this class 51 have over 50,000, while of the dry cities 8 have over 50,000. Of the wet cities there are 51 which average 71,500. The aggregate population of the wet cities of this class is 8,041,249. So much for the senseless and ridiculous statements given out in an official way by the Atlantic City convention.

4. These statements are the more extravagant and senseless when we remember that all these States and cities are under the supreme control of the Federal Government, which nullifies their prohibitory statutes and collects millions of dollars of revenue from the sale of strong drink in dry territory, and that there is no dry territory. Moreover the two parties which control the Federal and all the State government, and which elect 99 per cent of all the officers of the nation are pledged, and have been for forty years, to the liquor interests. And still worse, the New Republic, an Anti-saloon League organ, admits that there is no reduction in the per capita volume of strong drink. In view of this fact, how senseless are these extravagant claims.

5. Why are such claims made? There is only one reason so far as we can see. So long as the masses of the church people can be made to believe that the country is rapidly going dry, they will contribute large sums for this futile and senseless inter-partisan propaganda. Illinois the past year contributed $103,000, and every measure of the league was defeated. In Pennsylvania there was flowed into the league treasury the great sum of $76,381.91 to carry local option which was defeated more signally than two years before. Now the league is asking for $5,000,000, for the hopeless and ill-advised scheme of carrying the Hobson amendment through Congress. In its proposed form, that amendment, if carried, would be an intolerable hindrance and embarrassment to the temperance interests.—Rev. A. P. HUTCHISON, in The National Issue, September, 1915.

GOVERNMENT.

All free governments, whatever their name, are in reality governments by public opinion; and it is on the quality of this public opinion that their prosperity depends.—Lowell.

CHAT OF THE CRAFTS

THE COURSE OF WAGES.

From 1907 to 1913, inclusive, according to a recent Department of Labor report, average weekly earnings of employees in blast furnaces increased 11 per cent; in Bessemer plants, 16 per cent; in bar mills, 8 per cent; while the average weekly working hours decreased 2 to 3 per cent.

That illustrates the discouraging thing about wages in general. You get newspaper reports from time to time of wage increases here and there; and from time to time you get bitter complaints of union labor's exactions. But when you come to a comprehensive statistical survey, as authoritative as any that can be had, you find that wages in the bulk have been simply chasing the cost of living, and are still a couple of laps behind it.

A large part of the steel and iron labor is so little skilled or specialized that it is classified as common labor. Taking all departments of the steel and iron industry covered by the report, the average hourly pay of common labor got up to the rather dazzling figure of eighteen and three-tenths cents an hour. For a ten-hour day and a six-day week, that would be about eleven dollars a week. Deduct the time lost through unemployment from all causes and you get a yearly average that does not spell much in the beefsteak line.

No doubt immigration has directly held down wages in the iron and steel industry, and more or less indirectly in other industries.—The Saturday Evening Post, October 16, 1915.

Had the foregoing editorial comment appeared in a labor paper, more than 50 per cent of its readers would have concluded that it was the usual dissent and not overweighted with facts to back it up, but coming from the pen of George Horace Lorimer, the editor of the Post, it will probably receive the attention which it truly deserves from the million or more readers of that publication.

THE SECRET OF POWER AND PRESTIGE.

The keyword of present-day trade union success is: Work and then more work. There are no great labor organizations in existence which have gained power and prestige without ceaseless and untiring labor on the part of the combined membership of that successful organization. On the back inside cover of each number of THE MIXER AND SERVER, beginning with the month of September, there has been offered tabulations which show the unions of our International Union which have reached beyond the one hundred mark in membership. If you are interested in progress and the reason why it has been secured, that series of tabulations will prove interesting. You will discover that the reason for bigness is work; plenty of it, and keeping perpetually at it. It is the secret of power and prestige.

ONE WAY TO OBTAIN ATTENTION.

"If that fellow working at the trade across the street, whom you have been trying to secure as a member of your local union, and who seems to listen but seldom makes comment on anything said to him, is given closer inspection, it may disclose that he has a tin ear, and that you will have to offer him something in the shape of reading matter to gain his attention. Why not loan him a copy of THE MIXER AND SERVER. You can spare it for a few days, and perhaps he may read it and see what you have been trying to convey through that bit of tinware attached to his noodle." That is the expressive manner in which Jack McDevitt, the hustling business agent of Local 115, was handing it out to one of his boy scouts as they were passing down Spring Garden street a few mornings after Labor Day. Come to think of it, probably that is not such a bad idea after all. Have you been doing a talking stunt to a tin ear possessor lately?

TURN ON THE UNION LIGHT.

There is one subject that should be mentioned, so that it may ever be in the minds of union men and women, and that is defamation. This is always the forerunner of internal dissension and disruption of the organization. When those who are opposed to the organization of the working class wish to divide, they first direct suspicion to the ones in the movement who are most active in holding it together and keeping it prosperous. If distrust can be injected into the union to the extent of causing the removal of those who are working hard for its success, then there is opportunity to substitute in their stead some one less willing or competent, or possibly some agent or tool of the employer, and there will be a lesser degree of success until, finally, the organization is practically worthless to those for whom it is intended. Look carefully at all times to those who would defame their brother or sister worker. BEWARE OF THE PERSON WHO WOULD SPREAD POISON IN THE FORM OF UNPROVEN STATEMENTS which tend to cause distrust and doubt. Demand that all things are aired in the fully-attended regular meetings. Above all things, turn on the light. Crooks and dishonest persons can not stand publicity and investigation when honestly conducted. Turn on the light honestly and fearlessly.—Tacoma Labor Advocate.

HAPPINESS.

Writers of every age have endeavored to show that pleasure is in us, and not in the objects offered for our amusement. If the soul be happily disposed, everything becomes a subject of entertainment, and distress will almost want a name.—Goldsmith.

THE MIXER AND SERVER

THE MYSTERY OF CHRISTMAS—ONE DAY THAT ALL OTHER DAYS ARE LEARNING TO ENVY AND IMITATE.

It seems to me that always, as the 24th of December commenced to shorten, the white fleecy snow began to fall. When the street lamps flickered up like candles on an altar, they gazed on a world that was white. The strike of the city was muffled. Carts went by, but you had to peer out through the blinds to know that they were passing—they made no sound. An atmosphere of gentleness had descended. Everyone in the house went about with stealth, as though planning some secret kindness.

And then the night and the trying to keep awake till Santa Claus should come. And the waking up, with the frost weaving patterns on the panes. Somewhere far away a harp was being played, and a cornet was challenging the silence. The tune they played was an accompaniment to the most beautiful legend in the world. At first, dreamily, you tried to remember why for once the darkness was not frightening, and then, "Ah, it's Christmas." As you turned, your feet made the paper crack, and at the end of the bed you were too content and happy even to look at your presents. Why was it that next day everybody and everything was different? The air was full of bells ringing riotously. Everyone for this one day, ceased to think of his own happiness in bringing cheerfulness to others. The stern gulf which is fixed between children and grown-ups had vanished—there weren't any grown-ups. Somewhere in your childish heart you wondered why every day couldn't be made a day of kindness.

And that wonder of a child's heart is the Christmas message. Once a year, by a divine conspiracy, all the ships of our hopes and fears turn back from their voyagings to the barbor of tenderness. They are borne back on the crest of a white tide of mysticism that sweeps round the world. A truce of God is declared to all fighting, and men and women walk as children through a world that is kind. They commence to give and cease to annex; they act in the belief that God is in His heaven. The result is one tremulous white day of unselfishness—a day which gradually all the other days in the year are learning to envy and imitate.—The Craftsman.

MATRIMONY.

George Ade, discussing matrimony in an after-dinner speech at the Chicago Athletic Club, said: "Marriage has the effect of giving a man a swelled head."

"Many a time, looking at this husband or that, I said to myself:

"Ah, if that man were only as wise as he thinks his wife thinks he is."—Exchange.

A PREVENTIVE—SOMETIMES.

We know of one local union which has reduced the number of suspensions to an almost imperceptible number by the very simple expedient of posting at headquarters the names of all members who become in arrears. Another local union reaches the same result by a more elaborate method. The financial secretary compiles a list of members, and after each name, as dues are paid, stamps in the month for which dues were paid. Still another union elaborated the simple system by placing on a bulletin board, in alphabetical order, the name of every member. Following the list were twelve lines, one for each month. As a member paid dues the secretary stamped up the month with the word "paid." Naturally, he did not stamp after the names of those failing to pay, and when a member's name showed two vacant spaces minus the paid stamp, it meant that such member was in arrears, and every person passing that bulletin board could see and make note of it. It need hardly be added that one of the first things which members did on reaching headquarters of that local was to see who was "behind," and whoever was unfortunate would hear from the other members, and in an emphatic manner. After this system had been in operation several months the number of members who allowed their names to be recorded as in arrears for dues dwindled to such an extent that very few were reported as suspended in the reports sent to the general office.

It would seem that as long as the members are kept in ignorance of the standing of their fellow workers, they postpone paying dues to the very last moment, for they figure that only one man, the secretary, knows, and they don't care about him; but when all hands know, it's a different case, and one which they give heed to.

DIET DEMONS.

Beware of the fierce Welsh rabbit, men;

Avoid him with a frown;

For he does all his fighting when

You think you have him down.

—The Cincinnati Enquirer.

The unripe apple, too, I guess,

Is just as cussed mean.

He's old in sin and wickedness,

Although he seems so green.

—Boston Advertiser.

Still other foes as I've heard tell

Are the appetizing grapes;

If they're not ripe they help to swell

The obits in the "papes."

—Berkshire Evening Eagle.

The apple, rabbit and the grape,

Exactly three in number,

Bring no such work to the "undertake"

As the innocent (?) green cucumber.

—MIXER AND SERVER.

SHIFTY AN THRIFTY JAPS.

One year and a half after the Alien Land law went into effect in the State of California, the California State Board of Agriculture reported that Japanese owned 12,726 acres, divided into 331 farms valued at about $600,000, and 218 town lots worth less than half that sum. They also hold under lease 17,596 acres, and have 2,548 places of business costing them about a million a year in rent, and in which they do approximately $16,000,000 yearly business on a $4,000,000 investment.

GIVE YOURSELF A TRIAL SPIN.

Of course, if you conclude that you would be a failure in getting new members, it will be hard to crowd that viewpoint far enough back to allow the silvery cloud of encouragement to get a peek in, but how do you know how much "pep" and speed you have unless you give that frame of yours the required test. Get going while the going is good.

MANUFACTURERS' DECOY.

Careful readers of the daily press have had their attention directed to the child labor problem of the Southern States, and the evident attempt has been made to create the impression that grinding childhood into dollars is especially a Southland crime, and no other section stands accused of similar abuse. As a matter of common knowledge, there are no geographical limits to the abuse. One may find children employed in the mills and mines of pretty near every State in the Union, and similar conditions prevail across the line in British North America. The effort to lay all the blame for child labor on the States the other side of the Mason and Dixon line is nothing short of a manufacturers' decoy—an effort to divert the public gaze from the quite as criminal child labor abuses in the East as ever were permitted to exist at any point of the compass.

The Anti-Saloon League shouters and bally-hoo artists were wont to accuse the saloon of filling the mills of the Southern States with children, yet in the State of Maine there were 684 boys from 10 to 13 years of age, and 172 girls of similar age, employed "in gainful occupations;" while the total boys and girls between 13 to 15 amounted to 4,570. Child labor is not sectional, unfortunately it is general.

THE EDUCATION OF YOUR CHILDREN.

Are you so engrossed in the chase for the almighty dollar and the making of a living for yourself and family that you have overlooked the proper education of your children? That is a very pertinent yet quite appropriate question to offer to the heads of families, especially those who are members of our International Union.

We are afraid that some of our members are committing the very common error, taking it for granted that because Jimmy and Mary are attending school they are absorbing knowledge which will fit them to put up a battle for existence when they grow into manhood and womanhood and be required to go out into the world competing for situations with other young men and women. Have you permitted yourself to become so fatigued with your daily labor that you are unable to examine into the conditions surrounding your boy and girl; do you realize that it is your solemn duty to watch their progress and give them such encouragement as only you and mother can give; to scan their studies and supplement them with such other aids as your judgment suggests. Do you ever stop to think that your boy and girl may be in need of your kindly advice and direction?

When your children ask you questions or seek your aid in the solving of problems which make attendance at school seem irksome, do you find excuses easier than trying to help them understand and know the right solution. Perhaps you were deprived of the advantages of a good common school education, and if that be the case, it is an added reason why you should not handicap your boy or girl with a similar load to carry through life. You may imagine that you must keep your children from knowing that you are poorly equipped from an educational standpoint, but that sort of pride is foolish, and leads to no end of trouble. If you don't know, dig in and find out; you are never too old to learn. You may think that an hour after supper each evening can not be spared for the youngsters, but just give it a tryout during the winter months and you will make such progress that will astonish you. Better than that, you will get closer to Jimmy and Mary, and they will discover that their papa is a pretty good fellow after all and is really a human being. They will find that their studies are a real pleasure, and their advancement will be a mutual process in which you will share.

GRIT ALWAYS WINS.

Grit is the thing that counts. We all know young men who are hanging around, waiting for father to slip out of his old shoes. As if a pair of old shoes ever made a man out of a loafer! Why, father's shoes are ten sizes too big for any man that thinks money somebody else has earned will make him a gentleman!

Grit is what these young chaps need, whether they know it or not. The day will come when the only man the world will count worthy of its respect will be the man who does things, even if he is forced to shut his teeth hard to keep back the groan of pain.

Folks used to think that the only real soldier was the man who marched away to the sound of fife and drum, to shoot and kill and destroy. It is not so.—Farm Life.

B. E. Burnham, member of Typographical Union No 40, St. Joseph, Mo., sent us a copy of the Industrial Souvenir gotten out under his personal supervision for the Labor Day Association of St. Joseph, Mo., and it comes close to being one of the best which we have ever had the privilege of possessing—a credit to its editor and the labor movement of the hustling municipality where our Local 422 cares for the wants of the thirsty public.

A "PEACEFUL" THOUGHT.

A solemn thought comes to my mind;

I put it up to you—

Suppose your eyeteeth all went blind,

How could you see to chew?

—DON MARQUIS, in New York Evening Sun.

The "Don" said something in that epic which the peace advocates should mull over and wake up. The United States and its contented citizens may continue their satisfied sleep, if they want to, but it would be much more in keeping with their reputed sagacity to warn their "Pork Distributors" down at Washington, that fewer government buildings at Podunk on the Wabash and more "Untersea" boats and all of the other fixins coming under the heading of preparedness for possible conflict or invasion is THE ORDER OF THE DAY, and that "The Order of the Day" is no idle chatter, but GOES to the fullest extent. Preparedness does not mean seeking for war, but unpreparedness invites it. A bull dog ready to scrap is a different animal from one chained up and toothless. That bit of wisdom should overtake the "Pork Peddlers," otherwise called Senators and Congressmen, before they get "set" in their easy chairs on Capitol Hill.

And that is not "Flossy Talk" either—

"If a man says you are a good fellow, buy him a drink; if he says he is a good fellow, let him buy you a drink; but if he insists that you are both good fellows, you had better call a cab and send him home."—Puck.

AN EXPENSIVE PRACTICE.

The installation of "kitchenette" accommodations in hotels may tickle the fancy of those who love to pose as possessing a palate hard to please, and one which none but themselves can satisfy. But in the long run they are going to prove harmful and costly. Imagine the business judgement of a hotel owner installing such apparatus in a suite of rooms which cost approximately one thousand dollars per room to decorate and furnish, and who will be forced to discover that his priceless tapestries and paintings, as well as the other penetrable fittings and furnishings, carry a similar aroma as one expects to find in close proximity to the culinary end of the establishment, and that no amount of ordinary airing will eliminate that "smell," nor will any amount of brushing and vacuum cleaning cleanse.

Any of our members employed in catering establishments where "party rooms" are used for small gatherings, will recall the next morning's "smell" which followed the use of electric cookers the night previous, and how absolutely impossible it was to cleanse the room of that sticking smell. How often have guests who reserved such rooms for use, the following evening sniffed at the air and ordered the windows opened; mentally, if not verbally, accusing the management of laxity in keeping such apartments sweet and wholesome. Even chafing dish cooking in such rooms proves a costly item in more ways than in destroying fittings and necessitating thorough renovation oftener than is ordinarily necessary to make such rooms acceptable to men and women with unclogged nostrils and stomachs uncoated with cast iron. The place for cooks and cooking is in a well-appointed kitchen, where the "smell" can not invade the apartments where patrons are dining. Any attempt to change that good and sensible rule will bring down on the shoulders of the innovators an increased cost in directions which they least suspect. It will, in the long run, prove an expensive experiment, for even the "kitchenette" fiends will fight shy of their hobby and join the other fitting destroyers in another but newer house.

THE "RECEIVE AND FILE" FIEND.

"You have heard the reading, what's your pleasure?" "Move it be received and filed." (Barely audible voice.) "Second the motion." "If there's no objection, it will take that course."

Ever had this occur in your meetings? How frequently does it occur? Is there some one individual who always has this much to contribute to the interest of the meeting? Are you its preceptor?

In every organization there exists at least one apparently faithful one who is ever ready to dispose of a subject in this way. I wonder sometimes that such a one's voice has influence. But it has. Also, I often wonder why such members attend meetings. But they are always there. And let almost any communication or report come up, and they move—to this extent. Perhaps some interested, but timid, one wants to hear more of the matter, or see more action taken. But the ever-faithful mover is the quicker, and more influential (?)—and the matter dies; for few members bother to know that "receive and file" allows for calling up at pleasure.

What these fiends think we go to the trouble to meet for, I fail to see. A great deal is said about windy, hot-air meetings. I contend that the quickest way to kill an organization is for the meetings to become perfunctory.

We hear reports of committees read, which show by their reading that some have given time and labor to the matter, but up pops the "receive and file" monomaniac and the matter sleeps. And how frequently we hear requests for aid, for moral support, for assistance in educational work, for joint action, or even for information, only to see them immediately relegated to the oblivion of the average secretary's minutes.

The reading and discussion of any positive action on all matters coming before a body should be a source of education for the membership.

Some one has said that hell is paved with good intentions. If the bottom ever drops out of the labor movement it will be largely due to the fact that "receive and file" has salted down so many worthy, interesting, educational, and even immediately vital communications and reports.

In the name of consistency, let us meet to transact business, to know and do something for our local first, of course, and then for the good of any and all who may communicate with us. Let us not meet with our minds shut to matters that may need a little consideration in order to see why action should be taken.—N. SANDBRIDGE, in Typographical Journal.

GOD SAVE THE PEOPLE!

When wilt thou save the people?

O God of mercy, when?

Not kings and lords, but nations?

Not crowns and thornes, but men!

Flowers of Thy heart, O God, are they;
Let them not pass like weeds away,

Their heritage a useless day!

God! save the people!

When wilt thou save the people?

O God of mercy, when?

The people, Lord, the people!

Not crowns and thornes, but men!

God save the people! Thine they are,
Thy children as the angels fair;

Save them from bondage and despair!

God! save the people!

—EBENEZER ELLIOTT (1781-1849).

WATER, WATER EVERYWHERE, BUT LITTLE FIT TO DRINK.

Anti-Saloon League "orators" (?) love to ramble through a statistical forest and hurl "figgers" at the yokels who attend their meetings, which, by the way, are usually held in churches, where they save "hall rent," and thereby get a little edge on the wet advocates. However as McGillicuddy would say, that's a yarn for future telling.

"Dry" shouters aver, and with more than ordinary emphasis, that thousands upon thousands die of alcoholism in the United States, and urge that the way to save the country from such a death toll is to close the saloons and wine shops. Yet they offer nothing as a substitute except cold water, and that reminds us of facts seldom used by the wets, that for every man or person alleged to have died from alcoholism, statistics show that five die from typhoid fever, which as most of us know, comes from drinking water.

A MAN'S ENEMIES PROCLAIM HIS REAL STATUS.

If there was any doubt as to the sincerity of Frank Walsh of the Industrial Relations Commission, and the splendid work which he has accomplished since setting as the presiding officer of that commission, the denunciation by Governor Carlson, of Colorado, should settle that doubt and transpose it to a feeling of admiration, for it usually happens that when a man exposes the rottenness of big business, the kept press and the lickspittles of the House of Dollars, they unite in a loud hulabaloo protesting that the exposer is an anarchist or something equally terrible and should be forthwith incarcerated, thus preventing him from doing further "harm" to the dear public.

Perhaps Chairman Walsh's uncovering of the methods employed in Colorado and the mark of "corporation" placed on Carlson may have caused the governor to see himself running in the open and nowhere to go. Walsh is a good two-fisted scrapper—before he finishes the job there will be more running in the open and few finding places to hide from the living truth.

BACHELOR'S CHRISTMAS.

No wife and babes at home for me—a bachelor am I!
To none am I beholden as my pay-days rollick by;
I seek my snug apartment at the time that suits me best,
And never need apologize should I bring home a guest.
I go to bed when sleepy and sleep till I am through;
And none derides and no one chides my next day's feelings blue.
But yet—don't tell the neighbors, most especially the wimmen!—
I've perfect aches inside me when the Christmas trees are trimmin'!

Last night as I ascended to my silent little flat
I heard, inside the Thompsons' hall, a muffled pit-a-pat;
The door swung swiftly open and a towseled little head
Peeked 'round the jamb, and "Daddy!" was the joyful thing it said.
Its mother jerked it backward as she shut the door again—
I heard the baby's wailing, and the ache came on me then.
I envy folks with babies and the joys their Christmas brings—
The countless opportunities to please with little things.

No spouse and babes at home for me—a celibate am I.
With none to share my wages as my pay-days saunter by.
I seek my still apartment at the hour that suits me best,
And ne'er do wifely bickerings postpone my nighty rest.
I turn in when the yawns come on, and slumber till I'm through;
And none sneers "Katzenjammer!" If next day I'm feeling blue,
But yet—don't tell the neighbors; keep it mainly from the women!—
I've lonely, achy feelings when the Christmas trees are trimmin'.

—STRICKLAND GILLILAN in Leslie's.

WERE YOU AT THE LAST MEETING?

Possibly you are one of those who refrain from attending the meetings of your local union, and perhaps have lined up with the few who do attend but who seldom succeed in convincing the majority in attendance that their ideas or suggestions are advantageous, and on account of their inability, hide or try to do so, the impotency by declaring the union is run by a gang or clique. Surely you possess enough common sense to appreciate that, if a majority of the members who attend meetings are satisfied with the methods employed by the officers, then that majority should rule. If you take a contrary view and hold to the idea that the union is not being managed right, there is one thing that you can and should do, and that is make it your business to attend the meetings and use your voice and effort to convert the members who attend, that a change in methods should ensue. If, perchance, you fail to convert those who attend, there is still another thing which you can do. You can convince the members who remain away from meetings that they should attend and help you bring about that change which you believe is necessary for success.

HELPING THE GLUE TO STICK.

A cement made by adding a teaspoonful of glycerine to a gill of glue is a great convenience in the kitchen. It is especially good for fastening leather, paper or metal surfaces.

What a beneficial thing it would be to humanity if some one could only discover some sort of a cement or glue which could be applied to the new arrivals in many of our local unions, and thus make them "stick."

AFTER-VACATION THOUGHTS.

I wisht I was a little rock
A'settin' on a hill;
A'doin' nothing all day long
But just a'settin' still.
I wouldn't eat, I wouldn't drink,
I wouldn't even wash,
I'd set and set a thousand years
And rest myself, by gosh.

The caption on the above is our own, the verse, unfortunately, is not. It was handed to us by a contrib., who got it from a friend who received a copy of it from a correspondent in California. Whether or not it has ever been published before he was not certain. But it was too good to let go to waste, so there it is.—R. O. C., in Philadelphia Public-Ledger.

By the way, what effort, if any, has your local union made to put in operation the suggestion contained in the General Secretary-Treasurer's report to the San Francisco convention, which you can find on pages 23 and 24 of the convention proceedings (July, 1915, MIXER AND SERVER). The object in submitting that suggestion was not to insist on its literal acceptance. If you have anything which you believe would be better, there is no law against trying it out. What we are all concerned in is getting our members to attend meetings and interest them in the work which the organization is endeavoring to accomplish. Winter months should be excellent for testing ideas to increase attendance. Why not give this thought your favorable attention and your hearty boost.

THE MIXER AND SERVER

WOULD YOU ONLY COME BACK!

Would you only come back, little fellow to me,
From the land where your spirit forever is free,
You might muss up my collar, and rumple my shirt,

You might dent every floor with the point of your top—

And though your small fingers might fill me with dirt,

I should nevermore peevishly tell you to stop!

Would you only come back, little fellow, to me—
Would you heed when I call you, and hearken the plea—

You might load down your pockets with rocks every day—

You might spatter your best Sunday garments, my lad;

And though you should throw all my trinkets away,

I should strive to be kind, and should scorn to “get mad.”

Would you only come back, little fellow, to me,
From that Home where you romp with the angels in glee,

You might scratch up the furniture, mark on the wall,

And deface every volume you found in my den,
You might litter the parlor and shout in the hall,
But I never should scold you, ah, never again.

Could you only come back, little fellow, to me—
Could you kneel, as you used to, once more at my knee—

I should hold your heart close, to atone for my loss,

And should bid you pray the dear God, who is good,

To forgive your poor daddy for having been cross—

And I feel if you asked it, my boy, that He would!

—Christian Herald.

A THOUGHT FOR YOU.

Citizenship is too often confined to the idea that it merely consists in the right to vote for or against any proposal which directly or indirectly affects your own working conditions or means of livelihood. Citizenship, in its broadest sense, comprehends active interest in all things which concern the well-being of the men and women of a community; it concerns itself with the erection of school and workshop, playgrounds for the children and breathing places for all the people; good roads leading to and from the city; proper policing and fire protection; health and sanitation of home, workshop and mine; the care of unfortunates unable to provide for themselves; the collection and sensible disposal of garbage; scientific sweeping and washing of streets and alleys; healthful and adequate water supply; public baths, libraries and hospitals; in fact, to enumerate all the things which active citizenship should exercise solicitude in would include substantially all endeavors beneficial to the health, morals and happiness of a community. Therefore, it behooves all of us to develop our citizenship so that we may become valuable units of our respective commonwealths, and show to those harping critics who find little in our activities to approve, that we are a real worth-while factor in affairs and decline to live the useless lives which they are so anxious we shall in order to fit their description of us and our movement.

SELF-DEPRECIATION IS A CRIME.

One of the great big reasons why some of our local unions never get beyond the swaddling clothes stage is due to the woeful lack of aggressive confidence among the members. Timidity among any other class of workers may be excused, but among men and women who have passed through months and years of serving the public with its food and beverages, timidity actually approaches the inexcusable.

We have yet to meet a fellow worker in the ranks of catering employes who would not resent the insinuation that he was afraid to tackle a job because it would “swamp him,” as the expression is known among our workers. Yet these same men go straight up in the air when called on to aid in handling and managing a little two-by-four union.

If such timidity is not self depreciation, what is? And if it is that, then those guilty of it are committing a crime against themselves and the good old father and mother who brought them into the world. To those so afflicted we suggest a course of reading and study of the economic movement of our time.

ASHES AS AN ANTISEPTIC.

Frankfort, Germany.—A surgeon, whose work is almost exclusively among the Cossacks, has shown the medical world of Europe a new wrinkle in the speedy and handy healing of dangerous wounds—especially when in the field and far from hospitals. The means consists simply of applying to the wound a thick coating of ashes—preferably made by burning cotton or wool cloth—and then binding it up with the bandage which every soldier carries. The ashes seem to draw the pain from the wound, and to act curatively in a remarkably short space of time. The method is particularly effective in saber and bayonet wounds.—Chicago News.

THE DIFFERENCE.

Two locals were chartered in one city, the charters being issued by our International Union. That was in the month of November, 1899. One of these locals went forward with a rush; the other found traveling hard and laborious. The first boasted of a membership of fifty inside of a fortnight; the second made no boasts, for it was saying little but sawing wood. The first made merry of the predicament of the second, and called its members snails, but they replied with no bitterness: “We are trying to create a good union, and we intend to continue our efforts.” The union which made such remarkable speed took matters lightly; the other union accepted its mission as some men do their religion. The first lived a short, checkered career—it died for lack of new worlds to conquer—at least that seemed to be the conclusion of one of its officers, but the real cause of its demise was that dread affliction, neglect. The struggling union knew that it had sufficient to conquer in its own town; it did not feel able to go forth to proselyte; it had its own front yard to keep trim and neat. Those whom it sought to convert were in that town, and it succeeded in converting them. One of the officers of that union organized a union for our International last month. The members and officers of the defunct union are scattered, no one really knows where. Is there a moral to this brief tale? There is.

CORRESPONDENCE

CHICAGO, ILL.

DEAR SISTERS AND BROTHERS—The catering industry of Chicago is undergoing a complete change at present. Millions of dollars of new capital is being invested by modern business interests. The newest and most modern of all service houses are the "Delicatessen Lunch Houses." These places specialize in tasty food and clean, modern service. Other innovations are main floor cafeterias, chair service, and various other kinds of new inventions. Which ever kind of the new style eating houses will survive, this much is sure, that all of them are an improvement over the old system. The departure of the old form, with the wooden kitchen and coal and wood-burning ranges, is a blessing to all who, by force of circumstance, are forced to earn a livelihood in the catering industry. The modern gas broiler has taken the place of the old coke burner, and electricity is revolutionizing the art of dishwashing, and will soon be universally used for all kinds of cooking, baking and heating.

A great many of these new and modern institutions have also adopted the ten-hour day, with one day's rest in seven. This is due to their scientific investigation of physiology, which has forced them to recognize the fact that a day's rest for their employees will give better service, hence better business.

These newly established institutions are mostly all located on the main floor, where sunlight and air are to be had, and the environment of the workers greatly improved over the old basement and sewer kitchens, where sewer gas and rats pestered the men and women who endeavored to serve the public with clean food. The dining-rooms are of a pleasant and inviting makeup. To work in such a place is a pleasure to the workers, and inviting to the people who eat in them.

All these new inventions are a credit to both the employers and employees, and are the inevitable result of years of hard toil and struggle on the part of all who have been engaged in the industry.

Organized workers are now able to see, with great pleasure, the time when, in the near future, machinery, art and science will relieve the toilers from past and present struggles and bring new life and new hope to the men and women who are engaged in the world's most useful profession.

Organized workers smile every time a more modern eating house is opened to the public, while the unorganized proletariat are viewing it all much as does a cow a new gate, without having any understanding of its meaning. The only missing link in the change of evolution and revolution is the organized—material expression of the workers—who alone make all progress possible. Let us, therefore, organize and build up, and thus make the International Union a credit to all who are employed in serving food and drinks.

Local 865 has elected the following officers: N. McLeod, president; T. Fitzgerald, first vice-president; L. Pescheret, second vice-president; R. George, third vice-president; G. Politisch, recording secretary; A. Stewart, financial secretary; W. P. Christensen, treasurer; Fred Ebeling, press agent; G. Hagen, J. Fuchs, R. George, trustees. Fraternally yours,

Press Agent Local 865.

FRESNO, CAL.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—One of the pleasant features in the life of Local 62 are the open social meetings that are held at least once a month. On these occasions business takes a back seat. and song, music, dance and mirth hold undisputed sway. These meetings are not only the talk of unionism itself, but all over town, and everybody wants to know when we are going to hold the next one. On these occasions everything is free: sandwiches, candy, cigars and cake, not to mention liquid refreshments to satisfy the taste of either prohib or anti. These meetings are so well attended that they tax the resources of the few individuals that foot the bill, and it is probable that our next meeting will be held by invitation only. Every member who was off watch was present at our last event, and forty pairs of rosy cheeks, kept in condition by our superb California climate, gave a touch of color that more serious functions might well envy.

Barney (our Barney) the indefatigable secretary of Local 62, is a unionist of somewhat superior calibre. In line with Bro. S. Parsons, of Local 402, and Bro. Frank Sherer, of Local 189, he challenges any man to find a non-union made garment in his wardrobe, and could Barney have his way, he would refuse a traveling card unless the applicant could do the same. He is so enthusiastic in his principles that he would even have the union label on the sunbeams and the dew, and if you come to the local with anything new you are certain to be cross-examined to an embarrassing extent.

Our semi-annual election will soon be here again, but it is very doubtful if there will be any but minor changes. Our secretary has been so thorough in his business methods that the bosses have offered him several positions that it would have been to his advantage to take. But our secretary saw through their little game and probably told them, mentally, to go to that place which has a reputation for having a very warm climate.

In common with the rest of the California coast cities, we naturally expect a dismal winter, and already some of the more opulent boys are figuring out the cost of providing coffee and, on the same lines adopted by other locals. It seems a shame that, in this, the richest country in the world, where wealth is flaunted everywhere before our eyes, that there should be so much unemployment. The degree of want in and around Fresno is appalling in winter time, partly due to a want of thrift, but mainly owing to the fact that there is a vast army of fruit pickers that can only find work for about three months of the year, and who are obliged to loaf the remainder. The civic bodies are quite aware of this fact and do not belittle it. With the members of our craft it will be doubly severe, for with the usual winter measure of unemployment there will be a great exodus from San Francisco as soon as the fair is closed, and every town, village and hamlet on the coast will be overrun with a great army of culinary workers. The inference is obvious. Those who have jobs in the East ought to keep them. Those that have not ought to do their utmost to get one and turn a deaf ear of those alluring promises that typify California as a paradise for the worker.

Yours fraternally,
JULIUS BECKER.

BUFFALO, N. Y.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Nominations for officers for 1916 will take place on Friday evening, December 3, at 8:30, and the election will be held on Friday, December 24. The polls will be open from 8:00 a. m. to 3:00 p. m.

On January 31, 1916, we will hold our seventeenth annual ball at German-American Hall. Bro. Edw. Ehrman will have charge of the souvenir program.

Where some of our brothers are located: A. Ackel is in business at the corner of Sycamore and Washington streets, formerly G. Meister's cafe. F. Crane is at Moholland's, Abbit road. Chas. Lydle is with the People's Liquor Company. Oak and Eagle streets. L. Roth, A. Haas and F. Kaiser at Offerman's cafe. W. Heussner and W. Flynn at the Bodega cafe. D. Reibold, Jr., at Harder's, Genesee street. C. E. Kleber and A. McFee at German-American cafe. Edw. Edwards and H. Randell at Rice's cafe, Chipewa street.

Frank Petz, one of our old members, has passed away. His many friends will miss him.

Bros. Pete Engel and Geo. Engel are on the sick list.

Would advise all brothers to stay away from Buffalo, as business is bad and the lid is on tight here.

Yours fraternally,

FRANK BROWN,
President and Press Agent Local 175.

KANSAS CITY, MO.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Just a few solid facts regarding prohibition that each and every one that reads these lines and is interested wants to keep under his hat.

The nominations and elections of Senators and Representatives for the next meeting of the legislature of Missouri, to be held in 1917, will take place in the summer and fall of 1916, and it behooves each and every one of us to lend our moral assistance by inquiring into the standing of every candidate who is seeking the nomination from any political party for either the Upper or Lower House, and find out if he is a prohibitionist or a liberalist before we vote for his nomination. This is the stand we must positively take to keep Missouri in the wet column. This is an early start, and we want to keep busy if we expect the success in the future that we have had in the past.

The members of Local 420 have been successful in all their undertakings, and to succeed further a movement is on foot to bring the employers and employees closer together. Your assistance and influence in urging the proprietor to join his local organization of liquor dealers is needed. The liquor dealers and the bartenders must work hand in hand if they expect to continue to do business. We have the hardest fight before us this time that has ever been staged, and we will be the luckiest mortals in this trial if we come off victorious, for the drys are not going to stop at anything to be successful in this fight, and it will take some long, tall hustling to keep the bill from going through the legislature for State-wide prohibition.

When Colorado and Arkansas go dry on January 1, 1916, I wish to say to the many members who will come this way, that they will find Kansas City overrun with bartenders to such an extent that there is not a bar here that does not get a visit every day from at least three to ten bartenders.

Local 420 wishes to announce that the fight won in Minnesota and Hennepin counties was very pleasing, and much credit for the success is due to one of our members, Jas. H. Anderson, who rendered valuable assistance.

Wishing all officers of the International, its locals and members a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, I remain

Fraternally yours,
MICHAEL P. FINAN
Rec. and Press Sec. pro tem., Local 420.

CLEVELAND, O.

DEAR BROTHER EDITOR—Our fight has been fought against great odds and, by hard work and conscientious efforts, we have won out.

We hope to make it easier for our craft in the "Sixth City." Our new mayor has risen from the ranks as a newsboy and, therefore, is in sympathy with everything that concerns the laboring man.

With the approach of winter weather there is a great influx of unemployed, and the ever polite and considerate Edw. Whissemore is doing his best to alleviate the distressful conditions by influencing new applicants against coming into the local at this time.

At the present writing there is not enough work to supply the demand of our home boys, and if the floaters insist on coming to this city they will not be greeted with any effusive demonstration; the contrary course, however, will be pursued.

All our craftsmen will take notice that the available work that comes through the office of our business agent will be turned over to the home members who have homes and families to support. We trust that this announcement will not excite any prejudice in the ranks, as Local 106, in the past, has always gone on record as maintaining a very liberal policy, never refusing any worthy applicants in our midst, regardless of existing conditions.

The general health of our members seems to be exceptionally good; in fact, a record has been made, having had but one member on the sick list for the space of three weeks.

Our president, Thomas Farrell, is in Frisco, attending the American Federation of Labor Convention, and we expect he will be the bearer of good news on his return.

We have made provisions to hold our annual dance in Moose Hall, and will entertain our patrons with an old-fashioned country fair. We expect to have a big attendance, and to make it a joyful success.

The much discussed labor temple plans are to come up for further debate, and expect that in the near future Cleveland will have an up-to-the-minute office building devoted to the interests of the labor movement.

Wishing all officers and members of the International the compliments of the season, I am

Fraternally yours,

ARTHUR S. LOEB,
Press Secretary Local 106.

JOPLIN, MO.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—During the past three months a great number of bartenders have come to Joplin seeking work who have been voted out of positions in different States that have been voted dry. We therefore feel it our duty to notify those out of employment that we have a great many members on the extra-list, and that it would be to their interest to try some other town for employment. Joplin and Local 827, at the present time, are in a prosperous condition, on account of prices in the metal market, but there are also plenty of bar boys for the amount of saloons we have here. We would gladly do good for all brothers carrying a card if it were possible, but, under existing conditions, we ask them to stay away for the present.

With greetings of the season,

Yours fraternally,
JOE A. DORIZZI,
Secretary Local 827.

DOVER, N. J.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—We take great pleasure in notifying the members of the International that Bro. Wm. F. Kavanagh came to our town on Tuesday, November 15, and put Local 404 in good spirits. He made an elegant address, telling our members how important organization is at the present time, and certainly impressed it on the memory of all. He had full charge of the meeting, initiating two new members and reinstating three others. We hope all our members will remember Brother Kavanagh's address, and if they do Local 404 will surely increase in membership.

With holiday greetings to all officers and brother members of our International, we remain,

Fraternally yours,

GEO. H. COOK, Pres.; F. BURR, Sec.;
A. HONNELL, Treas. Local 404.

BEN. F. PARKER

Local 35, Chicago, Ill.

Delegate to the Eighteenth General Convention San Francisco, Cal.; Seventeenth General Convention, Denver, Colo.; Sixteenth General Convention, Boston, Mass.; Fifteenth General Convention, Minneapolis, Minn.

AUGUSTA, GA.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Local 870 is trying to keep its members together. Some of them want to turn their books in and quit, but we have until May 1 to do this business, and I think we ought to hold our charter until the last minute.

Business seems to be increasing here, still we have a few members that haven't steady employment. If there are any locals that can place any members of Local 870 we will be glad to hear from them at an early date. At the extra session of the legislature the prohibitionists passed a measure allowing the bars to do business until May 1, 1916, but after that no person in the State of Georgia will be allowed to have in his charge over one-half gallon of liquor or forty-eight pints of beer or eight quarts of wine. This does not mean that you can have all of the above at one time; you are allowed one of them a month.

The union people in this city are talking about building a large labor temple. I hope that they will be successful, but it seems to me that it will be a dry temple. Most temples are inclined to be just a little moist, and sometimes very wet. With our dry State and the promise of a real Sufferingcat Society we will be a live bunch of dubs, will we not?

With best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to members of organized labor and the International, we are

Fraternally yours,

J. W. BROOKS,
Recording Secretary Local 870.

TACOMA, WASH.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—I do not wish the membership to become alarmed upon hearing from Local 61 again at so early a date and misconstrue the action. The fact of the matter is, it is not over-zealousness, but over-supply of editorial matter, although I did not have the heart to ask our editor for the necessary space in my last communication.

Bro. E. E. Brown, with a record of ten years' continual good standing in Local 61, and a record for work paralleling his good standing, decided he had earned a much needed rest and vacation, and with your kind indulgence I will give his paraphrase of a trip he had during June and July:

"I started out for a two months' cruise,
To get away from smoke and booze,
And leave the city's din and noise,
To get fresh air and the ocean's joys.

I had a ship with lots of room,
With the name Penelope across her boom;
She had three sails, and a kicker, too—
It was some ship, I'm telling you.

We left Tacoma the first of June,
One early morn, as the cannon boomed,
From the Yacht Club—that's our home—
And started o'er the sound to roam.

I found I had a mate and crew
Who only knew a thing or two;
They couldn't tack the blooming ship,
And also had a lot of "lip."
They were inclined to be quite "flip"—
So that's the way we started.

The first week out was pretty tough,
Although the weather wasn't rough;
To teach the crew was work enough
To keep the captain busy.

My crew were good boys, every one,
Both good natured and full of fun;
But as sailors, on the bum—
They needed lots of training.

Although the trip was lots of fun,
I had to teach them, one by one,
Things that sailor men should do:
Among others, reef and clue.

I taught them how to pull the hook
And keep things straight in the log book.
They learned to steer the blooming boat
And wash the decks without soap.

They learned to pull an even oar
While taking visitors ashore.
They learned to splice and tie some knots,
And even scrub the galley pots.

They learned to cook flapjacks and clams,
And wash our dishes, pots and pans;
And long before the trip was o'er,
They learned to keep the ship off shore.

They learned to sail in weather bad,
And even better yet, begad,
They learned, to make a trip all fun,
That work and pleasure must be one."

The cruise taken by Brother Brown and his two companions, Mr. Otto Perlt and Mr. Lee Ells, was rather a sensational one. Upon leaving Tacoma Brother Brown was assured that they would not be molested in any manner upon entering Canadian waters, provided they registered at the first port of entry. But, from Brother Brown's graphic description, it seems as though they suspected them of being the scout ship of some hostile squadron, and summarily ordered them back into Uncle Sam's domain. Admiral Brown thereupon turned the prow of his thirty-six foot auxiliary yawl due south and cruised through the San Juan straits and up Hoods canal, returning August 1, 1915.

Allow me to say, in conclusion, that Brother Brown was fortunate enough to have a position awaiting him on his return, but for the edification of any brother or sister who may figure on visiting Tacoma in the near future, let me kindly admonish them to have their pocket-books—good and healthy—as work is very scarce.

Wishing you health and prosperity and a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year,

Fraternally yours,

W. ROY HARRISON,
Financial Secretary Local 61.

CONNELLSVILLE, PA.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Local 71 is still doing business in the same old place, with our worthy Bro. Thomas Keenan as our president. Tom is certainly some worker for our local. He is always on the job.

At our last meeting the boys agreed to have a Dutch lunch, which has since been given, and we had lots of fun. Card games were played for prizes, and Bros. Tom Forkins and Martin Greglock carried off the high prizes. Happy Ike Francis was in his same mode with one of his favorite songs. Brothers Dougherty and Winekoop were in charge of the milk and cream department.

Brother Deanish is now at the St. James.

Local 71 extends its sympathy to Bro. Patrick Courtney and family, whose sister met with a very painful accident. We wish her a speedy return to health.

Sympathy is also extended to Bro. Ike Francis and family, whose mother was called by death on November 16 in Pittsburg.

Brothers, here are ten commandments to ponder over:

1. Be interested in your neighbor, but not curious.
2. Good-morning is easy to say and does not take a second.
3. Remember that common property, like lawns, alleys, fences and doorsteps, means common responsibility.
4. Borrow naught from him to whom you lend not.
5. Don't consider your neighbor's home a dropping-in place any old time without knocking.
6. Don't let the quarrels between your own and your neighbor's children destroy friendliness between the parents.
7. Respect your neighbor's line of clean clothes on rug shaking day.
8. Walls have ears. Speak low if you would have your affairs private.

9. Signify your willingness to help your neighbor in time of trouble, but don't intrude.

10. Put the soft pedal on your seven-year-old's practicing, especially if their is an invalid in the neighborhood.

Brother Guthrie is in harness again, this time handling steel beams. Stay with it, Duffy, that's how I got my start.

Wishing success and a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to all officers and members of the International, Yours fraternally,

TOM EVANS,
Press Secretary Local 71.

SEATTLE, WASH.

The eighth annual ball of Cooks' and Assistants' Local 33 is now history. This year's dance, held in Eagles' Hall, Thursday, October 28, was a repeater of the seven other successes of previous years. Many hundred people attended during the evening.

At the door "Bob" Hesketh, labor's councilman, and delegate from the Cooks' Union to the Central Labor Council, headed the committee welcoming the guests and pinned chrysanthemums, the souvenir flower of the evening, on all the ladies, and some of the gentlemen. Wm. W. Levi superintended the congested traffic as floor manager. The members of the Waitresses' Union assisted in keeping things moving. Alice M. Lord and Margaret Watson presided at the punch bowl.

Among the prominent labor men present was Councilman T. H. (Harry) Bolton, Hesketh's colleague in the city council.

The committees responsible for the affair, which proved a success in every respect, financial as well as social, were as follows:

Committee on Arrangements—Bob Hesketh, chairman; C. L. Gallant, Ed. L. Hollingsworth, Frank B. Guilkey, Robert H. Smith.

Reception Committee—Reuben Walnen, chairman; Agnes Adamack, Alice M. Lord, Ida L. Levi, Ed. T. Levi, John Shields, Roy Nelson, F. E. Hoffmeier, Wm. H. Fraser, Ed. Madigan, George Ford, P. H. Ballard, Jesse Briggs, Frank Purdy, George Rover, James McLaughlin, Walter McDougall.

Floor Committee—Wm. W. Levi, chairman; Eddie Boyd, Phil Dietz, Frank Flemming, Al. G. Moffet, Frank Miller, Fred W. Lilly, August Janisch, James A. Dupen, Joseph Porter, Gus Bogan, Henry Lindhe, Bert Griffin, Louis P. Clements, Gene White, Walter Record, L. J. Davies, Howard E. Jackson and Don Cameron.—Seattle Union Record.

BALTIMORE, MD.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—At a meeting held in Progress Hall, Sunday, November 14, 1915, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Irvin S. Pentz, president; Thomas J. Nolan, first vice-president; John McDonough, second vice-president; Edward Rayne, chaplain; Joseph Sless, inside guard; Charles Bell, outside guard; Bernard Stern, recording secretary; J. Russell Chenoweth, financial secretary-treasurer and business agent; Charles Bennett, assistant; Morris B. Baseman, assistant recording secretary; Herman Rahn, inspector; John McDonough, Michael Keely, Charles Bennett, John T. Flanagan, trustees; John T. Flanagan, chairman Advisory Board.

After the meeting an elaborate buffet luncheon was served by W. Hoffer. Speeches were made by Brothers Flanagan, Stern, Chenoweth, Baseman and Pentz on the good and welfare of the local. A very pathetic speech was made by retiring President Flanagan. In a few remarks he wished his successor great success in the good and welfare of Local 532. In answer to President Flanagan, president-elect Pentz thanked him for his information and tribute, which brought a round of great applause. Brother Sless also spoke on the subject of "New Officers"—another round of applause. Brother Chenoweth spoke on behalf of the financial end of Local 532. In a few remarks he stated that he hoped that the ensuing year would bring great prosperity. Watch us grow!

Delegate to Eighteenth General Convention, San Francisco, California.

Wishing all officers and members of the International a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year,

Fraternally yours,
BERNARD STERN,
Press Agent Local 532.

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Hoping this will find the boys doing well and prospering. We have our working contracts signed for the year 1916, and have also had to take two house cards out recently and have placed several new ones.

Brother Max Connel, formerly of Local 760, Monroe, La., is here with us and is acting as business agent temporarily. He is always found on the job and ready to visit the proprietors when things go wrong; however, he has made quite a few friends among the proprietors and has all the boys at work. We have a new cafe opening in our city for which he has a contract signed before the opening. The new place will work about fourteen men which will add strength to our local.

Brother Max takes this means to express his regrets for being separated from Local 760, of which he was an officer. I remain,

Fraternally yours,

BEN REESE,
Secretary-Treasurer, Local 755.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—Here are a few of the conditions confronting our locals in Southern California this winter.

In Los Angeles the unemployed list of all our locals is longer than at any time in their history.

Oregon and Washington will be dry on January 1, which will throw out of employment a large number of our members and, from advices received, a large percentage of this number are coming to Southern California. The fair in San Francisco is about over, and we will have more than our share of the extra workers from there to take care of.

Owing to the conditions outlined above, we advise all members of the International Union to stay away from Southern California, and from Los Angeles in particular, this winter.

With greetings of the season to all, I am

Fraternally yours,
C. R. OVERMEYER,
Sec. L. J. E. B., Los Angeles.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., Oct. 11, 1915.

BARTENDER'S UNION No. 152, 239 Second avenue,
South Minneapolis, Minn.:

Dear Sirs—Through you, on behalf of the Licensed Retail Liquor Dealers' Association of Minneapolis, we desire to return our thanks to the Minnesota Trades Union League for the protection of the unemployed and the promotion of Home Rule, and for your effective work in the recent county option campaign, which prevented the confiscation of our property without compensation, and involved the employment of several thousand men. Your speakers, literature and efficient organization formed one of the big factors against class legislation and in behalf of individual rights of American citizenship.

We trust that you will continue with us to keep the blight of prohibition from interfering with the prosperity of our city and State.

Yours truly,

LICENSED RETAIL LIQUOR DEALERS' ASSOCIATION OF MINNEAPOLIS.

(Signed) Jas. A. Thompson, President; W. A. Wilson, Secretary.

OMAHA, NEB.

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER—A few lines from Local 264, to let you know our local is still on the map.

At our last meeting we initiated seven new members and have a few new applications for next meeting, Sunday, December 5, when we will nominate new officers.

We are giving our third annual ball at De Lux Hall, December 17, 1915, and the hustling committee reports success.

We have a brother, Less Overbay, who met with an auto accident and had a broken leg, but he is, at last report, doing fine.

We now have only five members out of work, but as Iowa is going dry January 1, 1916, we would advise barkeeps not to come to Omaha at present. Business very quiet.

With best wishes,

Yours respectfully,

W. H. RUSSELL,
Recording Secretary.

MIAMI, ARIZ.

DEAR SISTERS AND BROTHERS—I am going to try to keep my vows, as I promised, that Local 680 would be heard from every month.

We are progressing nicely, and have every cafe and restaurant in Globe and Miami signed up, and some few boarding houses. We have a 90 per cent organization, but are not yet satisfied, and won't be until we have succeeded in signing up every boarding house in the district, as we have great faith in the officers representing Local 680.

No doubt every man, woman and child that is interested in organized labor are watching with interest the results of the strike in this State, where 5,000 miners are out for better conditions. Local 680 is going to help them win. Money will buy food and clothing, and that is what they need. The salvation of organized labor in Arizona hangs on the result of this strike.

A Merry Christmas and a Happy and Prosperous New Year to all brothers and sisters of our great International.

Fraternally yours,
SOPHIE WILLIAMS,
Press Secretary Local 680.

SOMETHING WRONG.

If you've lost your zest for Christmas,
Lost your love for all its cheer—
If you scoff at gifts and giving
As the Christmas time draws near—
If you frown at all the clatter
When Old Santa trims his tree
Tell me, please, what is the matter?
Something's wrong, it seems to me!

If the stocking by the hearthstone
Wakes no memory in your breast—
If the coming of Old Santa
After all have gone to rest
Does not rouse your heart to action—
Make it beat and throb and kick—
Answer for my satisfaction,
Are you sure you are not sick?

If you can't feel joy at Christmas,
Joy of life and joy of song—
If you can't rejoice in giving,
Whether it be right or wrong—
If the Yule-log's invitation
To your heart no cheer can give,
Let me ask how in creation
Is it worth your while to live?
